So the amendment offered by Mr. LUCAS, for himself and other Senators, was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948—AMENDMENTS

Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. CHAPMAN each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. WATKINS (for himself, Mr. WHERRY, Mr. TAFT, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, and Mr. KEM) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to House bill 6826, supra, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I understand that the House has adopted the conference report on the rent control bill, providing for an extension of 6 months, and then 6 months more, at option; and I desire to have the conference report brought before the Senate.

Therefore, Mr. President, I submit the conference report on Senate bill 3181, to extend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and for other purposes; and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3181) to extend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That this Act may be cited as the 'Housing and Rent Act of 1950'.

"SEC. 2. Section 4 (e) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out 'June 30, 1950', and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1951'.

"SEC. 3. Section 204 (a) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out 'June 30, 1950', and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1951'.

"SEC. 4. Section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(f) (1) The provisions of this title, except section 204 (a), shall cease to be in effect at the close of December 31, 1950, except that they shall cease to be in effect at the close of June 30, 1951—

"'(A) in any incorporated city, town, or village which, at a time when maximum rents under this title are in effect therein, and prior to December 31, 1950, declares by resolution of its governing body adopted for that purpose, or by popular referendum, in accordance with local law) that a shortage of rental housing accommodations exists which requires the continuance of rent control in such city, town, or village; and

"'(B) in any unincorported locality in a defense-rental area in which one or more incorporated cities, towns, or villages constituting the major portion of the defense-rental area have made the declaration specified in subparagraph (A) at a time when maximum rents under this title were in effect in such unincorporated locality.

"'(2) Any incorporated city, town, or village which makes the declaration specified in paragraph (1) (A) of this subsection shall notify the Housing Expediter in writing of such action promptly after it has been taken.

"'(3) Notwithstanding any provision of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the provisions of this title shall cease to be in effect upon the date of a proclamation by the President or upon the date specified in a concurrent resolution by the two Houses of the Congress, declaring that the further continuance of the authority granted by this title is not necessary because of the existence of an emergency, whichever date is the earlier.

"'(4) Notwithstanding any provision of paragraph (1) or (3) of this subsection, the provisions of this title and regulations, orders, and requirements thereunder shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper suit or action with respect to any right or liability incurred prior to the termination date specified in such paragraph.'

"SEC. 5. Section 204 (j) (3) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(3) The Housing Expediter shall terminate the provisions of this title in any incorporated city, town, village, or in the unincorporated area of any county upon receipt of a resolution of its governing body adopted for that purpose in accordance with applicable local law and based upon a finding by such governing body reached as the result of a public hearing held after ten days' notice, that there no longer exists such a shortage in rental housing accommodations as to require rent control in such city, town, village, or unincorporated area in such county: Provided, That where the major portion of a defense-rental area has been decontrolled pursuant to this paragraph (3), the Housing Expediter shall decontrol any unincorporated locality in the remainder of such area.'

"SEC. 6. Nothing in this Act or in the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, shall be construed to require any person to offer any housing accommodations for rent.

"SEC. 7. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the Act, and the applicability of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 8. This Act shall become effective on the first day of the first calendar month following the month in which it is enacted."

And the House agree to the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report is a privileged matter. Is there objection to the request for its present consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I am very glad that we are to continue rent control for 6 months, with an option for the localities to continue such controls for an additional 6 months.

I regret that the Senate conferees were not able to persuade the conferees on the part of the House to agree to the provision contained in the Senate version of the bill which exempted permanent tenants in hotels from rent control. Although I favored the inclusion of the provision regarding permanent quarters in apartments, last year, when this measure was before the Congress, I became convinced this year that there was no longer any need for such control. This was because of the fact that apparently there is a vacancy rate of 12½ percent in the permanent accommodations in Chicago hotels, and inasmuch as I do not believe in continuing rent control unless it is needed. I felt that rent controls should be abolished in this case, for permanent accommodations in Chicago hotels.

As I say, Mr. President, I regret very much that the conferees on the part of the House would not recede from their position.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to be perfectly frank about the matter of receding. In view of the fact that the conferees on the part of the House had been very generous and kind in receding in regard to the 7-months' and 5-months' provisions, I thought the conferees on the part of the Senate should recede regarding the provision relating to hotels in Chicago.

I regret the situation, but I wish the Senator from Illinois to understand distinctly that I myself voted to recede.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I make this statement in part because I understand that on the floor of the House this afternoon a Member of the House implied that I had proposed this amendment exempting permanent accommodations in Chicago hotels, with the intent of scuttling it later, in the conference.

I thank the Senator from South Carolina for making this situation clear.

I was called out of the city to deliver a commencement address in Chicago on Wednesday, and then later to make a speech on the Pacific coast, on Saturday. So it was not possible for me to be present. But through my administrative assistant, Mr. McCulloch, I made it clear to the Senate conferees that I hoped they would be able to obtain House consent for the decontrol of permanent accommodations in hotels.

I do not think I have ever proposed a measure in which I did not believe; and I hope the gentleman on the House side, who apparently made the implication, this afternoon, to which I have referred, will withdraw the statement he made, when he understands the situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I wonder whether the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, would object to having a yea-and-nay vote on the question of the adoption of the conference report. I suggest such a move because of my feeling that it is tremendously important to state again, for the benefit of the Senate and the Nation, that there are a number of Senators who have no intention at any future period in peacetime of permitting an extension of rent control beyond the expiration date which is outlined in the conference report.

Mr. MAYBANK. Does the Senator desire to have a yea-and-nay vote on the question of agreeing to the conference report, with a view, if it should be rejected, of sending the report back to a further conference?

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington would appreciate having a yea-and-nay vote on the question of agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MAYBANK. Does the Senator wish to have the vote taken now?

Mr. CAIN. When the Senator from South Carolina has concluded his observations, I shall be glad to have that done.

Mr. MAYBANK. If the Senator from Washington wishes to have a yea-and-nay vote taken immediately on that question, that will be all right with me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CAIN and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MAYBANK. Do I correctly understand that on this vote, a vote of "yea" will be a vote in favor of adoption of the conference report for the 6 months' period, and that a vote of "nay" will be a vote to send the conference report back to a further conference?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A vote "yea" will be a vote in favor of adoption of the conference report as submitted. A vote "nay" will be a vote to refuse to approve the conference report.

Mr. MAYBANK. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senators from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senators from Virginia [Mr. BYRD and Mr. ROBERTSON], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business, attending the sessions of the International Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland, as a delegate representing the United States.

On this vote the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Iowa would vote "yea," and the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay."

On this vote the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. If present and voting, the Senator from New Mexico would vote "yea," and the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay."

On this vote the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LEAHY] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]. If present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea," and the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay."

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WITHERS] would each vote "yea."

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] are detained on official business. If present, the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay."

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is detained on official business, is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE]. If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay" and the Senator from Iowa would vote "yea."

So the report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I intend to move a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow. I understand the Senator from Utah desires to speak at least about 30 minutes. I know of no other Members of the Senate who desire to speak. It may be that they do, but I plead with Senators to expedite the pending measure and get the bill into conference, so that the conferees can come back with some kind of selective service bill. It must be done before midnight Friday, and it has to be in the President's hands before that time, otherwise the Selective Service law will expire. We shall be in a peck of trouble, in the event it does. I plead with Senators on both sides of the aisle to come here tomorrow at 11 o'clock, and after a quorum is obtained, to get this bill on its way to the House of Representatives, and have the conferees appointed so that the conference report may be submitted and acted upon, and action completed on this important measure within the time specified.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I should like to say to the majority leader that it was the intention of the junior Senator from Minnesota to offer a series of amendments, but in view of the vote which has just taken place with reference to the elimination from the bill of the so-called Russell amendment, and in view of what I consider to be a creditable record on the part of the President, the Secretary of Defense, and the Secretaries of the Army, Air, and the Navy, on promoting a better pattern of human relationships and civil rights within the armed services, it is not the intention of the Senator from Minnesota to offer his amendments.

I agree with the majority leader that we ought to expedite this legislation, and I make my position clear at this time so we can arrive at some sort of understanding by which we can have the bill passed promptly. It would be a singular tragedy if we were to go over the deadline. I want the majority leader to know I extend my fullest cooperation.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. There was some question as to whether the Senator from Minnesota would offer certain amendments, which was one of the reasons why we could not obtain a unanimous-consent agreement. With that understanding, I am wondering whether we cannot now get a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at 2 o'clock tomorrow, say, upon the bill and upon any amendments offered thereto in the meantime. Would that be satisfactory to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WATKINS. I do not know about other Senators. I would suggest 3:30.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish we could agree to vote at 2 o'clock. I may say to the Senator, it is planned to convene tomorrow at 11.

Mr. WATKINS. I understood the previous unanimous-consent agreement was agreed to on the ground that there would be no further unanimous-consent agreement for tomorrow.

Mr. LUCAS. That was because of the situation in which we found ourselves with respect to amendments which might be offered by the Senator from Minnesota or by other Senators who contemplated offering amendments of the kind he proposed to offer. But I understand now, from his statement, that he does not propose to do that, and that he wants to expedite the passage of the bill. I should like very much to enter into that kind of agreement, if possible.

Mr. WATKINS. I had in mind some of the other Senators who might want to speak on some of the amendments, particularly the one I have proposed.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not see any Senator rising who wishes to speak very long.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] I would venture the guess that the Senate Committee on Armed Services would appreciate having 30 minutes within which to conclude its presentation or to answer any new arguments.

Mr. LUCAS. Plenty of time would be afforded if we start at 11 a. m. and vote at 2:30 p. m.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] is most gratifying, although it did grow out of the fact that a very fair amendment was defeated. While I want to expedite the passage of the bill in every way possible, I do not feel that I can agree now, without some understanding with a sufficient number of Senators, as to matters which might or might not be germane and relevant to the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, apparently, under the circumstances, we cannot reach a unanimous-consent agreement; and in accordance with the statement I made earlier, I move that the Senate proceed to consider executive business.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion for a moment?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. I was informed that the Senator from Illinois had stated that the Senate would recess today after the vote on the Lucas amendment to House bill 6826. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. LUCAS. That was not quite the understanding. I advised the Senate that we might hold a night session if we did not dispose of the Russell amendment and, possibly, the bill itself; but I did say later on that if we could dispose of the amendment, we would take a recess, which we are about to do.

Mr. DONNELL. I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that when the minority leader [Mr. WHERRY] left, after voting on the so-called Lucas amendment, he was under the impression that there would be nothing further taken up after action on that amendment. I did not interpose any objection to the action taken on the conference report on the rent-control bill, although, in looking back over it, I am not so sure but that I should have objected.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I want to make it perfectly clear that several Senators suggested to me that some Senators had gone and would not be here to vote; but the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] had a perfect right to have the conference report come up for a vote. It was not by unanimous consent; it was after a quorum was called. I did not suggest it to the Senator from Washington. It was a conference report, which is a privileged matter.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a brief statement?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I should like the RECORD to show very clearly, primarily in the interest of some of the Senators who have gone, that I understand the Senate would recess immediately after action on the Lucas amendment. The minority leader, on leaving, requested me to see to it, so far as it was possible for me to do so, that the Senate should not transact any business after action on the Lucas amendment. If any Senator has been precluded from expressing himself on the conference report, I should like the RECORD to show that it was due to the fact that I did not interpose objection, and it was not due to the fact that the Senator who did not have such opportunity was delinquent in his duty in regard to the matter.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I should like to inquire of the majority leader on what early date he will help me to obtain the right-of-way for consideration of the District rent-control extension bill?

Mr. LUCAS. I should say to the Senator that we might possibly be able to take it up tomorrow or next day, although I have told the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that we would take up the military assistance bill. I know how vital is the District of Columbia rent-control bill, and I am under the impression that we can take it up tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Missouri, I should like to make this statement: Some Senators came to me after the vote was taken on the amendment and I advised them that I did not think any more votes would be taken today on any measure. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON] and other Senators left. It is impossible to tell what may happen on the floor of the Senate, as every Senator knows who has been here very long. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] came to me and said, "I can put the rent-control conference report through in a very few minutes." He was in good faith when he made that statement. An argument ensued and a roll call was asked with reference to the report. I presume we should have recessed and taken it up tomorrow; but I do not think anyone has been hurt very much by what has happened.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I did not have the slightest idea of intimating that the Senator had been in any sense guilty of any bad faith in the matter. I am sure that neither he nor the Senator from South Carolina had any intention of putting any Senator in an embarrassing position by reason of the action which was taken. Notwithstanding that I had assured the minority leader that I would take action toward securing a recess immediately following the action on the Lucas amendment, I thought, in view of the nature and the history of the rent-control conference report, it was proper that I should not insist upon an immediate recess. But in view of the fact that so many Senators have gone and have possibly relied on the statement that the Senate would not act on any other matters, I am constrained to object to the transaction of any further business.

Mr. LUCAS. I join with the Senator in that statement. I shall object to any further business being transacted.

Mr. DONNELL. I think that is very wholesome.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, and withdrawing the nomination of Carl Rodman, of Massachusets, for appointment as a Foreign Service officer of class 6, a vice counsul of career, and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service of the United States, which nominating messages referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable report of a nomination was submitted:

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Willis W. Ritter, of Utah, to be United States district judge for the district of Utah.

Mr. DONNELL. I object to the transaction of any further business, on the ground that the general understanding in the Senate was that there was to be no further business transacted after the passage of the Lucas amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. We did not have that understanding with respect to the executive calendar. If there is any nomination on the executive calendar to which the Senator wants to object, that is a different proposition. It is always in order to consider the executive calendar, but if the Senator wants to object, we can pass it over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that there is one nomination on the calendar which pertains to the District of Columbia.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I have not seen a copy of the executive calendar. There is no desire on my part to object to the further transaction of business because of any particular personality.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised the first two nominations on the calendar have been passed over heretofore, and there is a request that they be again passed over. The only open nomination is the nomination of Kenneth W. Spencer, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Public Utilities Commission.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, was there an outright agreement that there should be no further business transacted after the Lucas amendment was voted upon?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination of Kenneth W. Spencer to be a member of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be passed over.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose divine sovereignty and authority we cannot doubt or disobey, we pray that daily we may faithfully and fearlessly seek to do what Thou dost command.

Show us how we may enrich and strengthen our national life and find the secret of its cohesive and conquering power.

Inspire and guide our Speaker and all the Members of this Congress in their deep concern for the honor and security of our democracy. May they perceive what is needful and devise what is right.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation from a committee:

JUNE 21, 1950.

The honorable the SPEAKER,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution (H. Res. 661), as follows:

Resolved, That BEN GUILL, of Texas, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on Agriculture.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BORROWING POWER OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the question on the adoption of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JAVITS) there were—ayes 22, noes 18.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 235, nays 81, answered "present" 1, not voting 113, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to vote against approving the conference report. I voted for the original bill to increase the purchasing power of CCC and I approve that part of the bill now. However, the new legislation written by the conferees and amending section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act is too drastic to be approved without full consideration by the appropriate committees of Congress. Actually the changes involve matters affecting the province of four committees: Agriculture, Ways and Means, Foreign Affairs, and Banking and Currency. It is not enough to allow such legislation to pass with only a small number of the last-named committee having any previous knowledge of it, and when some of them frankly say they are not sure what the new section 22 (f) means. I confess I cannot understand it. I believe this report should be sent back to the conferees and the section 22 amendments removed or brought up in separate legislation or at least spelled out so we can know what we are doing.

ARMY ORGANIZATION ACT OF 1950

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8198) to provide for the organization of the Army and the Department of the Army, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

[The conference report and statement are as follows]:

The reappointment, reassignment, or redetail of members of the Army, or of civil officers or employees, now holding any such offices, or now appointed, assigned, or detailed to any such positions, branches, corps, departments, services, components, or organizations shall not be required.

"(c) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as changing the numbers of officers authorized by law in each of the several commissioned officer grades in the Army; or as changing the laws applicable to the promotion and retirement of members of the Army; or as giving to any person any right to retirement, to pay, or to allowances not heretofore authorized by law.

"(d) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as changing existing laws pertaining to the Chief of the National Guard Bureau.

"(e) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as reducing or eliminating the professional qualifications required by existing laws or regulations of officers of the several different branches of the Army.

"(f) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as changing existing laws pertaining to the military or civil functions of the Chief of Engineers or the Corps of Engineers of the Army, or as changing the Act of June 25, 1948 (Public Law 777, Eightieth Congress), pertaining to rank, pay, and allowances of the Assistant Chief of Engineers in charge of civil works. The number of officers and enlisted men set forth in section 11 of the National Defense Act, as amended, shall be a minimum strength and not a limitation.

"(g) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as changing existing laws, orders, or regulations pertaining to the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad Company.

"SAVING PROVISION—EXISTING ORDERS AND REGULATIONS

"SEC. 405. Notwithstanding the repeal by this Act of any law vesting any power in or imposing any duty upon any officer, civil or military, of the Army Establishment, or in or upon any department, corps, branch, or organization of the Army; and notwithstanding the several provisions of this Act to the effect that the powers and duties of various officers, civil and military, of the Army Establishment, and of various branches and organizations of the Army, shall be such as the Secretary of the Army shall prescribe; and in order that there shall be no interruption in the performance of duties; and in order that the immediate issuance and promulgation of new orders and regulations shall not be required; it is hereby prescribed that every power vested in and every duty imposed upon any officer, civil or military, of the Army Establishment, or in or upon any department, corps, branch, or organization of the Army, by any law, regulation, or order, in force immediately prior to the effective date of this Act, shall continue to be exercised and performed by the same officer, department, corps, branch, or organization, or by his or its successor, until the Secretary of the Army shall otherwise direct in accordance with the authority conferred upon him by this Act.

"ARMY MINE PLANTER SERVICE

"SEC. 406. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as amending existing provisions of law concerning the Army Mine Planter Service, except that that service shall no longer be a part of the Coast Artillery; but it may hereafter be discontinued or assigned to or consolidated with such other branch of the Army, or such other service as the President may direct.

"SAVING PROVISION—POWERS OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

"SEC. 407. Nothing in this Act shall be construed as amending, repealing, limiting, enlarging, or in any way modifying any provision of the National Security Act of 1947, as amended.

"SEPARABILITY PROVISION

"SEC. 408. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the Act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8198) to provide for the organization of the Army and Department of the Army, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House passed the bill H. R. 8198 and the Senate amended the House bill by striking out all after the enacting clause. The managers on the part of the House have receded from the disagreement to the Senate amendment, with an amendment.

There were 58 points of difference between the original House bill and the Senate amendment. Most of these differences involved new subtitles, typographical corrections, errors of punctuation, a table of contents, and one incorrect citation. There were 10 substantive differences between the two bills as follows:

1. Subsection 201 (a) (3) of the original House bill provided a limitation on the number of Deputy Chiefs of Staff and Assistant Chiefs of Staff to be authorized within the Department of the Army. The Senate amendment placed no limitation upon the number of Deputy Chiefs of Staff and Assistant Chiefs of Staff. The Senate conferees agreed to the numerical limitations previously contained in the House bill and, as a result, the bill limits the Department of the Army to not to exceed three Deputy Chiefs of Staff and not to exceed five Assistant Chiefs of Staff. The Senate recedes.

2. In subsection 201 (c) of the original House bill there was a limitation on the number of officers who could be detailed or assigned to permanent duty in the Department of the Army. Included in this limitation was a further restriction that of this number not more than 1,000 could be detailed or assigned to duty with the Army General Staff. This provision was not applicable in time of war or national emergency hereafter declared. The Senate amendment permitted this limitation to be exceeded upon a finding by the Secretary of the Army, concurred in by the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives. The conferees retained the limitation provided in the original House bill but agreed upon a proviso which will permit the numerical limits to be exceeded upon a finding by the President that such an increase is necessary in the national interest. The proviso further requires that the Secretary of the Army report quarterly to the Congress the number of officers on duty in the Department of the Army, as well as the number of officers serving on or with the Army General Staff, along with the justifications therefor.

3. Subsection 201 (d) of the House bill and the Senate amendment placed a limit of 4 years on the length of the tour of duty of a commissioned officer in the Department of the Army, but the House bill provided that such a tour of duty could be extended upon a special finding by the Secretary of the Army that the extension was necessary in the public interest. To permit an orderly transfer of personnel, the House bill provided that tours of duty performed prior to the enactment of the bill would not be included in computing the 4-year limitation. The Senate amendment struck out that portion of the House subsection which excluded the period of time served prior to the enactment of the bill in computing the limitations on the tours of duty. The conferees agreed to the Senate amendment of the subsection which requires that time served in a tour of duty in the Department of the Army be included in the 4-year limitation, but to permit an orderly transfer the conferees agreed that the subsection would not take effect until 1 year after the enactment of the bill.

4. Subsection 204 (b) of the House bill contained a provision that the Chief of Staff was to be directly responsible to the Secretary of the Army for the efficiency of the Army, the state of preparation for military operations and the plans therefor. The Senate amendment modified this subsection by providing that the Chief of Staff would have this responsibility subject to the provisions of section 101 of the act and of subsection (c) of section 204 of the act. Section 101 fixes upon the Secretary of the Army full responsibility for all of the affairs of the Army Establishment. Thus the Senate amendment clarified the intent of the proposed act that the responsibility for Army affairs is not shared jointly by the Secretary and the Chief of Staff, but that the responsibility is in the Secretary of the Army and that the Chief of Staff's responsibility is to the Secretary. The House recedes.

5. Subsection 207 (a) of the House bill provided that the Inspector General and the Provost Marshal General would be detailed to those positions for periods not to exceed 4 years. The Senate amendment added to this section a qualification that such tours of duty may be extended beyond 4 years upon a special finding by the Secretary of the Army that the extension is necessary in the public interest. Subsection 201 (d) of the act provides that any commissioned officer may have his tour of duty extended beyond 4 years upon a special finding by the Secretary of the Army. The House recedes.

6. Section 306 (a) of the House bill established 12 basic branches within the Army but provided that the Secretary of the Army could establish new basic branches or discontinue or consolidate the basic branches enumerated in the subsection for the duration of any war or national emergency hereafter declared by the Congress. The Senate amendment permitted the Secretary of the Army to establish new basic branches and to discontinue or consolidate branches now in existence, both in times of peace or war. In lieu of the House or Senate versions of the subsection, the conferees agreed to the original language in the House bill that there should be 12 basic branches, but further provided that the Secretary of the Army may establish other basic branches as he deems necessary. However, only in time of war or national emergency hereafter declared may the Secretary of the Army discontinue or consolidate the basic branches enumerated in the subsection. It should also be noted that the Senate amendment would have changed the name of the "Corps of Engineers" to the "Engineer Corps". The House bill retained the historical name of the Corps of Engineers and the conferees agreed to retain the name "Corps of Engineers".

7. Subsection 401 (c) of the Senate bill repeals section 11 of the National Defense Act of 1916, which is the prewar law prescribing the composition and strength of the Corps of Engineers. The House bill did not repeal this section of the National Defense Act of 1916. The conferees agreed to strike out from the Senate amendment the subsection which repealed that portion of the National Defense Act which prescribes the composition and strength of the Corps of Engineers, thus preserving the minimum statutory strength of the Corps of Engineers. The Senate recedes.

8. Subsection 401 (s) of the Senate amendment repealed the act of December 1, 1941, which prescribes the military duties of the Chief of Engineers. The House bill did not repeal the afore-mentioned act. The Senate recedes.

9. Subsection 404 (f) of the House bill provided that nothing in the act should be construed as changing existing laws pertaining to the "military or civil functions" of the Chief of Engineers or the Corps of Engineers. Likewise, the last sentence of subsection 404 (f) of the House bill provided that "the number of officers and enlisted men set forth in section 11 of the National Defense Act, as amended, shall be a minimum strength and not a limitation." The Senate amendment did not contain the words "military or", nor the reference to the minimum strength. In view of the fact that the conferees agreed not to repeal section 11 of the National Defense Act, and in view of the dual functions of the Corps of Engineers, the conferees agreed to the original House bill which provides that nothing in the act shall be construed as changing the existing law pertaining to military or civil functions of the Corps of Engineers or the Chief of Engineers, and likewise prescribes that the statutory strength of the Corps of Engineers shall be considered a minimum strength and not a limitation. The Senate recedes.

10. The original House bill did not include a saving provision as to the Panama Canal and the Panama Railroad Company. The Senate amendment contained a subsection which provided that nothing in the act should be construed as changing existing laws, orders, or regulations, pertaining to the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad Company. Since it was not the intent of the act to change any laws, orders, or regulations, pertaining to the Panama Canal or the Panama Railroad Company, the House accepted this portion of the Senate amendment. The House recedes.

The report agreed to by the conferees contains substantially the language of the original House bill with the exception of the modifications heretofore mentioned. The act will provide the flexibility deemed necessary for the better administration of the Army Establishment.

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2285)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3181) to extend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "That this Act may be cited as the 'Housing and Rent Act of 1950.'

"SEC. 2. Section 4 (e) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out 'June 30, 1950' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1951'.

"SEC. 3. Section 204 (a) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out 'June 30, 1950' and inserting in lieu thereof 'June 30, 1951'.

"SEC. 4. Section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(f) (1) The provisions of this title, except section 204 (a), shall cease to be in effect at the close of December 31, 1950, except that they shall cease to be in effect at the close of June 30, 1951—

"'(A) in any incorporated city, town, or village which, at a time when maximum rents under this title are in effect therein, and prior to December 31, 1950, declares (by resolution of its governing body adopted for that purpose, or by popular referendum, in accordance with local law) that a shortage of rental housing accommodations exists which requires the continuance of rent control in such city, town, or village; and

"'(B) in any unincorporated locality in a defense-rental area in which one or more incorporated cities, towns, or villages constituting the major portion of the defense-rental area have made the declaration specified in subparagraph (A) at a time when maximum rents under this title were in effect in such unincorporated locality.

"'(2) Any incorporated city, town, or village which makes the declaration specified in paragraph (1) (A) of this subsection shall notify the Housing Expediter in writing of such action promptly after it has been taken.

"'(3) Notwithstanding any provision of paragraph (1) of this subsection, the provisions of this title shall cease to be in effect upon the date of a proclamation by the President or upon the date specified in a concurrent resolution by the two Houses of the Congress, declaring that the further continuance of the authority granted by this title is not necessary because of the existence of an emergency, whichever date is the earlier.

"'(4) Notwithstanding any provision of paragraph (1) or (3) of this subsection, the provisions of this title and regulations, orders, and requirements thereunder shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper suit or action with respect to any right or liability incurred prior to the termination date specified in such paragraph.'

"SEC. 5. Section 204 (j) (3) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(3) The Housing Expediter shall terminate the provisions of this title in any incorporated city, town, village, or in the unincorporated area of any county upon receipt of a resolution of its governing body adopted for that purpose in accordance with applicable local law and based upon a finding by such governing body reached as the result of a public hearing held after ten days' notice, that there no longer exists such a shortage in rental housing accommodations as to require rent control in such city, town, village, or unincorporated area in such county: Provided, That where the major portion of a defense-rental area has been decontrolled pursuant to this paragraph (3), the Housing Expediter shall decontrol any unincorporated locality in the remainder of such area.'

"SEC. 6. Nothing in this Act or in the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, shall be construed to require any person to offer any housing accommodations for rent.

"SEC. 7. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the Act, and the applicability of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3181) to extend the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute amendment. The conferees have agreed to a substitute for both the Senate bill and the House amendment. Except for clerical changes, the following statement explains the differences between the House amendment and the substitute agreed to in conference.

The Senate bill contained a provision extending rent control under the Housing and Rent Act of 1947 through December 31, 1950, and authorizing further extension through June 30, 1951, under local option. The House amendment provided for an extension through January 31, 1951, and contained a similar local-option provision. The substitute agreed to in conference follows the language of the Senate bill.

BRENT SPENCE,
PAUL BROWN,
WRIGHT PATMAN,
BROOKS HAYS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a conference report on the rent-control bill.

I would like to call to the attention of the House the fact that we have just agreed to a conference report providing the means by which the support price for farm products may be maintained. That conference report has received the almost unanimous support of Members from the cities. Members from the cities have taken a larger view of the subject and have voted for an agricultural bill. Now the city people are in need of some protection, and they ask you, Who are the beneficiaries of that conference report which they have just supported, to heed their Macedonian cry for help and to give them some assistance?

This has been a remarkable conference. We have brought back to the House a bill that is substantially the same bill that was reported by the committee. In the House we increased the first period of rent control from December 31 to January 31. I thought that was a good amendment, because 42 legislatures meet next January, and I thought they might handle the matter satisfactorily to the States. But the conferees were of other opinion. The Senators said the Senate would not agree to the conference report with that provision in it, at least without great delay, and we receded.

So we bring the bill back to you as it was reported by the committee, with one minor amendment, which gives the counties the right to decontrol unincorporated areas within their boundaries.

There was no material difference between the Senate bill and the House bill that came to conference save in one instance. The minority conferees, however, did not sign the report. The report is signed by all the Senate conferees. The reason the minority members of the conference committee did not sign the report is because the conferees did not agree to the Douglas amendment, which was never considered by the House, and which the Senate conferees readily receded from. That was a remarkable condition that prevailed. This bill was brought to the House under an open rule. Any germane amendment was in order. No amendment of that character was offered, and none was considered. Because the managers on the part of the House did not agree to the Senate amendment, from which the Senate readily receded, the conferees broke up, as far as the minority and majority on the part of the House is concerned, in disagreement.

What does the Douglas amendment do? I think it is unnecessary to consider it because it was never in issue, but the Douglas amendment provided that where there was an appreciable number of people in an establishment ordinarily called a hotel who received the ordinary services of the hotel, such as bellboy service, desk service, laundry service, the furnishing of linen, maid service, and so forth, that the hotel would be decontrolled as a unit. In many hotels there are permanent residents who have remained there for years, but because an appreciable number receive these services the hotel would be decontrolled. What is "an appreciable number"? Webster's Dictionary defines "appreciable" as "large or material enough to be recognized; perceptible." Any number, it seems to me, would be an appreciable number, and any institution could qualify itself for decontrol by furnishing these few services to one or more persons. Those words are weasel words that just suck the meaning out of the amendment and the amendment may be construed as making every institution eligible for decontrol.

Is it not an unreasonable position for any of the conferees on the part of the House to oppose the House bill passed under an open rule subject to all germane amendments, because the conferees did not accept a Senate amendment that the Senate itself did not seem to want? There is no doubt that in many sections of this country we still need rent control.

This is a bill that takes back to the people themselves the right to say whether control shall be continued. Every council elected by the people of the cities can decontrol rents at any time after this bill is enacted into law, and if they desire to continue the controls after the 31st of December they must take affirmative action. Why should we cloak this bill with restrictive amendments when we are sending the whole matter back to the people to decide for themselves? It may be that rent control is on the way out; it probably is. But certainly there would not be such an insistent demand for this bill from certain sections of the country unless there were a real need for it. We know how active the members from city districts have been for this measure; we know that it not only means much to their citizens but also that it means much to their future political welfare. They are acting on the demand, the crystallized sentiment of their people, and they have asked you to give them the protection that may come from the authority of the city government or the citizens themselves to decide whether or not they need the extension of rent control. It certainly is a logical and reasonable thing to do. I feel confident that the membership will agree to this conference report, for with one exception it is practically the bill which passed the House—agree to the conference report and give the people the right they have asked, to decide this issue themselves, a question which is essentially local and about which they know more than the Congress could possibly know.

Mr. Speaker, if this conference report is not adopted the protection that they have asked for will probably go out of the window. The Members who want this most have recently shown that they view legislation from a national standpoint because if you will look at the RECORD tomorrow morning and observe the vote on the Commodity Credit Corporation conference report you will find that most of the Members from the city voted for it. They come now and ask you to help them in order that their people may be treated fairly, in order that there may be an orderly discontinuance of rent control, in order that the impact of decontrolling rents abruptly at this time may not be felt and in order that the unhappiness and inconvenience that would result may be obviated.

Housing is essential to our people. It is not only essential for their comfort and their welfare but it is essential for our domestic tranquillity. I hope this bill will be administered in such a way that it will be fair to both the property owner and the tenant. They have mutual rights and mutual obligations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PRIEST). The time of the gentleman from Kentucky was expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has stated, the conference report brings back a bill which is substantially the bill as passed by the House, the one major exception being that the House had adopted an amendment continuing rent control until January 31, 1951, unless by resolution of the governing body in any incorporated city, town, and municipality, it was decontrolled before then. When the Committee on Banking and Currency reported the bill to the House it provided that rent controls would expire on December 31, 1950 in localities outside of these incorporated areas and in the incorporated areas which had not taken action to continue controls. The conferees on the part of the House yielded to the Senate in that particular so that as the bill comes back to us now rent controls terminate in all unincorporated areas and in the incorporated areas which do not take affirmative action to continue them on December 30, 1950. In the incorporated areas in which this affirmative action is taken, then rent controls shall continue to not beyond June 30, 1951.

That is the substantial difference. But I think that, in justice to many Members who have consulted with me and other members of the committee in respect to an amendment which the Senate had already adopted, I should comment upon the fact that the Senate receded from the action which it had taken in respect to the so-called Chicago amendment, and I presume that there was nothing else for the House to do, inasmuch as the so-called Chicago amendment was not in the House bill, but to accept the position which the Senate conferees took in respect to their own amendment.

I am placed in the very embarrassing, if not humiliating, position of having told at least six Members of the House that there was no question but that the Senate amendment decontrolling the residential and apartment hotels in the city of Chicago would stay in the bill. I had reason to believe that the sponsor of that amendment in the Senate would be a member of the conference. He has been a member of many conferences on housing and rent control ever since he has been in Congress. I felt—and nothing to the contrary has convinced me otherwise—that he used good faith in presenting the amendment in the Senate to decontrol the Chicago residential and apartment hotels, but, frankly, I never saw conferees on the part of the Senate yield so quickly on anything in my life, and without consultation with the Member who offered the amendment in the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate and who was responsible for its enactment on the floor of the Senate. So I want to apologize to those Members whom I advised against offering a similar amendment in the House for my lack of understanding of what the tactics might be in respect to this particular amendment. I still do not understand it. A good many of us have been in conference with the Senate on a good many occasions, and a good many of us have sat around the conference room for hours while the Senate conferees were trying to contact the sponsor of amendments which were in controversy in the conference committee. Not so in this case. The sponsor of this amendment was not a member of the conference committee. He was temporarily absent from the city. He returned to the city the night of the conference and could have been consulted in respect to his wishes.

I am a little chagrined because of the rapidity with which the Senate yielded on its own language. There was every reason to believe that the Senate language decontrolling the Chicago residential and apartment hotels would stay in, because the same Member of the other body who offered the amendment this year decontrolling the residential and apartment hotels in Chicago offered the amendment successfully last year which kept them under control. He did it because, as he argued, there are something over 12½ percent of vacancies in the Chicago residential and apartment hotels at the present time, and undoubtedly there was not any goodly number of vacancies a year ago when he offered the amendment to keep them under control.

You will recall that the language of the 1949 Housing and Rent Control Act provided that apartment and residential hotels as distinguished from transient hotels would not be decontrolled in cities having a population of more than 2,500,000 inhabitants which, of course, confined the operation of the act to the cities of New York and Chicago. New York has enacted its own rent-control law and will come out from under Federal control, so it left Chicago the only city in interest.

I think if the arguments which have been made for the continuance of rent control were applied to this situation it would justify anyone's taking the position that this particular class of controlled property should come out from under control. When Tighe Woods was before the House Committee on Banking and Currency he said that controls could safely come off when there were 5 percent of vacancies, which of course we realized meant depression vacancies, because in the depression there were only about 5 percent vacancies. We are confronted with this fact, not a theory but a fact, that vacancies in these properties in Chicago are about 12½ percent. So if there is any logic to decontrolling on the advice of the Expediter when properties generally have a vacancy of 5 percent, then of course the same logic would apply to the decontrol of the apartment and residential hotels in Chicago which have a vacancy of 12½ percent.

I have no brief to hold for Chicago or the apartment hotels in Chicago or anywhere else, but I merely take this time to make a matter of record the fact that hereafter, forewarned by the strategy which was followed in this particular, we will arm ourselves against a recurrence of it.

Otherwise, the bill is no better and no worse than it was when it left the House. I think I may reiterate what I have said, that this bill is going to create uncertainty, and in the attempts to administer it we are likely to get the same results we got in 1946 in attempting to administer a bill equally as bad as this, that one being in respect to price control.

As far as I am personally concerned, I do not want any responsibility for the uncertainty and perhaps chaos which will result from the enactment of this bill, budgetary as well as in any other respect; and I want it very distinctly understood that most of us who voted against this bill on the occasion of its final passage in the House did so because we were fearful of the consequences of the stability of the American economy. As far as I am concerned, I still feel the same way about it.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped the conference report would retain the so-called Judd amendment extending the time of Federal control until February 1 of next year. Under ordinary circumstances I would have fought vigorously for the retention of the House action in the conference. I think it is appropriate, however, to point out that unusual conditions confront us. These controls expire on June 30 and the necessity for acting promptly is apparent. Therefore, I reluctantly signed the conference report, although it is contrary to my views with reference to the January date.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. I regret that the House conferees did not insist on the bill as it passed the House because I believe events will prove it would have been much better for both the country and the Congress, inasmuch as rent control was certainly going to be extended for 6 months, and then transferred to local control, to have had the transfer 1 month later, on January 31, in order to make the transition as orderly and smooth as possible.

As the chairman of your committee just said, rent control has now become essentially a local problem. I believe it was the responsibility of the national Congress to transfer the problem from the Federal level to the State and local level under the most favorable circumstances possible from the standpoint of all involved, which was what my amendment sought to do. However, I recognize fully the practical problem to which the gentleman has referred, and that to insist, when the Senate conferees refused to yield, on sending it back to the other body for a vote on my amendment as passed by the House might get the bill into interminable difficulties. You had a deadline to meet and while I regret the action I think there is nothing else that can be done now except to accept the conference report.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. I am so glad the gentleman from Minnesota agrees on that point. It is the only point I wanted to make. I agree thoroughly with him. It therefore appears the only wise course for us is to approve the conference report.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PRIEST). The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLER of Nebraska) there were—ayes 72, noes 50.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-two Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 176, nays 145, answered "present" 2, not voting 107, as follows:

PERSONAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Speaker, on roll call 178 I had a pair with the gentleman from California, Mr. MILLER. I voted "no." Had he been present, he would have voted "aye." Therefore, I withdraw my vote and answer "present."

REORGANIZATION PLANS NO. 24 AND NO. 27

Mr. RIEHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments may have until midnight Saturday, the 24th of June, to file minority views on Reorganization Plan No. 24 and Reorganization Plan No. 27.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT STORAGE OF DRIED EGGS

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Government had in storage on April 30, 1950, 88,444,915 pounds of dried eggs; $919,345.07 is shown as a loss incurred on this item between July 1, 1949, and April 30, 1950. I have not been able yet to obtain any report from the Department of Agriculture as to how much of that loss is due to spoilage or destruction. But it is significant that the Department reports 68,839,013 pounds were purchased in 1949 and it has cost the taxpayers $1,970,458.13 to keep them in storage. It is even more significant that 28,446,183 pounds were purchased back in 1948 and the taxpayers' money has been wasted for storing them in the amount of $1,083,286.37.

Considered from the point of view of the use of this money in paying transportation charges to make this food available to people who could and would eat it, the obstinate refusal to do this is tragic. That amount of money would have paid for the transportation from Atchison, Kans., to New York of 174,493,902 pounds of dried eggs or almost double the amount hoarded by the Federal Government on April 30.

It is difficult to obtain, and even more difficult to analyze, the factual information as to this program. But I am confident that in the end the truth will become public and the American people will demand action. In the meantime, those who are opposing any action must be ready to accept full responsibility for the results. It is particularly difficult to understand the reason for opposition from those who profess to be interested in a sound agricultural program.

CONDUCT OF FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct your attention to the remarks of Hon. STEPHEN YOUNG, of Ohio, under date of June 6, 1950; of Hon. ANTHONY TAURIELLO, of New York, under date of May 3, 1950; and of Hon. HUGH ADDONIZIO, of New Jersey, under date of June 15, 1950, with reference to the Federal Communications Commission in its present attempt to not renew the licenses of radio stations WJR, of Detroit; WGAR, of Cleveland; and KMPC, of Los Angeles. Each of these gentlemen stressed the conduct of the Federal Communications Commission in these present proceedings, with particular reference to the fact that it used—as its star witness—a man by the name of Clete Roberts who, while under oath, took a scurrilous and defamatory position against all Italians of the southern part of Italy.

As these gentlemen have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, there are some very serious questions involved in the present conduct of the Federal Communications Commission in this case. Insofar as its star witness, Roberts, is concerned, we of southern Italian ancestry are very much alarmed over the fact that this defamer of Italian people can well cause a continuation of increasing reaction against the Federal Communications Commission for having supported in the past, and continuing to support as of now, the credibility of such a discredited witness.

Mr. Speaker, when the Federal Communications Commission issued its so-called Blue Book indicating its intent to control all that goes out over the air, Broadcasting Magazine wrote as follows:

> The meddling of Government in the instruments which enlighten public opinion is contrary to the precepts of the Constitution and rebuts the fundamental thinking of our leaders from George Washington down to Harry Truman. There is more at stake than the ultimate pattern of American broadcasting—there is at stake the pattern of American life, and you can find that truth in the charred ruins of a chancellery in Berlin.

When an agency of our Government, Mr. Speaker, proceeds to use a witness who so ill-advisedly and stupidly attacks in such a scurrilous manner the Italian people, I believe that the Federal Communications Commission—and its discredited witness, Clete Roberts—should hurriedly make the apology that is long overdue before an outraged public opinion begins its attack on a national basis.

Mr. Speaker, as an American of Italian ancestry and having great pride in my forbears and supporting the remarks of my colleagues in every way, I say now that the conduct of the Federal Communications Commission in this particular case must be investigated at the quickest possible moment.

RENT-CONTROL BILL

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, was there not an error made in the announcement of the vote on the adoption of the conference report on the rent-control bill?

The SPEAKER. One Member withdrew his vote and answered "present." As the vote now stands, it is 174 yeas and 145 nays, and two answering "present."

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the rent-control bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I received permission to extend my remarks and include a speech by Col. Melvin J. Maas to the Marine Corps Officers Association. I am informed by the Public Printer it will exceed the amount allowed by two and two-thirds pages, slightly in excess of the usual cost. I ask unanimous consent to include the resolution, notwithstanding.

The SPEAKER. Notwithstanding, and without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

PROSPECTING, DEVELOPMENT, MINING, AND REMOVAL OF MINERAL RESOURCES WITHIN SUPERIOR NATIONAL FOREST, MINN.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill H. R. 4895, an act to permit the prospecting, development, mining, removal, and utilization of the mineral resources within the Superior National Forest, Minn., and for other purposes, together with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 1, lines 7 and 8, strike out "Superior National Forest," and insert "national forests in."

Page 2, line 10, strike out all after "Agriculture" down to and including "purposes" in line 14.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to permit the prospecting, development, mining, removal, and utilization of the mineral resources within the national forests in Minnesota, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MARSHALL]?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Minnesota give a brief explanation of the Senate amendments?

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the House approximately a year ago. The Senate has made some changes in the bill, which it seems to me improve the bill to some extent.

This bill is to permit the prospecting and development of mineral resources removable from the Superior National Forest, Minn. The Senate amended it to include all national forests in Minnesota, which was a good amendment, in that it does create less confusion within the State when all of the forest lands are put in one category, so to speak.

It also strikes from the bill some language which is duplicated in connection with the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, making his responsibility more clearly defined.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MARSHALL]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I am so sure that you will instantly recognize the meritorious, sound, and just objectives of this bill that I do not consider it essential that I have any attitude of trying to argue with you in support thereof but merely to call its objectives thoroughly and briefly to your attention. I desire to say and ask that you take immediate notice that yesterday I filed H. R. 8875 and this bill was immediately referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs. Its objective is to provide for payments to certain disabled veterans commonly described as paraplegics who sold or will shortly sell, in the area adjacent and close by the former Van Nuys Veterans' Hospital, or Birmingham Hospital, whichever you know it as, their homes in order to move and receive care and treatment which is so necessary to the protection of their lives at the Long Beach Veterans' Hospital, which is located in the Eighteenth Congressional District of California, which I represent.

I herewith read you the text of the bill:

H. R. 8875

A bill to provide for payments to certain disabled veterans who sold their homes in order to move from Van Nuys, Calif., to Long Beach, Calif., for the purpose of receiving care and treatment at the Veterans' Administration hospital at Long Beach, Calif.

Be it enacted, etc., That where any person (hereinafter referred to as "veteran") who served in the active military or naval service of the United States and who is entitled to compensation under the provisions of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended, for permanent and total service-connected disability due to the loss, or loss of use, by reason of amputation, ankylosis, progressive muscular dystrophies, or paralysis, of both lower extremities, such as to preclude locomotion without the aid of braces, crutches, canes, or a wheel chair—

(2) owned a housing unit in the vicinity of such hospital; and

(3) sold or shall sell such housing unit after April 30, 1950, and before July 1, 1951, in order to move to the vicinity of the Veterans' Administration hospital at Long Beach, Calif., for the purpose of receiving care or treatment at such Long Beach Hospital, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, pay such veteran a sum equal to the amount, if any, by which the cost of such housing unit exceeded the amount for which such housing unit was sold by such veteran; except that where the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs finds that a veteran sold or shall sell any such housing unit for an amount substantially less than the fair market value of such housing unit, the sum paid under this act shall be equal to the difference between the cost of such housing unit and the fair market value of such housing unit at the time of such sale. Application for payment under this act shall be made on or before August 31, 1951.

SEC. 2. Nothing in this act shall be deemed to create any liability in the Government of the United States with respect to any housing unit serving as the basis of a payment to a veteran under this act.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this act—

(1) The term "housing unit" includes special fixtures and facilities, if any, and necessary land; and

(2) The term "cost of such housing unit" means the cost of such housing unit to the veteran, including as part of such cost any assistance which such veteran may have received with respect to such housing unit under part IX of Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended.

Recently before returning to my duties in this Congress after attending the primary election vote in California on June 6, I twice visited this great Long Beach Veterans Hospital and found that the transfer of these paraplegics and other patients from the Van Nuys, or Birmingham Hospital, about 50 miles away, had been accomplished with dispatch, promptly and with an exceedingly high degree of care to the best interests of these paraplegic veterans and also to all the other patients. It appeared to me clear that the greatest concern and worry with those whom I conferred was a few dozen of them had acquired homes nearby the Van Nuys Hospital with Government aid and that they anticipated they would have to take a serious financial loss on the sale of these specially equipped homes in the event they sold them on the market in order to move their investment and their families residing in these homes to be adjacent to the Long Beach Veterans Hospital.

Paraplegic, by the way, is such a distinguished veteran as has a permanent and total service-connected disability due to loss, or loss of the use, by reason of amputation, ankylosis, progressive muscular dystrophies, or paralysis, of both lower extremities, such as to preclude locomotion without the aid of braces, crutches, canes, or a wheel chair.

I talked with one of these veterans who invested $10,000 in such a home close by the veterans' hospital in which his wife and two children now reside while he is necessarily hospitalized at the Long Beach Veterans Hospital. His natural and normal heart's desire was concern that his wife and children should be close by him so that on occasions he could have the joy of residing with them in such home and nevertheless be able immediately and frequently reach the Long Beach Veterans Hospital in which he could receive the essential and necessary hospitalization to protect and preserve his life and health as long as possible.

Upon inquiry the Veterans' Administration here at Washington informed me that there are approximately 100 paraplegics in the Los Angeles County area—where both Van Nuys and Long Beach are located—and that they believed only a few less than half were closer to the Long Beach Veterans' Hospital than they were to the Van Nuys Veterans' Hospital which has discontinued paraplegic care and which site has been announced by the Veterans' Administration as the one upon which a great new and necessary neuropsychosis veterans' hospital is to be promptly constructed. Therefore they decided the essential move was to transfer these paraplegics to the Long Beach Veterans Hospital which was the closest by and the closest to where they could have the specialized care so essential to them. The Veterans' Administration also informed me several days ago that the first week of June there had been installed at the Sawtelle Veterans' Hospital, closed to Van Nuys by 15 to 25 miles, than the Long Beach Hospital, an outpatient clinic to which the paraplegics needing only out-patient treatment can promptly, instead of making the round trip of approximately 90 miles from Van Nuys to Long Beach, have out-patient treatments. Therefore, it is only the highly specialized and more permanent treatment which is essential which they must receive at the Long Beach Veterans' Hospital. This is the comparatively small group who would stand to suffer real financial loss and deprivation of economic security if they are compelled to give up their substantial investment in specially constructed and equipped homes in order to have their funds to use at and in connection with such special home facilities and construction at or near Long Beach, Calif.

I am informed by the Veterans' Administration that the number of those who might reasonably be expected to sell their homes at Van Nuys would range from as few as 10 to 15 up to as high as 50 or 60. There is no presently accurate data or way of determining how many may or may not desire to sell.

The bill I have proposed provides that if any do sell after April 30, 1950, and before June 1, 1951, in order to move to the vicinity of the Long Beach Veterans Hospital for the purpose of receiving care or treatment and that then the Administrator of Veterans Affairs shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, pay such veteran a sum equal to the amount, if any, by which the cost of such home exceeded the amount for which such home was sold by such veteran. And to protect the veterans and their families and also the Government funds involved my bill expressly provides that where the Administrator of Veterans Affairs finds that any such paraplegic veteran sells his home, if he does, for an amount substantially less than the fair market value of such that then the sum paid to such paraplegic veteran by the Administrator of Veterans Affairs shall be equal to the difference between the cost of such home and the fair market value of such home at time of such sale.

I am sure you will agree with me that this is a fair provision as to Government funds and also the paraplegic and his family.

A copy of my bill was immediately furnished to the Veterans' Administration here in Washington; a copy was immediately furnished the Veterans' Affairs Committee of this House; a copy was immediately air-mailed to the Veterans Hospital at Long Beach and the Veterans' Administration offered immediate cooperation to ascertain the material facts necessary to a high and sound conclusion at the earliest possible date.

You will recognize that time is of the essence in consideration of this bill. If we are to protect these lads and their families against sharp economic losses in these few cases involved it must be decided at the earliest possible date.

I urge favorable consideration of this bill at the earliest possible moment by the Veterans' Committee. I have already spoken to the distinguished chairman, Hon. JOHN RANKIN about it. I urge that he and the other distinguished members of his committee give it immediate and favorable consideration. I urge that the appropriate Senate committee and the Senate give it the earliest possible favorable consideration.

As I now speak briefly to you of the bill and explain it to you, I note with pleasure that several heads are nodding in approval and others are smiling in apparent approval of this worthy objective.

Let us do it and do it promptly and remove from these distinguished permanently paralyzed and paraplegic veterans the present mental hazard to themselves and their families and all concerned as the result of this present hazard and loss which they are facing.

It is just; it is meritorious; it is an expression of the heart of America toward these relatively few distinguished veterans who thus come right up to the open door of death itself and have given their almost all to the service of our national security and the independence and happiness of our great Nation. The amount involved will be relatively negative. The objective is of the highest within the gift of the heart, mind and spirit of the American people.

WAGE-HOUR VIOLATOR FINED

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a news release of the United States Department of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, April 19, 1950, I inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD on page A2807 a letter written by the president of Row, Peterson & Co., of Evanston, Ill., to the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Maurice J. Tobin, in which he gave a very vivid picture of the problems created by the inspectors.

It has recently been suggested to me that inasmuch as this insertion was critical of the Department of Labor it would be no more than fair to balance this with another case which would evidence constructive action on the part of the Department.

I am, therefore, asking unanimous consent to include in my remarks today a release of recent date which shows that a violator of the wage-hour law was duly apprehended and fined. Believing thoroughly in a fair presentation of both sides of any situation, I am happy to spread this in the RECORD:

WAGE-HOUR VIOLATOR FINED

CAMDEN, N. J.—An Atlantic City, N. J., sweater manufacturer and retailer was fined $500 and severely reprimanded in the United States district court of New Jersey for criminal contempt of court in connection with flagrant violations of the Federal wage-hour law. The defendant, Avalon G. Paxson, had previously been compelled to pay $4,277 in illegally withheld back wages to her employees.

Federal Judge Thomas F. Madden called Miss Paxson a plain, ordinary liar and cheat. He said that only her age and physical ailments saved her from a stiff jail sentence for defrauding her employees and submitting false wage receipts to the court.

Miss Paxson has been found in violation of wage-hour provisions on four separate occasions. Sweaters for which home workers received only $3 were sold at Miss Paxson's Atlantic City shop for as much as $50. She also shipped sweaters to shops in other States, investigators of the United States Labor Department's Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Division found.

The sentence imposed by Judge Madden follows a previous contempt conviction in the same court, on April 25, 1947. At that time Miss Paxson was charged with failure to carry out the court's order to pay the $4,277 in back wages found due to her employees. The defendant had pleaded guilty to violations of the overtime provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, falsification of wage and hour records, and failure to pay the minimum wage, then 40 cents an hour.

Six months later, on October 24, 1947, Miss Paxson's attorney informed the court she had made payments of all sums due the employees and claimed that receipts had been submitted to the Wage and Hour Division. The court dismissed the action, believing settlement had been made. More recently, wage-hour investigators found that these receipts had been falsified or signed under misapprehension by employees. In many cases no back wages had been paid employees; in other instances only token payments had been made. In some cases, these partial payments were made by Miss Paxson only after she had learned that the wage-hour investigators were interviewing those who had signed receipts.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. VAN ZANDT addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

UNITED STATES PARTICIPATION IN INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the resolution (H. J. Res. 334) to amend certain laws providing for membership and participation by the United States in certain international organizations.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 334, with Mr. HOLIFIELD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at the time of the adoption of the rule for the consideration of the pending bill, House Joint Resolution 334, I addressed the House briefly, naming the five international organizations involved in the proposed legislation. I also stated, as to each of the five, the amount of the present annual assessment of the United States for the maintenance of such organization, as well as the amount in each case, of the assessment proposed by the resolution we are now considering.

I feel that it is well to again give this same information to the Members of the House.

The organizations included in the provisions of the measure under consideration are as follows:

First. The Food and Agricultural Organization.

Second. The South Pacific Commission.

Third. The American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood.

Fourth. The World Health Organization.

Fifth. The International Labor Organization.

While a history of the five organizations, including the date and circumstances under which they were instituted, would be interesting, the time at our disposal precludes us from going into such details. As a matter of fact, information of that character would have but little, if any, bearing upon the issues involved in the measure now under consideration.

In passing, however, it might be well to call attention to some facts about the origin and purpose of each of the five organizations included in the legislation.

The Food and Agricultural Organization is the first of the new permanent United Nations organizations to be established. It came into existence at Hot Springs, Va., in the year 1945 as a direct result of United States initiative. It is one of the specialized agencies of the United Nations.

The South Pacific Commission was established following an agreement, signed at Canbarra, Australia, on February 6, 1947, between the United States, the United Kingdom, Australia, France, the Netherlands, and New Zealand, all Governments possessing non-self-governing territories in the South Pacific area. The principal function of the Commission is the development of a cooperative effort on the part of the several countries, parties to the agreement, to promote the social and economic welfare of the inhabitants of the territories within the scope of the Commission.

The American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood was established in 1925, with Uruguay taking the leadership in the movement. Membership in the organization has so far been confined to the Latin-American countries and the United States. It is now a specialized agency of the Organization of American States. Its headquarters are located at Montevideo, Uruguay. The organization is perhaps the most popular of all similar organizations with the South American nations. As its name implies, its interest and operations are in the field of child welfare.

The World Health Organization is one of the specialized agencies of the United Nations. It was established in 1948. The organization has made significant headway in formulating plans, and, indeed, in carrying forward the long-term work for which it was established. It is because of this very progress, entailing, as it does, additional expenditures and necessitating an increase in budget, that calls for an increase in the contributions of all member nations and makes necessary this legislation.

The International Labor Organization, the oldest of all the international agencies now functioning, is the instrumentality through which 60 member countries get together in consultation and effort to work out international standards to improve conditions of labor and employment. It must be understood that this is actually not a labor organization in the sense the name usually implies. It is actually an organization in which representatives of management, government, and labor have a part. The organization was established in 1919, as an independent agency of the League of Nations. The United States became a member in 1934, and in 1946, the organization acquired the status of a specialized agency of the United Nations.

I shall now pass to the purpose of the legislation now before us. The object of the resolution is to raise to some extent the ceilings placed by former acts of the Congress on the appropriations necessary to pay the contributions of the United States Government toward the support of the five organizations I have named.

I shall take the organizations, one at a time, in the order already used, state the sum the United States has been heretofore contributing, the proposed new assessment in each case, the additional amount this Nation will be asked to pay during the present year, and the ceiling proposed by the pending legislation we now have under consideration.

The table I hold in my hand, and from which I read, supplies the information I have mentioned. It will appear in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

Organization	Present legislative ceiling	Proposed legislative ceiling	Maximum possible increase in United States assessment	Proposed 1-time contribution	1950 assessment of organization	Increase in assessment over present ceiling
American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood	$2,000	$10,000	$8,000	$24,000	$10,000	$8,000
Food and Agriculture Organization	1,250,000	2,000,000	750,000	----------	1,355,000	105,000
South Pacific Commission	20,000	75,000	55,000	----------	32,575	12,575
World Health Organization	1,920,000	3,000,000	1,080,000	560,000	2,520,000	600,000
International Labor Organization	1,091,739	1,750,000	658,261	----------	1,269,870	178,131
Total	4,283,739	6,835,000	2,551,261	584,000	5,187,445	903,706

In connection with the International Labor Organization, we have heard some question raised with reference to its duties and the possibility of its adopting conventions which will force its will upon the different countries that are members of the organization. It has been said in some quarters that the International Labor Organization will propose that some of its conventions, adopted at its annual meetings, be put into effect without any ratification on the part of the different member countries. That idea is absolutely erroneous.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. My question is in regard to the amount the gentleman gave as to the total increases. They add up to something like $4,000,000, although the gentleman gave a figure which was slightly less than $1,000,000. I thought perhaps the gentleman would like to correct that.

Mr. KEE. The total increase was $903,706, approximately $1,000,000.

Mr. JUDD. That is for ILO alone.

Mr. KEE. No.

Mr. JUDD. The increase for all five is about $2,500,000.

Mr. KEE. The gentleman is right insofar as the ceilings are concerned. But the increase in the assessments against the United States by all five organizations amounts to the figure I have stated, $903,706. It is an increase of $8,000 in the case of the American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood. The increase on FAO is $105,000. The increase on the South Pacific Commission is $12,572. The increase on the WHO is $600,000. The increase on the ILO is $178,131. This makes a total of $903,706.

That is the increase in the assessments. As to the increases in the ceiling there is a latitude and a possible increase may amount to $2,551,000.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. And it is true, is it not, that the total increase of $2,500,000, approximately, in the ceilings could never be used except as other countries belonging to these organizations increase their contributions in exactly the same proportion?

Mr. KEE. That is right; it must be in the same ratio.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEE. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I notice in House Report 1257, at pages 25 and 26, I have counted up the organizations to which the United States makes contributions. There are 48 or 49 organizations, and the total amount is $128,734,489, which is $47\frac{23}{100}$ percent of the amount of the total contributions to some 48 various international organizations to which we now belong and contribute; is that correct? Are the findings correct?

Mr. KEE. I presume they are correct, but the gentleman understands we are only dealing with five organizations here.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota, Dr. JUDD.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, this joint resolution grew out of a resolution which I introduced last year to increase the ceiling on American annual contributions to the World Health Organization. When a subcommittee was set up by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to study that it came to our attention that four other organizations were faced with a similar problem. So the subcommittee held hearings and considered all five of the organizations, and decided that, instead of introducing five separate resolutions, the convenient and proper way was to consider them altogether in a one-package bill, which we prepared and Chairman KEE introduced, with the unanimous approval of the full committee.

As a result we have House Joint Resolution 334 before us today. There are two main questions that arise. First, should there be definite ceilings in the legislation by which the United States participates in and makes contributions to these international organizations? And second, what should the ceiling be for each organization? Members may recall that for most of the organizations which we joined prior to the Eightieth Congress, including some that we have been in for many, many years, there were no such ceilings. When we joined the United Nations itself, when we joined its first specialized agencies, like UNESCO, the Universal Postal Union, and others, no such ceilings were provided. Then there developed in one or two organizations situations which we could not approve. One or two of the organizations came to be dominated by groups which tended to operate in directions which we felt were not wholly in our interest or in the direction of freedom and human betterment. Also, in instances where the United States was providing more than half of the budget—in some cases up to 72 percent as we did with UNRRA—and all the rest of the world had to put up only $1 to get about $3 out of the United States, it was understandable that they would never willingly give up so good a proposition as that. On the contrary they would inevitably tend to continue and expand its activities with minimum contributions from themselves and maximum contributions from us.

Our committee felt that was a bad setup. It might be justified occasionally in a temporary organization for emergency relief, but it is not justified in permanent organizations to which we would be making contributions annually. So in the later organizations we joined we provided ceilings in the authorizing legislation to permit annual review by Congress, to prevent our paying too large a share of an international organization's budget, and to help control over appropriations vested in Congress, without any misunderstanding by the organizations or their member countries.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Are the provisions contained in this particular bill the same or practically the same as were defeated by the last Congress?

Mr. JUDD. No; this bill never came to a vote.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I do not mean this bill. I mean the items contained therein or the authorities contained therein.

Mr. JUDD. No.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. We had before us in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress some of these proposals to increase the responsibility of the United States with reference to contributions to these international organizations. As I recall it, the House either refused to consider, or turned down those measures.

Mr. JUDD. This same resolution was before the House last October in the closing days of the first session. It did not get to a vote. It was being discussed one day under the 21-day rule, and before the time had expired it was laid aside for a conference report which had a deadline date on it, and it was not taken up again for consideration in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress or in this session until last week when the debate on the rule was concluded under the 21-day rule.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. This bill provides for an increase in the contributions made by the United States to these international organizations of approximately $800,000?

Mr. JUDD. The total increase in ceilings is approximately $2,500,000. The increase in the amount that will be appropriated this next year is about $900,000.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman does not have any doubt but that we will reach the ceiling?

Mr. JUDD. We will reach the ceilings only if the other countries increase their contributions proportionately. I think under those circumstances we should increase ours, up to the ceiling level if that is reached.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Do you in any way propose to reduce the percentage of contributions made by the United States to these organizations?

Mr. JUDD. No; this bill does not require reduction of percentage; but that is our Government's policy in all cases where our percentage is more than a third. It is much lower than that in many cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] has expired.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Originally, of course, when the United States first entered into these agreements, if I recall correctly, many of the other nations which were members of these various UN organizations, were in very difficult economic situations. It was impossible for them to make heavy contributions. Since that time we have spent billions upon billions of dollars of American money to help those nations recover in an economic way. I am just wondering if we are taking into consideration the fact that those other countries now have a greater ability to bear their fair share of the load and are going to see that they do meet their fair share of responsibility, now that we have aided them to recover to such an extent they have 40 or 50 percent greater production of goods and commodities than prior to the war.

Mr. JUDD. I think that is a good question, and the answer is "Yes."

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Now what action do you take? What guaranty is there, if any, that the burden on us will be reduced? If I support this legislation, how can I go back to my people and say, "We have acted to protect your interests?" What guaranty is there of that in this bill?

Mr. JUDD. There is no guaranty of that in the bill, and I do not see how we could insert it. We cannot try to dominate the organization or control the shares of other countries, any more than we intend to let them control our appropriations. Let me point out the percentages now in existence. The United States is contributing 25 percent of the budget of the Food and Agricultural Organization. Twelve and one-half percent of the South Pacific Commission. There are only six countries in that organization and we are one of the smallest contributors, because we have only a few islands in that area, whereas Great Britain, Australia, the Netherlands, and New Zealand have larger holdings, New Caledonia and other islands.

Our share of the World Health Organization's budget was almost 40 percent, originally. A year ago the organization under our persuasion, reduced it in a resolution which said precisely what the gentleman has suggested, namely, that as economic conditions improve in those countries it shall be the policy of the World Health Organization to reduce the share of the United States, so that ultimately not more than one-third of its budget should come from any one country. They reduced it to 36 percent last year, and in the meeting in Geneva a month ago they reduced it to 35 percent. I have every confidence that it will go down to 33⅓ percent.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. As I understand it, you are dealing with 5 international organizations out of about 48?

Mr. JUDD. That is right.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The average increase on these five will be about two and one-half million, if everyone else puts up their full amount?

Mr. JUDD. That is the maximum increase.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. What will be the reduction in percentage from the present figure the United States will be putting up under this bill?

Mr. JUDD. In the case of the World Health Organization, it will unquestionably go down to 33⅓ percent. I do not think the percentage of the ILO should go below the present 22 percent, or the South Pacific Commission below the present 12½ percent; or Food and Agriculture Organization below the present 25 percent.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. If I can check correctly, the grand total of contributions, by the United States is $128,734,000, or 47.23 percent of the total amounts furnished by all the other countries of the world to these various UN organizations.

Mr. JUDD. That is right.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The point I am driving at is simply this: When are we going to cut that percentage down and lessen the burden on our own people? We are now running a large deficit, the heaviest tax burden and the greatest national debt we have ever had in our history.

Mr. JUDD. If the gentleman will look in the appendix of the committee report he will find under the heading, United Nations and specialized agencies, two groups: permanent and temporary. There are three of the latter, the International Refugee Organization to which the United States contribution is over $70,000,000; the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, for which we have authorized $25,000,000, or 72 percent of its budget; and the third is United Nations Relief for Palestine Refugees, $8,000,000. Since this report was prepared the Congress has voted about $27,000,000 more for this one agency.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman says those are only temporary organizations?

Mr. JUDD. That is true, they are to provide relief in emergency situations arising out of war.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Has the gentleman ever heard of one of these temporary organizations being discontinued?

Mr. JUDD. Yes. For example, UNRRA, which was by far the biggest of all.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. But in its place we devised something bigger and better, the ECA, and now this point 4 program, which I am sure will soon be larger than UNRRA ever thought of being.

What I am driving at is to ascertain, if I can, why on earth we in this Congress are not trying to protect the interests of the American taxpayers who are having to pay for all these world-wide organizations, and a lot of useless operations, like UNESCO, and some of those others which have not paid off. They have not paid off, and now we find ourselves spending the money of the people of this country in an armaments race and for defense preparations. Our expenditures in these international fields certainly have not accomplished what we started out to accomplish, and I am wondering what we are doing to protect the interests of the American people.

Mr. JUDD. I have recently returned from the World Health Organization meeting in its annual assembly in Geneva, and I can assure the gentleman that the American representatives there took a strong, firm, persistent position that the United States could not be bled by increasing by any percentage the contributions from this country. A delegate from another country got up in that meeting and said that the contributions should be on the basis of ability to pay and that the United States was the most able because it had the highest per capita national income.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. And the gentleman took a very strong stand that the United States could not continue to be bled in the way we have been bled and are being bled?

Mr. JUDD. That it could not be bled by increasing our percentage.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman meant "further."

Mr. JUDD. There were delegates from some countries who openly sought to increase our percentage and wanted to go back to the UNRRA formula of our paying 72 percent which was worked out by Mr. Acheson and his deputy, Mr. Hiss, in the Atlantic City conference which set up that organization.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. By whom?

Mr. JUDD. By Mr. Acheson and Mr. Hiss. Mr. Acheson was our chief representative there and agreed to that formula for UNRRA.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am sure that neither gentleman has contributed a great deal to the peace of the world or to the benefit of the United States.

Mr. JUDD. I mentioned that illustration because I wanted to show the gentleman that we have gotten away from that pattern of thinking. Some wanted to go back to it in the WHO Assembly, and I suppose they would like to in other organizations, too. They said that the United States on the basis of annual per capita income ought to be paying 72 percent now the same as in the case of UNRRA. But they will not succeed. We got up and said, among other things, that if they want to consider the per-capita income they should also consider the per-capita debt, and we pointed out that the per-capita debt of every American citizen is over $1,700. We were able without difficulty to resist the pressure to increase our share. Instead of an increase there was a decrease.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield two additional minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. I hope that when the foreign agent spoke up in meeting and said the contribution should be based upon ability to pay, the gentleman from Minnesota promptly reminded him that the United States debt was more than the debt of all the rest of the world put together.

Mr. JUDD. That is what we said; I myself pointed out that the per capita debt for every man, woman, and child in the United States was over $1,700.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman from Minnesota reminded him of that?

Mr. JUDD. I did, and as a result of our representation they reduced our percentage from 36 to 35. So I believe the interests of the American taxpayer were reasonably well protected; and I wish to add that the State Department representatives, and Dr. Scheele, the head of our Public Health Service, who was the chairman of the American delegation, were just as firm and vigorous as any Congressman could be in protecting the interests of the United States, which action I am sure is also in the interest of the organization.

It is just as bad for the organization itself as it is for the contributor, to have more than a third, and in my opinion, more than one-fourth of its budget coming from any one of its members.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Is this an authorization for the expenditure of funds?

Mr. JUDD. It is, yes.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. And this will have to go to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. JUDD. Yes. This puts a limitation on the amount that we may contribute. The Appropriations Committee cannot go beyond these ceilings. It does not have to come up to them. As a matter of fact, the present request in one case is for only about 40 percent of the ceiling.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. May we have it understood through the gentleman, then, that we have not, therefore, obligated ourselves to give immediately this full amount that has been mentioned?

Mr. JUDD. The gentleman may understand that firmly and definitely. As I have said, there has been no request for anything like the maximum as yet.

Mr. Chairman, before I yielded to answer questions, I stated that one of the basic questions in considering this subject is, Why should we have ceilings? I may say that there are some people, including the State Department, who believe we should not have such ceilings in legislation. I myself, and our committee, think we should have them, first, so it is understood by all concerned that the Congress has the right and intends to review every year what is going on in these organizations. Secondly, because we believe that you and I, having taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, cannot delegate to any other organization the determination of what our appropriations for any purpose are to be. I believe that in the case of these organizations that are proving themselves sound and are operating reasonable and useful programs that need moderate expansion, we should make larger contributions, but we should not allow any organization to get control over how much we should give or should not give. Hence, I am firm in the belief that we should have ceilings. Whenever an organization has demonstrated that it is doing a good job and needs and can use advantageously a larger amount than our ceiling permits, and other countries will increase their contributions proportionately, I believe the Congress should be willing to raise our ceilings appropriately, which is what we seek to do by this joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JUDD. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. JENNINGS. In the very interesting statement the gentleman is making he said a moment ago that Mr. Acheson was connected with something. Does the gentleman mean Dean Acheson, our present Secretary of State?

Mr. JUDD. Yes.

Mr. JENNINGS. And the gentleman also mentioned a Mr. Hiss. Was that Mr. Alger Hiss?

Mr. JUDD. Yes.

Mr. JENNINGS. There is an axiom of the law that fraud vitiates everything. Is there anything good that Alger Hiss ever did or that I ought to follow, adopt, or swallow, or jam down the necks of my people?

Mr. JUDD. The pattern that was adopted for UNRRA by those gentlemen is no longer being followed. The pattern in this resolution is a quite different sort of pattern. Under it the Congress, which I am sure the gentleman approves, has control over appropriations to the international organizations in question and nobody in the executive branch or in any other country or any organization can commit us to appropriate or contribute any amount to their support in excess of the limitations we here establish.

Mr. JENNINGS. This resolution makes it possible, if the Appropriations Committee should so far forget itself, to raise the appropriations $2,500,000?

Mr. JUDD. A total increase of approximately $2,500,000. I am sorry I have not had opportunity to discuss the work or merits of the individual organization. I believe they are all deserving of the increases provided.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROOSEVELT].

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to urge most vigorously the adoption of House Joint Resolution 334, which will lend new strength to America's program of positive action for world peace. The reasons for expanding our support of these five agencies can be stated simply. First, they are proof to the rest of the world that our foreign policy is not limited to a negative drive to stop communism but rests on an affirmative desire to raise the standard of living of all the free peoples.

Three of the agencies involved here are part of the United Nations system, and they are proving again and again the validity of the principles of international cooperation. These agencies are the World Health Organization, Food and Agriculture Organization, and the International Labor Organization. The other two agencies are the South Pacific Commission and the American International Institute for Protection of Childhood. There can be no doubt but that through our work in these organizations, too, we establish to the mass of the world's people, our good faith in international relations, the main responsibility for implementing total diplomacy which the President and Secretary of State have set down as our international goal.

It is a truism that of all of our representative institutions, this Chamber is closest to the American people. By adopting House Joint Resolution 324, we shall offer a forceful proof that our foreign policy draws its real strength from the whole country.

These organizations are so obviously resigned to eliminate the human suffering on which communism and other totalitarianisms feed, that it is inconceivable to me that anyone really anxious to oppose dictatorships can fail to support House Joint Resolution 334.

Perhaps the best known of these agencies is the International Labor Organization. Since 1919 the ILO has done a valiant job of raising the world living and working standards. It is a completely voluntary organization, in which the leading spokesmen for labor, management, and Government work out joint solutions to common problems. Since 1934 the United States has given its support to the ILO and we have every reason to continue to strengthen that support. At the present session, our Government is ably represented by Assistant Secretary of Labor Philip M. Kaiser and Senator HERBERT R. O'CONOR, and our able colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Congressman GUS KELLEY, is the alternate delegate. Our country's employers are represented by Charles P. McCormick, of McCormick & Co., and the labor spokesman is George P. Delaney, of the A. F. of L.

Adoption of House Joint Resolution 334, is the best and most immediate proof that we can give to the citizens of the world democracies that we are committed to a better life for them as well as for ourselves.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER].

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Chairman, I hope there is no disposition in this House to treat the resolution before us, House Joint Resolution 334 as a matter of minor importance.

The sums of money concerned are relatively small. There are no great pressure groups working for or against passage. The resolution comes to the floor unheralded by headlines or radio broadcasts. But House Joint Resolution 334 is a piece of legislation which ranks with the Voice of America as a potential for making the force of our democratic ideals known around the world. I believe its approval is imperative if we are to make progress in the multitongued battle of the free world against the Communists.

Just what does this resolution do? It would raise the ceiling on United States contributions to three specialized agencies of the United Nations: the World Health Organization, the Food and Agriculture Organization, and the International Labor Organization. It also provides for raising the ceilings on our contributions to the South Pacific Commission and the American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood.

Before we discuss the specific amounts involved and the reasons for requesting increased American aid, I want to say just a few words about our obligation to the United Nations itself. I am among those who believe that our conduct in that forum in which so much of world opinion is formed has been above reproach. I think we have done everything that we could to make the United Nations a success. That the United Nations is not yet a success is the fault of Soviet Russia and her all-obedient satellites. But there are those in the world, who remain unconvinced, who have lived too long in the shadow of distrust to place their trust easily.

These agencies of the United Nations are the best possible route to the end of that distrust. They are the best method of rehabilitating the United Nations as a force for peace in the world—and making it clear that this country is ever ready to work for world cooperation within the UN.

I am particularly interested in the matter of the World Health Organization. This unit has done a magnificent job under almost unbelievable handicaps. Yet as I speak, the United States has still not paid $600,000 of its obligation to the current budget of the WHO. And unless this resolution passes, this Government will default that amount. Furthermore, the United States was not able to give any support to the new budget when the World Health Assembly approved that budget in Geneva on May 8.

I cannot believe the Members of Congress want to undermine the work of the World Health Organization. Many problems of public health have ceased to be matters for merely national concern. They must be solved by international teamwork. We have learned that the only sound long-range defense against epidemic diseases is an attack upon diseases at their source. Today the rapid increase in the speed and amount of travel has sharpened the threat of the invasion of our own shores by diseases that infest other areas. The World Health Organization is the international agency which has been created to carry on an integrated attack against disease everywhere. Each of its projects aiming at eliminating reservoirs of disease aids not only the people of the infested area, but all of us.

The World Health Organization, although it was not established as a permanent body until September 1948, has already paid rich dividends in human lives, in better health, and in general economic improvement. The campaign against malaria in Greece, for example, has resulted in an almost 98-percent reduction in malaria cases, and has made available the equivalent of 30,000,000 man-days a year in increased labor.

WHO demonstration teams are operating in many countries showing local health personnel effective methods of combatting malaria and venereal disease. The largest mass immunization campaign in history, the antituberculosis campaign in Europe and other areas, is being carried on through the cooperative efforts of the WHO and the United Nations Children's Emergency Fund. A WHO fellowship program is making possible the training of hundreds of doctors, nurses, and other desperately needed health personnel.

WHO is making progress in applying the magnificent discoveries of modern science which have provided us for the first time truly effective weapons against disease. I am convinced that no one in this House would wish this progress impeded.

Yet, this is exactly what will happen if House Joint Resolution 334 is not approved. This resolution provides for raising the ceiling on the United States contribution to the World Health Organization from $1,920,000 to $3,000,000. I would like to emphasize that this is a maximum, not a minimum, amount. The budget of WHO has already been increased from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000, and although the United States share of the budget was reduced by the second World Health Assembly from 38.54 percent to 36 percent, our share of the present budget is $2,520,000. This already exceeds the ceiling previously authorized by Congress.

On the other hand, the budget of the WHO is small indeed when the magnitude of its task is considered. WHO has completed its initial organization, and it now must have funds to carry out the field programs and other operations which are the core of its program. Without this, their objectives become a mockery and our claimed interest a sham.

It is not that the members of WHO expect the United States to carry more than its share of the load. On the contrary, the member states have all agreed that the United States share of the budget would be reduced gradually to 33⅓ percent as the economic conditions of other members improve.

The United States percentage is higher than that of any other state, but other members are contributing as much and more than the United States on a per capita basis. Our contribution amounts to a cent and one-half a year for each person in the United States, a very small investment for a program that is helping to protect our health, the health of the world, and more than that, I firmly believe, helping to preserve world peace.

The World Health Organization is not planning any major increase in its budget beyond the figure of $7,000,000 voted for 1950. The budget for 1951, approved by the executive board of the WHO, which will be considered at the world health assembly in May, is $7,100,000—an increase of only $100,000.

Our Committee on Foreign Affairs has examined the proposed plan of operations of WHO extremely carefully, and has declared in its report that—

> It was made apparent that the organization is proceeding along sound lines avoiding temptation of trying too much too soon.

The committee concluded that—

> The World Health Organization amply justifies confidence from the United States and the increased contribution is fully warranted.

I would like to add a final warning. If the United States defaults on its contributions to the World Health Organization for 1950, the organization will be required to reduce its operations. Furthermore, if the United States defaults, the support of the organization by other states may be greatly weakened. Other states may seize on the United States failure to meet its assessment as an excuse for also defaulting and an atmosphere be created which would result in breaking the back of the entire international health program.

This would be disastrous. The improvement of the health of the people in many areas is an integral part of our effort to improve economic conditions. We are spending billions to spur the economic recovery of Europe. The work of the World Health Organization contributes greatly to economic advancement, not only in Europe but in the underdeveloped areas of the world. We must not permit the World Health Organization to founder by failing to authorize an increase in our contribution to that organization of only slightly more than a million dollars. The failure of the WHO would be a blow to all of the international efforts to develop through the United Nations and its specialized agencies a foundation for enduring peace.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CARNAHAN].

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Chairman, the legislation now before the House deals with the contributions which our Government shall make to five international organizations: the American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the South Pacific Commission, the World Health Organization, and the International Labor Organization.

Adequate hearings were held, and the committee then considered in a number of sessions the problems raised by the needs of the groups involved. The committee considered the following questions:

(a) Whether or not an increase in United States contributions to the organizations concerned was justified.

(b) Whether ceilings should be eliminated as sought by the executive department, or whether new ceilings should be set, taking into consideration any need for increases.

(c) Whether the approach should be through one piece of legislation or through five individual items of legislation.

The committee decided to recommend keeping limitations on contributions to the organizations involved and to deal with the problem in one piece of legislation. Thus, you have House Joint Resolution 334 before you for your consideration.

It should be helpful to give you a comparison of the money involved in this legislation in comparison to the total United States expenditures in the field of international organizations. This is done for you in appendix I of the committee report for the fiscal year 1949. The total contribution of the United States to permanent international organizations during that year was in round figures, $24,500,000.

This figure represents about six tenthousandths of the total expenditures of this Government in the fiscal year 1949. In relation to the Government's military expenditures in the same period, it stands in the ratio of 1 to 588. It stands as about 1 to 250 in relation to the Government's expenditures for foreign assistance for the like period.

In the determination of the fiscal position of the Nation, expenditures on permanent international organizations are thus a minor factor. This is not intended, however, to waive aside the importance of these expenditures or the necessity of considering them with care. To the contrary, these expenditures should be measured in accordance with principles of strict economy—not necessarily in the sense of economy which counts as lost every dollar spent, but rather in the sense of insisting that every dollar spent must be justified by results.

In the American philosophy of government, we look to public authority to do the things that are beyond the reach of individuals and private groups, and we look to the central government to do only those necessary things that cannot be done by the local units of government. A parallel exists in this respect in relation to national and international governmental activities.

Therefore we should look to international organizations to do those things, desirable in terms of human benefits, which are beyond the reach of nations acting alone. Thus we can reasonably expect international organizations to make an increasingly convincing demonstration to all men of the hope that lies ahead in the path of international cooperation.

Everyone should realize that international organizations cannot properly function if they are encased in a financial strait-jacket. Their areas and levels of action must be given reasonable room to function. Successful organizations must, in a measure, determine their own limits of value and action. By the very fact of their operation in one period, they will tend to transform situations so as to increase the needs of their activity in a subsequent period. Such growth is nothing more or less than a characteristic of success, and yet, such development must be kept within bounds and made to respond to reasonable standards.

Each of the organizations here involved is a voluntary group organized and functioning as a democratic body. All the nations involved, including our own, are getting actual international democratic experience, which we all need. Each organization involved is actually applying the democratic concept of cooperation to the solution of problems they are each designed to cope with. This is an opportunity we should welcome. Are we then as a leading exponent of democracy going to withhold our encouragement of such action?

This legislation is, in my opinion, vitally necessary if we make the contribution we should make toward expanding and strengthening democratic concepts through the world. Such expansion and strength is necessary if we perpetuate our way of life. At such a comparatively small expenditure it would, of course, be utterly foolish to pursue any other course.

In closing, I earnestly urge all my colleagues to support this legislation in the interest of peace through international cooperation, understanding, and friendship.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARVEY].

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Chairman, it was my privilege to go to Europe and the Near East last fall as a member of the Select Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments to look particularly into the operation of various United Nations Organizations. I followed this report with a great deal of interest. One of the organizations that we gave a great deal of attention to, because it was not an action agency, but one of the so-called advisory and technical information services, was the World Health Organization.

I note on page 19 of the committee report there is a statement of the testimony of Dr. Scheele, for whom I have a very high regard. This statement starts out this way:

> WHO is a new organization. It is getting its feet wet. It is taking its first steps. It has gone a long way.

I suggest that, as I follow through other statements of the testimony, there is a definite philosophy prevalent, as evidenced by the testimony here, that they are going to utilize some of the functions of UNICEF, following its proposed extinction next year, to embark in other fields than a purely advisory and technical assistance program. In other words, WHO was set up as an advisory and technical assistance organization, but I have every reason to believe, from the committee print here, that there is going to be an attempt made to make it an action agency. I think that would be certainly detrimental to the theory under which WHO was organized, and I certainly would hope that that is not going to be the case.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARVEY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. I can give the gentleman categorical assurance that that is not going to be the case. I think that may be the major reason why the Russians and their satellites have refused to participate further in the work of the Organization. Apparently, they thought they could maneuver the World Health Organization into operating a great, expensive commodity-supply program, so that it would be furnishing powdered milk, vitamins, and what have you to the people in their areas as the UNICEF did for children. And when it became clear that WHO was sticking to technical assistance, not commodity supply, they pulled out. But there are certain medical operations that UNICEF has been carrying on in connection with tuberculosis, vaccination, and other public-health measures which should be on a permanent basis. When we do terminate the Children's Emergency Fund, because the emergency for which it was created has ended, then these long-term functions should be permanently under WHO.

Mr. HARVEY. That is exactly the thinking I am talking to the gentleman about.

Mr. JUDD. But it is not a supply program, it refers to the medical aspects of it.

Mr. HARVEY. As this says, you are going to get your feet wet. You are going to get them wet in an action agency. That is where you are headed just as sure as the world.

Mr. JUDD. It cannot be very large under this ceiling established in this resolution.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARVEY. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It has been the policy of the Congress to send a committee of Representatives from the House and Senate each year to sort of check on this organization. Last year we sent the gentleman from New York, Dr. PFEIFFER. This year we sent our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota, Dr. JUDD. These people give a first-hand report on what is going on. In that way the Congress can remain cognizant of what these organizations are doing.

Mr. HARVEY. I am not casting aspersions at the gentleman from Minnesota, Dr. JUDD, at all. I am simply giving the report as I saw the picture over there.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARVEY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. I do not quite understand what the gentleman means by an action agency. Is that when they get both feet in the trough and start spending billions of dollars instead of a few million?

Mr. HARVEY. I would say that the amount of spending as far as a United Nations organization is concerned is not a measure of whether they are an action agency or not. As the point was just made, the function of the World Health Organization is advisory, and I think it should at the very least remain in that capacity. But if you start vaccinating children all over the world, then you become an action agency.

Mr. MANSFIELD. If the gentleman will yield further, I want to take this occasion to compliment him and the committee of which he is a member on the fine and thorough job you did in carrying on your investigation last fall.

You did a splendid job, and I think we owe you a debt of gratitude.

Mr. HARVEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JUDD. If the gentleman will look down further on page 19, where he was reading, to about the middle of the page, he will find this also from Dr. Scheele's testimony:

> The International Children's Emergency Fund is a supply organization whereas the World Health Organization is not.

That is the crux of the matter. This ought not to be and I am utterly opposed to its being a supply program.

Mr. HARVEY. There is a difference between even a supply program and an action agency, I suggest to the gentleman, and I think certainly it is headed in direction of an action agency. We should certainly recognize the fact we ought to be getting out of the supply phase because we were in Warsaw in Poland as an official committee there of the Congress. We had been granted admission, but then when we finally arrived there they would not even let us see how they were disposing of UNESCO's supplies. So I never entertained the thought that there was any thought in the WHO organizations of continuing the supply activity, but I do say you are heading directly toward that very thing that I am warning you about which is that you are getting your feet wet as an action agency which was never contemplated for WHO.

Mr. JUDD. If by the term "action agency" the gentleman means field activities, why of course WHO always has contemplated and should carry on field activities. It has two types of operations. One is in the field. For instance, it picked out three major problems on which to focus its work in the field. They are the greatest health problems in three-fourths of the world, namely, malaria, tuberculosis, and venereal diseases. Its method of approach is not the supplying of drugs or medicines. Rather it sends technical experts to help individual countries to strengthen their own public health services so that they can handle their own problems. Those are field activities.

Mr. HARVEY. I will say to the gentleman that the distinction lies in the fact that you should be sending technical personnel over there to advise with their medical and technical men in the field, not to go out and do the work. That is exactly the direction, I think, in which you are headed.

Mr. JUDD. It is understood, of course, that experts must go to the various countries. For instance, in India they have already set up a demonstration center where they can bring doctors and public health officials in from the various provinces to see what can be done for venereal diseases. With the discovery of penicillin and similar drugs it is possible to carry out rapid treatment that can almost eliminate those diseases as was never possible before in the long history of man. But the techniques are rather complicated and exact and only by bringing in the local doctors and the local health officers, can they observe the techniques so that they can then go back and attack the problems in their own areas.

Mr. HARVEY. That comes back again to the very thing I attempted to try to point out to the gentleman and explain my thinking, which is that you are going to finally wind up doing the program. That is just exactly the reason why a great many of the people of our country take a very dim view of many of these organizations. They feel we have been led far afield from the original intent of the United Nations Organization.

Mr. JUDD. Of course the gentleman will agree that an organization whose budget for the whole world is only $7,300,000 cannot get into very extensive operations.

Mr. HARVEY. I know, but under the program you say that is just the start, and that is exactly the complaint I am talking about.

Mr. JUDD. No, it was understood when we joined this organization, that under the orderly development, which I hope will come about, it will probably have eventually a program on a permanent basis with a budget of up to $15,000,000. It ought to do that much work a year, and the United States ought to put up for it at least the $3,000,000 this resolution authorizes. But as for an extensive and expensive supply program like the Children's Fund and UNRRA and IRO, there is no chance of that happening unless this Congress were to vote for it.

Mr. HARVEY. I hope what the gentleman says is true. I have wanted to say this on the floor of the House and to get it into the RECORD, because I have every right to feel that WHO at the present, if it sticks to its last, is going to do a good job, but I believe it is headed out into the realm of an action agency and when it does you will see a $150,000,000 budget.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARVEY. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. Which section of the bill relates to WHO? Is it this subsection (b)? I cannot link the report up with the bill. How much is it proposed to increase the budget for WHO?

Mr. HARVEY. May I suggest that the gentleman direct his inquiry to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KEATING. Would the gentleman from Minnesota advise how much they are seeking by this bill to increase WHO?

Mr. JUDD. The ceiling would be increased from $1,920,000, which is the present ceiling, to $3,000,000. But the annual budget which has already been adopted by WHO would require from the United States only about $2,500,000. This ceiling of $3,000,000 is above WHO's present requirements, but rather than come back here every single year for a change in ceiling, we provided for a reasonable amount of growth and expansion, a certain cushion which is particularly important in health matters.

Suppose a world-wide epidemic of influenza, were to break out, such as we had at the end of World War I, the organization ought to have a certain amount of elasticity for emergencies. But when the organization has only $3,000,000 as the ceiling on the total appropriation from the United States, believe me it cannot run away very much, can it?

Mr. HARVEY. May I say in conclusion I do not think it is the intention of the Members of the Congress of the United States to attempt to raise enough money to make the whole world healthy.

Mr. JUDD. That is completely true, and this resolution makes that certain.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. HOLIFIELD] may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend to the House House Joint Resolution 334 which would raise the ceiling which Public Law 843 placed upon United States contributions to the International Labor Organization and certain other international organizations. I am in full support of this resolution because I am a strong believer in the principle that if, in this atomic age, we are to attain peace in the world, one of our major instruments for attaining that peace is the United Nations and its specialized agencies.

For 30 years the ILO has been carrying on effective and constructive work in the labor field. I need not emphasize the importance of labor in the world we live in today. We are faced with two major tasks. First, we must raise economic and living standards throughout the world so that peoples everywhere may attain at least those minimum conditions which will satisfy their material needs. Secondly, we must do everything in our power to check expanding world communism. These two objectives, of course, are inseparably related because a major bulwark against communism is raising standards of living.

For 30 years the ILO has devoted itself to raising standards of living. It has not done this in the theoretical plane. It has done it concretely. The ILO knows that standards of living cannot be raised without corresponding increases in productivity and the ILO's program in the fields of manpower utilization and training workers in specific skills are geared directly to increasing productivity.

In short, the ILO is in my opinion an important instrument for world peace, because the ILO is an efficient international organization and because it is devoted to constructive efforts to solve those economic problems which stand in the way of peaceful relations between nations.

House Joint Resolution 334 is designed to remedy a major impediment to effective United States participation in the ILO and other international organizations. All that it does is to raise the limitation on United States contributions to the ILO, FAO, WHO and certain other international organizations. It does not say that United States contributions to the ILO must be more than they are now, nor does it say what the United States contributions to the ILO should be. That, I submit is not related to authorizing legislation. Ever since the ceiling limitation imposed by Public Law 843 has been in effect, our delegation to ILO meetings have been seriously hampered. The budget of the ILO and all other international organizations is determined by general democratic agreement of the member countries.

This is no time for the United States to risk compromising the efforts of international organizations which are in line with the objectives of our foreign policies. The ILO is doing this. Let us keep our friends where we have them.

(Mr. SHELLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD).

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak in support of House Joint Resolution 334, which would raise this country's contribution to several international agencies, among them the International Labor Organization. Unless this bill is passed, we will be unable to meet our fair share of the running expenses of the ILO.

As an American and as an American trade unionist, I am particularly interested in the ILO. Its creation in 1919 was due in large measure to the inspiration of Samuel Gompers, the first president of the AFL, whose one hundredth anniversary we have just celebrated.

But my support of the ILO is not limited to this sentimental attachment for its past. I have seen the ILO at work in the present-day world and I know that it is carrying on its job with efficiency and vigor. Its job—the raising of working and living standards throughout the world—is one I am sure we will all support.

I was a member of the United States delegation to the ILO Conference in 1948, held in San Francisco. There I saw government, management, and labor representatives from all over the world working together and finally coming to agreement on the best ways to improve labor standards. Delegates to that conference represented all the leading industrial countries of the world with the exception of the U. S. S. R., which is not a member of the ILO. The political scenes and the economic structures in the delegates' home countries varied greatly, as you would imagine. Yet we were able to agree on a number of important points.

Watching the ILO at work, I thought that it offered the best possible medium for real representation for the United States.

Our Government is, of course, represented in all UN agencies, but only the ILO provides a meeting place for our free-labor movement and for our employers. In all ILO meetings the voices of industry and labor are heard, as well as that of government. Our system of free enterprise is nowhere shown to better advantage internationally than in the councils of the ILO.

Compared to other funds which have been voted or are contemplated by the Congress, the money involved in this legislation seems very little indeed. Yet if we do not pass this legislation, we will seriously cripple the ILO's current program.

Before closing, I want to mention a part of that program which is, I believe, of particular importance. The ILO has been working with notable success assisting the Marshall plan countries of western Europe in the solution of their manpower problems. It has given them technical assistance in the problems of training and retraining workers for industry and in the establishment of employment services so that the job and worker can be brought together.

In addition to its work in western Europe, the ILO is giving similar assistance to the countries of Asia where the need for trained workers is acute. This activity of the ILO, which fits in so well with the programs contemplated by the point 4 legislation, should be supported and not curtailed. I therefore want to register my wholehearted support for House Joint Resolution 334.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, this bill seeks to raise the ceilings for certain United Nations organizations and I favor it as a necessary measure. I think, also, that it is a very good place at which to make a few observations about the United Nations itself.

Two impressions have been sought to be created with respect to the United Nations.

First, that all of these activities, like the World Health Organization, the Food and Agricultural Organization, and the International Labor Organization, are little extra appendages which really did not belong to the original conception of the United Nations.

Second, that there is something fundamentally invalid about what was the very leading point in the bipartisan foreign policy which saw this country through a great world war and into the auspicious beginning of a great peace—bipartisanship in foreign policy or the United Nations.

Let us understand that when we are facing the American people today with a $14,000,000,000 budget for defense we have at the same time got to offer them some feeling that we are trying to work for peace. One of the two major hopes that we offer them that we are trying to work for peace is the work we do through the United Nations. The hope we offer to the millions and millions of free peoples throughout the world, is the hope that we offer them through these very programs which are so lightly condemned here on the theory that we are being financially bled, which seek to improve their own standards of living, their own health, and their own agriculture, and to keep them from getting into that state of despair, which is the royal road to communism.

On this question of being bled white due to the cost of these programs, I would like to say this: We had general Marshall before us the other day in the Foreign Affairs Committee, testifying on the mutual defense assistance program, which is more popularly known as "arms for Europe." Mr. VORYS and I jointly handling this phase of the testimony, asked the General to give us an estimate of what it would mean to the budget and to the people of the United States if the United States instead of being isolationist, which was the old worry in the days before World War II, should become isolated by the fact that the major free countries of the world went the Communist way. General Marshall, after some thought and deliberation, said that in his opinion, at the minimum it would cost us $30,000,000,000—not $14,000,000,000 but $30,000,000,000—for the defense of the United States, and, Dr. Judd reminds me, $30,000,000,000 this is annually—recurring each year.

Let those gentlemen who think we are being bled white who are weighing in the balance an addition of about $2,500,000 as a ceiling increase for these organizations, which make the work of the United Nations go round, let them weigh the cost in terms of more military expenditure alone of following any view which would isolate the United States. Let them add to that the regimentation. We have debated here on the floor about regimentation. Just think over the regimentation of our country if we had to have a $30,000,000,000 military establishment, and if the country was girding itself for war. Everything we are talking about today that we call regimentation would be a pale shadow by comparison. Add to this also the mandatory decrease in the standard of living of all Americans attributable to the diversion of so much more of our production to military needs.

It is extremely important that the United Nations be maintained. It is extremely important that the free peoples of the world, sustained by us and by the great body of nations, shall have this hope for peace.

I would like to tell you one specific reason why. We are dealing with the Soviet Union in a very difficult struggle between freedom and slavery, not only for the world's mind but for the world's spirit, for its opportunities and resources, and for the future of all people. In that struggle, if we should shut out the Soviet Union and its satellites as we have been advised to do on occasion and make the United Nations just a social club for our own friends, then we would be giving the Soviet Union and its satellites the greatest vindication for their own people that could be had. Remember they have their own people that they have to deal with every day. Because what they are saying to their own people is that we hate them—the people—that the Western World hates them. They tell them that the Western World intends to attack and to subjugate and to exploit them, and you can see how we would just be confirming everything that this blind leadership in the Kremlin is telling the 200,000,000 Soviet and satellite people if we by our own unilateral action should eject them from the United Nations. No; Mr. Chairman, the way to deal with the Soviet Union is to have infinite patience. We can stick it out for a lot longer than they—we have the morale and the resources to do so—and we want to stick it out because we want peace. If we keep our shirts on we can win; for all free people and for those who desire freedom; if we lose our heads we are in grave danger of losing for all.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JACKSON] may insert his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, House Joint Resolution 334, which we are now considering, increases the ceilings on United States contributions to five international organizations of which we are members.

I have had personal experience with one of those organizations—the International Labor Organization. I have had the privilege of participating in some activity of the ILO every year since 1945. In 1946, I had the honor of presiding over the International Maritime Conference in Seattle.

Based on what I have seen, I believe that the ILO is an organization that gets results—results which are extremely helpful to American industry and labor, and which probably save the United States money in the long run—because they help to further European recovery, in which we are investing billions of dollars.

I think our participation in and contribution to the ILO is a good investment for America—one that will pay good dividends.

Take ILO's contribution to European recovery, as an example. One of the great obstacles to faster recovery is the shortage of skilled workers—which, sadly enough, often goes along with a surplus of unskilled workers. The committee of European nations—the OEEC—asked the ILO to help out. The ILO has helped to set up training programs to help correct this situation. It has also improved the operation of employment services throughout Europe, so that labor can move more easily to the places where it is most needed. We have spent billions of dollars trying to accomplish European recovery. If the ILO is able to further this objective, then I think our contribution to the ILO is an investment well spent.

One of the fine things that comes out of the ILO is the establishment of minimum wages and standards of working conditions. This is good for American industry as well as for American labor. It is good for our working people because it helps to guarantee for them the standards they have been able to achieve. It is good for industry as well, because it tends to equalize costs of labor all over the world, and eliminate disadvantageous competition.

Now it may appear that the ILO is nothing more than a debating society, since in many cases its conventions are not formally ratified by the member nations. Yet these conventions do have a noticeable effect. For example, in the renovation of certain passenger ships after the war, shipping companies did pay heed to a convention passed at the International Maritime Conference in Seattle in 1946, which dealt with the conditions of crews' quarters.

Even if the ILO were just a debating society, I believe it would still have considerable merit, in bringing together the representatives of government, industry, and labor, so that they can discuss their common problems, and get a better idea of what the problems of their industry all over the world mean to them.

The United States contribution to the ILO is considerably less than its contribution to the UN itself, as well as many of the major specialized agencies. While we contribute up to 40 percent of the budget of other agencies, our contribution to the ILO is only 22 percent.

Many of you may know that the ILO has recently come under the direction of David Morse, formerly our own Under Secretary of Labor. Under his guidance, the ILO is striking out in new directions. The present ceiling on our contribution to the ILO does not permit it to maintain the programs the organization is now calling for.

I urge you to support an increase in the ceiling on our contribution to the ILO—for the welfare both of American industry and American labor, and as a good investment in our entire world program.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we have before us a joint resolution dealing with the participation of this country in international organizations. I want to say to the Members of the House, both Democrats and Republicans, that I have come to the conclusion unreservedly that it is about time for the American people to wake up and realize just what is being done by our Foreign Affairs Committee and our State Department and those who are fostering the things we are doing in these international organizations to the point that eventually we will be so complicated in the affairs of all the nations of the world that America will be no more.

Whenever the time comes that we give more attention and more time to looking after foreign countries than to looking after our own people it is about time for the American people to wake up and look after the Congress of the United States and get men here who will work to save America. I am afraid that the complications you are getting us into will eventually wreck us, as the money you are taking from the American taxpayers to look after foreign countries has about reached its zenith. I just looked at a comparison between this country and Great Britain. Great Britain is in the black; the United States is in the red. The United States budget for 1950 is substantially this: Receipts, $36,600,000,000; expenditures, $42,000,000,000; deficit, $5,400,000,000, but it will go beyond that; it will be closer to $7,000,000,000 deficit. Look at Great Britain. Their budget for 1950 is: Receipts, $11,000,000,000; expenditures, $5,500,000,000; a balance in the treasury of a billion and a half; yet you Members of this Congress are giving socialized Great Britain more than a billion and a half of our own money, sticking up your own American taxpayers and asking them to go down in their pockets to raise that money. If that is not downright foolishness then I do not know what is. It is time you woke up; it is time the American taxpayers woke up. Before it is too late.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Why are you looking at me and the rest of the fellows on this side? We are not doing any such thing.

Mr. RICH. Well, you fellows who are voting right like the gentleman from Michigan need not worry. Look at the record of some of the Members—they are the fellows I am talking about.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Look over there on the other side.

Mr. RICH. Well, I am looking over there; and I want the people of this country to know, too, their voting record—they are selling America short. I do not care whether you are a Democrat or a Republican. If you are going to pass this legislation—there are a few Republicans doing too much of this to suit me. I want them to get their just dues. I am not here to talk as a Democrat or Republican; I want to talk as an American. When the time comes that I do not want to be an American then I shall get out of the United States, I shall be ready to go to heaven or to some place else, but I am going to stay here and fight as long as there is any fight left. I shall fight for American liberty, freedom, and solvency.

Everything is hopeless unless we stop a lot of these appropriations. Beware of foreign entanglements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following laws of the United States are hereby amended in the following particulars:

(a) Public Resolution 31, Seventieth Congress, is revised to read as follows:

"That in order to meet the obligations of the United States as a member of the American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of State—

"(a) the sum of $24,000 for payment by the United States of its assessed annual contributions for the period beginning July 1, 1946, and extending through the fiscal year expiring June 30, 1949; and

"(b) such sums, not to exceed $10,000 annually, as may be required thereafter for the payment by the United States of its share of the expenses of the Institute, as apportioned in accordance with the statutes of the Institute."

(d) Public Law 643, Eightieth Congress, is hereby amended:

(1) By striking out the words "There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually to the Department of State" in section 3 thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the words "There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of State for contribution to the working capital fund of the organization the sum of $560,000 and as annual appropriations the following"; and

(2) By striking out the figure "$1,920,000" in subsection (a) of section 3 thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the figure "$3,000,000."

(e) Public Law 843, Eightieth Congress, is hereby amended:

(1) By striking out the figure "$1,091,739" in subsection (a) of section 2 thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the figure "$1,750,000";

(2) By striking out the words "article 13 (c)" in section (a) of section 2 thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the words "article 13 (2) (c) and 13 (3)"; and

(3) By striking out the words "not to exceed $95,000 per annum" in subsection (b) of section 2 thereof.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, before we vote upon this piece of legislation we ought to understand that while this resolution affects only five international organizations we presently contribute to 48 international organizations. You will find them named on pages 25 and 26 of House Report No. 1257 of the Eighty-first Congress, first session.

The total amount that we are contributing to these 48 organizations is $128,734,489, which amounted to 47.23 percent of the total amount of the appropriations. While it is true we are asked here in this bill for additional money for five separate international organizations the over-all increase will be about $2,500,000.

I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, as to how many of these international organizations we might well belong to and whether these other countries should not now carry a larger percentage of the amount of money involved. Our country has a larger debt than all the other countries put together, some $260,000,000,000. Our money is being diluted and polluted to the point where the dollar is worth less and less as time goes by.

The European nations who participate in these organizations to an extent of less than 50 percent are recovering their economy. Why should they not be called upon to contribute a larger percentage to the operation of these groups? In fact, I feel this way: That many of these organizations could be dispensed with. While I am in sympathy with the purposes of the World Health Organization, I think its objectives are good. I know this: That when once these agencies are set up they go far beyond the purposes for which they were first created. They become an expanding bureaucracy. They will expand in this organization to vaccinate all the peoples of the world, if they could, and I would be for it if we could afford it. But, my colleagues, we cannot afford all these things, no matter how good they are. About 10 years ago we entered upon a program of vaccinating the children of the United States against smallpox, dyphtheria, and typhoid fever; and I am for it; I think that is where we really should start, because we have several millions that are still unprotected in these United States. But here we have an organization which takes in all of the peoples of the world. Well, we just cannot afford it. This country is broke, and it seems to me, while we may have some obligation to perform in going on and continuing them as is for a little while longer, the appropriation to them should not be increased. In fact, I think there ought to be a careful review of the 48 international agencies that we now support. Oh, yes; somebody said some of them were temporary agencies. I guess originally they were temporary, but they soon become permanent. You might be surprised to read the names of some of these organizations. There are 48 international organizations that we are bolstering up with the taxpayers' money. It amounts to more than $128,000,000. The committee say, "Now we come along with these five groups; let us give them some more money to enlarge their activities." I think it is time to shave these off, to cut them down, and not expand them.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I might say to the gentleman from Nebraska that there are some 250 of these international organizations altogether. I think the hearings for State, Justice, and Commerce show that some 100 or 101 are authorized to have meetings during the fiscal year 1950, and that the check for the expenses of these will be somewhere around $1,650,000. These four or five mentioned here are just a few of them. There are about 250 of them altogether. I put the names in the RECORD 2 years ago.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I thank the gentleman. I noticed on pages 25 and 26 at least 48 are listed to which we make contribution. They always get a disease called "meetitis." They meet ever so often to discuss their problems, and that all costs money. I hope the House will reject these increases and take definite steps to cut the others down.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, here we go again; the circus is on. Are we going to spend more money or are we going to use a little sense? According to this report, as the gentleman from Nebraska just told you, we are spending $128,000,000 a year on these foreign organizations. As I understand from the hearings, the people who went through the appropriation bill said that most of those items should be cut in half. I wonder if that is not correct. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CLEVENGER] was on that committee. Is that not correct, that most of these organization expenses could be cut in half without hurting them much?

Mr. CLEVENGER. I should think so, and I would like to go further than that and say that I think the number might be reduced from about 250 to 50 and the others entirely dispensed with.

Mr. TABER. And then you would really be operating the Government on a progressive basis instead of a reactionary basis running further behind.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I want to qualify my statement, to the effect that these 48 organizations are not all the international organizations; they are the ones operating under the United Nations Organization.

Mr. TABER. Yes; but there are a lot of others besides those.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. About 100 more.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

We can go ahead and authorize increased expenditures that the State Department will work out and build up when it comes before the Budget and the Appropriations Committee to implement the authorizations. If we start in and open the door and add to the amount that can be appropriated instead of reducing it the way we should, we are just going to be getting more and more in trouble and in deeper and deeper. I hope the Members of the House will not vote for any more bills increasing authorizations, or we will absolutely break the United States. Is it not time for us to have a sense of responsibility, for us to feel a responsibility to the people back home to treat them honestly, to treat them fairly, and not try to build up an enormous expense here all the time? Would it not be nice if some committee could someday bring in a bill which would reduce authorizations instead of increase them all the time?

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. May I commend the gentleman from New York on his statement? Let me also observe that a moment ago the gentleman from Nebraska spoke of $260,000,000,000 of Federal debt. He might well have added to that $17,000,000,000 of municipal debt in this country and $4,000,000,000-plus of State debt.

Mr. TABER. We can owe money, but unless the owing of that money and the paying of interest upon it makes enough of an impression upon the people of the United States so that they demand that we treat them honestly and fairly and stop fooling away their money, it is just too bad.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding, to allow me to make clear for the record that of these 48 organizations to which we give a total of $128,000,000 a year, $104,000,000 of the $128,000,000 goes to the three expensive relief operations which are temporary. The other 45 to which we make annual contributions have to do with regulation of shipping and lighthouses and international postal union and allocation of air waves and civil aviation, and other organizations to which we must belong if we are to have trade and commerce with the rest of the world. Our contributions to those 45 are less than $25,000,000 per year, so I do not believe that it can be said that we are squandering money like a drunken sailor when we are giving only $25,000,000 a year to the 45 international organizations which are essential if we are to have orderly relations with the rest of the world.

Mr. TABER. A great lot of those organizations can and should function on very small amounts of money, and most of them are already very well provided for.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it would be a good idea to get our sights fixed right, let us not strain at gnats and swallow camels.

Our committee staff has gotten together, on page 25 of our report, an official list of international organizations so we can get a look at them. These are the ones covered by appropriations made or allocated to the Department of State. There are about 48 of them. They amount to about $128,000,000, of which $104,000,000 is for temporary United Nations organizations.

Our percentages on all 48 vary from 72.13 percent to the Pan American Union, the highest, as I see it, down to 2.04 percent for the Central Bureau for the International Map of the World on the millionth scale, an organization for which our annual contribution is $50.

Look over this list. There are many of them that are outside the United Nations. There are 10 connected with the Western Hemisphere. There are 8 temporary ones outside the United Nations group. There are 17 others that are mostly scientific or technical in character. They are extremely worth while.

When we entered the United Nations we thought it was going to bring a peaceful world. The United Nations and its subsidiaries in this list cost about $22,000,000. If we could double or treble our contributions to the United Nations and get a little peace so that we would not have to spend $15,000,000,000 a year for arms and another billion dollars a year for arms aid, and further billions of dollars for economic aid for our own security, we would be making money fast, and we could reduce our budgets here at home.

But as we consider this particular bill I point out to you that the amount of increase involved is less than a million dollars for the current year, as far as appropriations are concerned. Three of the organizations involved are United Nations organizations and subsidiaries. One has to do with our inter-American relations and one has to do with our responsibilities in the South Pacific. Those are pretty legitimate organizations for us to support.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. What is the organization in subparagraph (b), on page 2, where the maximum is raised from $1,250,000 to $2,000,000?

Mr. VORYS. That is the FAO.

Mr. KEATING. Then what is the one on page 3, subparagraph (e) 1? That is the one where the maximum is raised from $1,091,000 to $1,750,000.

Mr. VORYS. That is the ILO, the International Labor Organization.

Mr. KEATING. What do they do?

Mr. VORYS. The International Labor Organization was started in 1919 as a League of Nations organization. It carries on investigations for improved labor standards all over the world. None of their recommendations are adopted, except by constitutional action of the 60 member countries individually. The representation in that Organization consists of two members of government, one of management, and one of labor for each delegation. One of the things they are going to take on very shortly under the United Nations is an investigation of the Russian slave-labor camps, an investigation which will reveal to the world labor conditions which I think will dim the enthusiasm of some of those who are wavering toward the Communist way of life. That is one of the things this Organization does.

Mr. KEATING. Can they do that against the opposition of Russia?

Mr. VORYS. They will have to do the best they can. Since the WFTU, the Communist-front labor organization, has been shown up, Russia and her satellites have not been participating in the ILO. But the ILO is an official United Nations organization and is in a position to go ahead with that investigation.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. In connection with the item the gentleman is speaking of, the last item strikes out the figures of $95,000 per annum. The effect of that is to lift entirely any restriction on the authorization for that item. May I ask the gentleman to explain why such an unprecedented provision is contained in this bill as to take off all limitation on the appropriation?

Mr. VORYS. The proposed ceiling for ILO contributions is $1,750,000.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman is referring to the last paragraph where the words "not to exceed $95,000 per annum" are stricken out.

Mr. VORYS. That was the former limitation, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. JUDD. That $95,000 is a limitation in existing law on the amount that the United States may spend in sending delegates to conventions or in its own actual participation in the work of the Organization. Removing it does not remove the limitation on the United States contribution to the ILO.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The question I would like to have answered is why your committee should recommend the unprecedented thing of taking the limit off of an appropriation entirely.

Mr. VORYS. The limit was not taken off for contributions.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Then there is something the matter with your language.

Mr. VORYS. It was raised from $95,000 to $1,750,000. In each case there has been a legislative ceiling put on for each of those organizations.

Mr. JUDD. If the gentleman from Virginia will look at the last paragraph on page 24, the action is explained.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am looking at page 29, where the matter is set out under the Ramseyer rule, which shows the change in the law:

> Such additional sums, not to exceed $95,000 per annum, as may be necessary to pay the expenses incident to participation by the United States in the activities of the organization—

And so forth. When you strike out $95,000, it then reads:

> Such additional sums as may be necessary to pay the expenses—

And so forth. So you entirely take the lid off. I want to know why the unprecedented thing of taking the lid off of an appropriation.

Mr. JUDD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VORYS. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. As that paragraph in our report says:

> The existing law also sets a limit of $95,000 on the annual cost of United States participation in the International Labor Organization; this is the only organization for which this type of limitation has been set.

Then it continues:

> The sum has proved inadequate for proper representation at all International Labor Organization meetings. Expenses of travel are paid not only for United States Government representatives but also for employer and worker representatives. The increase in technical committee meetings, the scheduling of some meetings in the Far East, as well as in Europe and the Western Hemisphere, and other unpredictable factors make an estimable annual cost impossible. An additional factor, not taken into account at the time this limit was set, is the charge made by the FBI for its investigation of personnel connected with United States participation.

It was felt that the value derived from holding meetings in various parts of the world, rather than all in Geneva, more than offset the additional money required for such purposes.

Mr. VORYS. The limitation has been removed from one place and put in another. It has been increased, but in my judgment the limitation is similar for each of these organizations.

Now, I want to get a minute or so to say something on my own account.

I am happy to answer such questions as I can, but one thing I wanted to say was this: that the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House have to stand for a great deal on this floor. There are not many votes in being on Foreign Affairs, because we do not authorize appropriations for particular districts or local interests or pressure groups. However, I want to say that, insofar as I know, none of the members of the Foreign Affairs Committee ever recommended any authorizations that they felt were not in the interest of this country. I get sick and tired of having members of our committee who labor on these matters, involving our national security and the national interest of our country, criticized as if we were some sort of aliens and were unpatriotic. As far as economy is concerned, you have heard today what it would cost to carry out the recommendations that some have made here; that we pick up our marbles all over the world and come home and not spend a dime for these international organizations, and stop doing what we are doing in Japan, Germany, and Europe. Do you know what that would cost? The figure came from the former Chief of Staff who handled a rather successful war. Certainly he ought to know something about it. His estimate is that it would cost $30,000,000,000 a year for military expenditures if we try to stand alone against Russia. Now some of you economy experts who think that we can save money ultimately by cutting out our participation in world affairs better look around and try and face your own responsibility when you criticize the patriotism of those of us who are trying for both peace and economy.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word; not only the last word, but the whole bill.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio made the statement that we should get our sights fixed right. I think that is the watchword right here now: Get your sights fixed right. But I am not looking through the same sights as the gentleman from Ohio.

I am interested in trying to help foreign countries in a manner that is commensurate with our ability to help them. I want to help anybody; I have not anything against anybody either in the House or anywhere in the world; I do not hold any animosity. But I know that there are some things we can do and some things we cannot do. I do not believe in the way the gentleman from Ohio wants to handle the affairs of this Nation. Here we are a country of 150,000,000 people in a world of 2,400,000,000. Looking at this report and studying it you find that the committee through these various organizations wants the 150,000,000 people of America to carry the load of the 2,400,000,000 people of the world. I say it just cannot be done. It is foolish to think so.

Let me show you the percentages of the cost of some of these organizations that they expect us to carry: 39.89; 25; 38.79; 45.57; 72; 54.35; 51; 47; 72—these are percentages—the lion's share. I can go on down the line and show you that this 150,000,000 people are carrying the elephant's load for the whole world. How do you think we can do it? We are running in the red $7,000,000,000 a year, yet some of these other countries have balanced budgets and a surplus in the treasury. Still you come in and ask the American taxpayers to carry the load. There is something wrong in the upper story of your anatomy when you think that way.

I remember when we started the United Nations. I was for the United Nations, but I predicted that the United Nations would fail when they refused to open their session with prayer; and you admit that they have failed. You then went into the Bretton Woods agreement and you lauded the Bretton Woods Agreement and the wonderful things it would do for people, how we would make loans, and all that. Instead of making loans to other countries you are out now making them gifts. Your whole intent and effort is to give something away that belongs to the American people. You do not think of trying to do the things that can be done on a good, sound business basis, but you run around the world giving America away. Then you came in here with the Dumbarton Oaks Conference, and how you lauded the Dumbarton Oaks Agreement and how it was going to do a great deal for the world. You want this country to run the affairs of all the other countries. You meddle in their affairs too much to suit me. I want to say to you that when this is all over and you stop giving money to these foreign countries because you can no longer give when you are broke, they will all turn against you, turn on you, and you will wonder who is your friend.

The gentleman from Ohio makes the statement that it is going to cost $30,000,000,000 to fix up our Armed Forces because we do not go in and take the lion's share of all these organizations. I do not agree with him. He is on the wrong road to peace. I think that you are entirely wrong when you appropriate $15,000,000,000 a year for our Armed Forces, when you spend a billion and a half dollars and more in foreign countries to arm those countries right under Stalin's nose. Suppose Stalin should come over here and arm Mexico and Cuba. You would rise up in holy horror and say: "That is no way to get peace." It is no way to get peace when we arm all of the countries of the world. You are only building up an organization here for war, and every one of you knows it. There is not one of you who does not believe that. If you do not, you want to go to a psychiatrist to look you over.

If you prepare for war, you generally get war. If we used our good offices to try to settle our differences by peaceful means, by arbitration and conciliation, we could no doubt prevent war. We would save our country and our boys. What was gained by World War II? Happiness? Peace? Good will? No; nothing but distrust, discontent, disillusion, debt, destruction, and death. Let there never be another war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

THE RESULT OF INTERNATIONALISM

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] generated a little heat. Apparently he does not like some of us who disagree with this foreign policy which we have been following for lo, all these many years. Of course, that is his privilege as it is also his privilege to express his opinion, not only of our ideas but of us personally.

The gentleman spoke about the United Nations. What has the United Nations accomplished to date? What has the head of the United Nations been doing recently? He has been in Russia trying to compromise with, and conciliate Joe Stalin. Since the day in 1933 the United States recognized the Russian Government we have been in trouble.

Our foreign policy over the years has involved us in two wars. I ask you now, what have we won? I remember very well when we were told that the British Navy was our defense. There is now no British Navy.

We are now told our first line of defense is in Europe—but under Acheson we need some in the East—in China.

What about this armament program that the gentleman from Ohio talks about and this foreign policy of ours, giving to all the other nations on the theory that they will help us in time of war? Does the gentleman deep down in his heart believe any one of those nations which is receiving our money, our military aid, will help us if war comes? I wonder whether the gentleman, I repeat, deep down in his heart honestly and sincerely believes any one of them would go to war and fight if the United States and Russia became involved. There have been plenty of statements in the press from informed sources that if war with Russia came we would have to fight it alone.

He talks about the cost of defense. How does anyone know it will cost $30,000,000,000? I do not know where he got that figure. Nor has he any assurance that our foreign policy will prevent war, give us peace.

Do you know how much World War I cost us, not in money or property, for I care not so much about that? We can recover from a financial depression. But how much did it cost us in suffering, in blood, in the death of young men and women?

What did World War II cost us in the same terms? Have you ever figured it out? What will be our future bill for the veterans we are under deepest obligation to aid?

As the gentleman from Pennsylvania asked, how long do you think 150 or 160 million people can support the rest of the world? The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD] told us here earlier in the day that the debt we have now amounts to about $1,700 for each man, woman, and child. Has anyone told us how many men, women, and children cannot, will not, pay 1 cent of that debt and what the proportion is that the workers of America, those of us who have earned a dollar, who have saved a dollar, who have earned dollars by getting down in the dirt or working in the factory, mill, or mine, must pay?

I get tired, too, sometimes. I can take criticism and the gentleman should take it. The man who cannot take criticism should get out of Congress. He has no business here, because that is what our lot will always be. How much money now, I ask, have all these advocates of this giving or spending taken from our people who work? How much have those people earned by honest labor, their sweat, their callouses on their hands? How much? Altogether too many of them have calluses from loafing in swivel leather-cushioned chairs in air-cooled offices. They can sit around and tell people how to spend their money, and they can aid in giving away the hard-earned dollars of our people, but they did very little either to create wealth or to practice thrift. What have we got now out of the policy we have been following? What is the present situation? Five years after the second World War ended, after the fighting ended, what have we? Have we liberty and freedom in America? Oh, no. They are clamping down even on the Members of Congress trying to restrict their rights to express their opinions given to them under the Constitution. What have we accomplished abroad? Is there peace in the world? Our young men and our young women and the people working at home won the war. The politicians and the American internationalists lost the peace and the victory won through suffering and death. What have we now? A national debt about to bankrupt us and the threat of another war. That is the result of your foreign policy, of the policy of the internationalists—not of the isolationists.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JUDD. I understand that this concludes debate on the resolution and the vote will be put over until tomorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be determined in the House. The Chairman has no information as to that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say that the understanding is, as far as I know, there will be no vote today. The majority leader was obliged to go to the White House for a conference.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOLIFIELD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the resolution (H. J. Res. 334) to amend certain laws providing for membership and participation by the United States in certain international organizations, pursuant to House Resolution 350, he reported the resolution back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 334 be postponed until tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. It is my understanding that under the unanimous-consent request made by the gentleman from Montana, this measure will be the first order of business tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on House Joint Resolution 334.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PERKINS (at the request of Mr. CHELF) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. BOYKIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. JENISON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

(Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include newspaper comments and other documents.)

FREE SPEECH, A FREE PRESS, THE RIGHT TO PETITION, OR THE GAG AND A DICTATOR

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the liberty of the citizen, the security of the Nation, cannot be preserved if freedom of speech, a free press, the right to petition the Congress, is denied or impaired.

The representative, republican form of Government which was given us by the founding fathers in the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, cannot exist if a President or a political party or one branch of the Federal Government can by either force or through fear stifle criticism.

Equally true is it that the freedom of the citizen, the security of the Republic, can be undermined and destroyed through the influence of secret, powerful, continuous propaganda, the result of which is to destroy the effectiveness of legislation.

Hence it was that the Congress, alarmed by the fear that pressure groups, through propaganda, were exerting a strong and improper effect upon the legislative process, enacted the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act—title III of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, Public 601 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, August 2, 1946, chapter 753, title 3, section 303; Sixtieth Statutes, page 840; Second United States Code, chapter 8, section 261.

REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT DOES NOT DEFINE LOBBYING

Strange as it may seem, the act does not define lobbying.

It provides for the keeping of detailed accounts of contributions made for the purpose of lobbying.

The act provides for the filing with the Clerk of the House, between the first and tenth day of each calendar quarter, of a statement containing detailed information of the activities of the lobbyist.

Section 307, being section 266 of title 2 of the code, designates the persons to whom the lobbying act is applicable as follows:

THE ACT PUNISHES ANYONE WHO COLLECTS OR RECEIVES MONEY OR VALUABLE THING IN AN ATTEMPT TO INFLUENCE LEGISLATION

SEC. 266. Persons to whom chapter is applicable:

The provisions of this chapter shall apply to any person (except a political committee as defined in chapter 8 of this title, and duly organized State or local committees of a political party), who by himself, or through any agent or employee or other persons in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly, solicits, collects, or receives money or any other thing of value to be used principally to aid, or the principal purpose of which person is to aid, in the accomplishment of any of the following purposes:

(a) The passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the United States.

(b) To influence, directly or indirectly, the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the United States. (Aug. 2, 1946, ch. 753, title III, sec. 307, 60 Stat. 841.)

The succeeding section, section 308, being section 267 of title 2 of the code, requiring the registration of lobbyists with the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House, provides that—

SEC. 267. (a) Any person who shall engage himself for pay or for any consideration for the purpose of attempting to influence the passage or defeat of any legislation by the Congress of the United States shall, before doing anything in furtherance of such object, register with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate and shall give to those officers in writing and under oath, his name and business address, the name and address of the person by whom he is employed, and in whose interest he appears or works, the duration of such employment, how much he is paid and is to receive, by whom he is paid or is to be paid, how much he is to be paid for expenses, and what expenses are to be included. Each such person so registering shall, between the 1st and 10th day of each calendar quarter, so long as his activity continues, file with the Clerk, and Secretary a detailed report under oath of all money received and expended by him during the preceding calendar quarter in carrying on his work; to whom paid; for what purposes; and the names of any papers, periodicals, magazines, or other publications in which he has caused to be published any articles or editorials; and the proposed legislation he is employed to support or oppose. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any person who merely appears before a committee of the Congress of the United States in support of or opposition to legislation; nor to any public official acting in his official capacity; nor in the case of any newspaper or other regularly published periodical (including any individual who owns, publishes, or is employed by any such newspaper or periodical) which in the ordinary course of business publishes news items, editorials, or other comments, or paid advertisements, which directly or indirectly urge the passage or defeat of legislation, if such newspaper, periodical, or individual, engages in no further or other activities in connection with the passage or defeat of such legislation, other than to appear before a committee of the Congress of the United States in support of or in opposition to such legislation.

Section 311, being section 270 of title 2 of the code, exempts from the Lobbying Act the practices and activities which are regulated by the Federal Corrupt Practices Act—Second United States Code, chapter 8, section 241.

DISCUSSION OF THE LOBBYING ACT IN YALE LAW JOURNAL

Discussions of the Lobbying Act will be found in the January 1947 issue of the Yale Law Journal, volume 56:

In a world in which the center of political gravity is shifting from legislature to executive the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946[1] represents an attempt by Congress to reassess and strengthen its position as an integral part of representative government. Congress has recognized the need for reorganizing and streamlining the decision-making process if it is to recapture its position as the dominant policy determining branch of Government. Reformation of the standing committees, increased use of governmental experts, higher salaries for Members, prohibition of private legislation, regulation of lobbying activities are all methods of improving the intelligence function of Government so as to increase the probability of rational legislative decision.

The provisions of the act which regulate lobbying are, therefore, to be regarded as one element in a larger scheme to improve present political processes. Democratic political theory assumes that rational decision can best be reached after hearing and evaluating the interests of the component members of society. These interests are in theory expressed by individuals through the medium of their elected representatives in the legislature. Election of these representatives on a geographical basis overlooks the fact that individuals identify their interests not only with a State or political subdivision, but more importantly with a business, economic, social, or fraternal group. Technological advances in communications and transportation have facilitated group interests which are no longer confined within political boundaries. The failure of the Constitution to provide for group representation, the decline of the political party as a prompter of opinion and policy, the intrusion of government into virtually all fields of economic activity, and the increasing complexity of modern legislative problems have led to the development of a powerful extra-legal machinery for achieving group aims. Today legislation is the result of a compromise between these conflicting group interests, but survival of geographical representation largely obscures the functional basis for legislative action.

Two groups have advanced remedies designed to reconcile the existing fact situation with political theory. The first seeks a means by which group interests can be fitted into the formal pattern of government, a system of functional representation as a substitute for, or supplement to, existing political institutions. On the other hand, a second group regards the problem of representation as subordinate to a rationalization of the whole legislative process. Their emphasis is upon administrative efficiency, extension of Federal research and information services, increased governmental planning, and bringing lobbying activities into the open. It is this view which Congress has espoused in the Reorganization Act.

THE PROBLEM

If lobbying is defined in its broadest terms as an attempt by individuals or groups to influence governmental decision, it is apparent that in some form it inheres in all government. American history is full of examples of legislation passed at the instance of and for the benefit of special interests. But lobbying today is both qualitatively and quantitatively a different problem from lobbying in the past. Whereas the old-style lobby, confined almost entirely to representatives of business interests, operated secretly and depended for its success upon personal solicitation of legislators, often accompanied by corruption; such methods are largely obsolete today. Modern lobbyists, or legislative agents, act on behalf of almost every conceivable business, economic, and social group, generally operated openly and frankly, and rely upon public opinion, real or stimulated, through judicious use of publicity and propaganda, to compel legislative action. * * *

Pressure groups with large memberships are an effective threat to an elective officeholder through the votes they control and the large segment of public opinion they represent; those with a smaller popular base can secure legislative consideration of their proposals only by stimulating or feigning public approbation.

Legislative investigations aimed at disclosing the extent of lobbying practices bear striking testimony to the effectiveness of utilization of mass channels of propaganda provided by the newspaper, the radio, the school, the theater, and the church. Pressure can be brought on legislators by publicity campaigns designed to prompt constituents, within or without the pressure group, to bring influence to bear by writing letters or sending telegrams, at election dates, candidates, regardless of party affiliation, considered favorably disposed toward group interests can be supported by the organization; or public opinion can be skillfully molded to identify the public interest with legislation favored by the group. * * *

Even if no practical or constitutional difficulties were encountered, few observers today would advocate the abolition of pressure groups or forbid the activities of lobbyists. In addition to providing an unofficial form of functional representation, pressure-group activities which publicize the legislative process, focus attention upon the voting records of Congressmen, and keep the public informed as to the content and significance of legislative proposals are desirable in a democracy. The expert analysis of bills made by the competent lobbyist before congressional committees, and the link he provides between legislators and a large segment of the public, may well improve the quality of legislative decision. While the larger and more cohesive the interest represented the more justification can be found for its activities, it remains true that the smallest minority has a right to be heard. It is hopeless to classify lobbies in terms of "good" or "bad," i. e., those which concern themselves with what they conceive to be the public welfare and those which work for the direct interests, usually economic, of their membership. All lobbies identify their interests with those of the general public and may, in particular situations, be justified in doing so. The danger to rational legislative decision lies not from hearing the claims of organized groups, but from inability to determine when those claims legitimately represent the welfare of the general public. This difficulty stems from the ignorance of legislators amidst the growing complexity of governmental functions, the unequal power of pressure groups, and the abuses which have survived the old lobby or arisen in the new lobby.

The evils disclosed by legislative investigations of lobbying fall roughly into two categories: (1) Activities which leave the public and legislators with inadequate or unbalanced information on which to make decisions; and (2) activities which coerce or corrupt legislators.

Pressure-group propaganda aimed primarily at influencing the public is often characterized by misrepresentation or distortion of fact, made more effective by concealment of source. When the source of a statement is undisclosed, or appears nonpartisan, legislators and the public, ignorant of motivation, cannot evaluate possible bias. Special interests have often created a favorable climate of opinion by such questionable practices as controlling newspaper editorial policy by placement or withdrawal of advertising; sending "canned copy" to country presses; hiring radio commentators and columnists to express favorable views, educators to write textbooks, and speakers to address clubs, schools, and churches without revelation of the contract of employment.

While most lobbyists openly admit their affiliations, many are prone to exaggerate the size and cohesion of their membership and sometimes work for interests other than those they claim to represent. Oftentimes one group will serve as a "front" for another, disguising the partisan nature of the views it advocates, some lobbies of this type exist on paper only. The forces of group opinion can be magnified by instigation of letters, telegrams, and phone calls to Congressmen which, though the sole creation of a special interest group, create a false impression of opinion in the legislator's home district.

Activities which coerce or corrupt Congressmen are a hangover from the old lobby, and, though of lesser importance, are occasionally resorted to. Included in this category are such crude devices as bribery, threats, and promises of financial security, as well as the subtler techniques of social pressure. (1947 Yale Law Journal. vol. 56, pp. 304–311.)

Section 305 (a) provides that "Every person receiving any contributions or expending any money" to influence legislation must file a detailed statement every calendar quarter with the Clerk of the House. The term "person" again is defined to include any individual or group of persons, corporation, partnership, or association, but excludes anyone registering under the Corrupt Practices Act.

As in the case of individual lobbyists, the provisions of section 305 are limited by section 307. Thus construed, only those organizations which solicit money or receive contributions principally to aid in the influencing of legislation, or those receiving or expending money whose principal purpose is to influence, directly or indirectly, legislation, must register. Obviously, the efficacy of the provision hinges on judicial interpretation of the word "principal."

Past congressional investigations have disclosed the fact that the most important pressure groups today are the National Association of Manufacturers, the chamber of commerce, the A. F. of L., the CIO, various trade and professional associations, labor groups, farm associations, and veterans' organizations. All of these special interests could argue that their principal activity is dissemination of information within the group for business or social purposes, trade promotion, or research, and that their lobbying activities, however extensive, are not the principal purpose of the organization. Such an interpretation would completely emasculate the act; almost no group which exercises a substantial influence over public or legislative opinion would be required to register. Groups spending hundreds of thousands of dollars in propaganda activities would be exempt from reporting such expenditures, while other groups spending only insignificant sums would have to submit detailed accounts.

Despite the fact that a literal interpretation of "principal" makes little sense in the light of the factual situation, a strong argument to support this view can be made from the legislative history of section 307. The Smith bill, from which the section was copied almost verbatim, originally used the phraseology "in whole or in part," and its sponsor substituted the word "principally" when the breadth of the former provision was brought to his attention. When asked whether labor and fraternal organizations would have to register, Representative SMITH replied in the negative. He stated that the provision was intended to exclude many large organizations with thousands and millions of members who spent only a minor part of their funds influencing legislation.

In debate on the instant act it was stated that the groups which were included in this section were "those whose principal purpose, not incidental purpose" was "to influence the passage of legislation." Juxtaposition of the words "principal" and "incidental" indicates that all purposes of an organization which are not "incidental" are in the category covered by the act, suggesting a much broader meaning of the word "principal" than it might be given if taken alone.

A classification of activities which only incidentally influence legislation can be found in cases construing provisions of the Internal Revenue Code. Tax exemption is provided for gifts to charitable and educational organizations "no substantial part of the activities of which is * * * attempting to influence legislation." The test imposed by the courts has been whether or not the political activity is incidental to the main purposes of the organization, and relevant criteria include its stated purpose as determined by the article of association, the amount expended in political activities as contrasted with other business, the presence or absence of a political program, and the controversial nature of the propaganda promulgated. Under these rules gifts to trade associations, labor unions, professional groups, and social reform organizations have been deemed taxable. Although the analogy of the instant problem to taxation is far from perfect, neither the classification of groups nor the criteria imposed seem entirely inapposite.

If a test case should bring section 307 before the courts for judicial construction, any one of three results is possible. The court could construe "principal" narrowly to mean "primary," "chief," or "most important." Although this interpretation would exempt most pressure groups and vitiate the act, it would, nevertheless, have the support of Representative SMITH's remarks, coupled with legal dogma requiring a strict construction of criminal statutes. * * *

An interpretation of "principal" to mean "substantial," or any activity not purely incidental, would overcome most of the objections to which the narrowed construction is subject and has already proved workable in tax cases. (Yale Law Journal, 1947, vol. 56, pp. 321–324.)

CONCLUSION

It is probable that the Lobbying Act will prove largely ineffective. The loopholes provided by the "principal" requirement, the incompleteness of the information required to be filed, the lack of an adequate enforcement agency, and the weakness of the publicity provisions may combine to make the act as dead a law as similar State statutes.

Congress has recognized the need for regulating pressure group activities. It has seen the solution not as prohibition of an undesirable practice but as an adaptation of present imperfect mechanisms for expressing group opinion into a political pattern which will utilize this opinion to improve the decision-making process. It is to be hoped that this growing realization of the problem will lead Congress to amend the present act to effectuate more nearly the congressional purpose. (The Yale Law Journal, vol. 56: 304, pp. 331–332.)

Reference to the conclusions of the writer in the Columbia Law Review, 1947, are similar to those reached by the writer of the article in the Yale Law Journal:

CONCLUSION

Those who attempt to influence the passage or defeat of legislation fall into three classes: (1) The organized pressure group, (2) the paid lobbyist, and (3) the citizen who expresses his individual opinion. It seems unnecessary, and perhaps undesirable, to regulate the third class. Elimination of the undesirable aspects of lobbying by the first two groups may best be accomplished by publicizing their activities. Apparently the most feasible distinction between those who are to be regulated and those who are not is to be drawn in terms of the amount of money expended to influence legislation. In these respects the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act is theoretically sound, and its accounting and registration provisions would serve to accomplish its purpose if the act were more precisely phrased.

But the act was neither carefully drafted nor fully considered. Its ambiguous terms encourage evasion, and in providing for enforcement Congress has failed to draw upon the experience of the States in dealing with this problem. Their experience indicates that the regular law-enforcement agencies are not adapted to handling the peculiarly specialized duties involved in regulation of lobbying. Whether enforcement is best accomplished by the establishment of a permanent legislative committee for that purpose is immaterial, provided some agency is given the sole duty of enforcing the act. Effective regulation of lobbying requires correction of the faults of the act. (Columbia Law Review, vol. 47, pp. 108–109.)

RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING INVESTIGATION BY HOUSE LOBBYING COMMITTEE

That it might, to some extent at least, be informed of the propaganda, the sources from which it came and the motives back of it, the Congress has in the past authorized committees of both Houses to hold hearings, make investigations, and to report back to the Congress the result of those hearings.

The most recent attempt of the House along this line is House Resolution 298 of the Eighty-first Congress, first session, adopted August 12, 1949, which created a committee of seven, which was "authorized and directed to conduct a study and investigation of, first, all lobbying activities intended to influence, encourage, promote, or retard legislation; and, second, all activities of agencies of the Federal Government intended to influence, encourage, promote, or retard legislation."

The committee was given the usual investigatory powers.

At the first meeting of the committee, which was held on March 27, 1950, the chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN], among other things, said:

When the Eighty-first Congress decided to take another look at the lobbying problem, the assignment given this committee was unlimited in scope.

It is almost impossible to investigate all pressure groups and governmental lobbying in the limited time and with the appropriation available. We can, however, investigate broadly and report generally on the forms which lobbying has taken in the 3½ years of the existence of the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act of 1946.

This act is a very significant and important forward step, pioneering in a field in which the Congress has always been vitally concerned. The Congress never before had the kind of information which is now available to us under the terms of this act. The present act does not regulate lobbying. It merely requires registration and a detailed account of contributions and expenditures. We have been able to make a detailed study and survey of the forms, and of the material and information furnished on these forms, some of which are very abbreviated and others more complete.

The word "lobbying" has developed unfavorable connotations over the years. One reason for that may be that most congressional investigations of lobbying activities in the past were designed to show up fraud or corruption or sinister or evil practices. I personally look upon lobbying as necessary and essential. While lobbying in itself is not an evil, there are evils in lobbying.

* * * * *

We must keep before us at all times the spirit and letter of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, wherein the right of petition is expressed:

"Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for redress of grievances."

NECESSITY OF DISTINGUISHING BETWEEN FREE SPEECH, FREE PRESS, RIGHT TO PETITION, AND ILLEGAL LOBBYING

The committee is at the outset confronted by a most difficult problem. The most painstaking care and soundest judgment must be used if the result of its action is to be constructive, rather than destructive.

If the result of the committee's action is to silence critics of the party in power, of governmental or administrative policy and practices; to silence critics of attempts, direct or indirect, by propaganda or political pressure to ignore or run counter to the principles upon which our Government is founded; if the committee, through its staff or those working with it, creates an atmosphere of fear, intimidates, makes silent, all critics of the administration, of governmental policy, of corruption in office, of individuals who are disloyal, then the committee will not only have failed of the purpose for which it was created, but it will have contributed to the establishment of a dictatorship and the always resulting tyranny.

If the committee, its staff or those working with it, lends itself to those individuals or those organizations which do not believe in our form of government, which advocate a surrender of our sovereignty and independence, which stir up and encourage class conflict, then it will find itself in the same position as those who would by force destroy the citizen's freedom, the security of the Republic.

The committee's first task, and perhaps the most difficult one, would seem to be to accurately define the line of demarcation between free speech, a free press, the right to petition, and the use of propaganda, the application of pressure, by individuals or organizations using vast sums of money to corruptly influence the enactment, or the enforcement, of the laws of the land.

Under the resolution, one of the duties of the committee is to conduct a study and investigation of all lobbying activities intended to influence, encourage, promote, or retard legislation.

In my humble judgment, the first task confronting the committee would be to obtain, no matter how difficult the task, an accurate definition of lobbying.

The committee should then confine its activities to lobbying which is improper or unlawful, strictly avoid even the appearance of interfering with free speech, a free press, the right to petition the Congress.

It is extremely difficult, in view of the record, to understand the contradictory statements of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

UNSUCCESSFUL ATTEMPT FROM THE FLOOR TO OBTAIN FROM BUCHANAN DEFINITION OF "LOBBYING"

On Thursday, June 15, 1950, when an attempt was made to obtain from the chairman a definition of lobbying, the following occurred—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 8691–8693:

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. The thing that is troubling me is to learn what constitutes lobbying within the meaning of the act creating the lobbying committee.

It has been the belief of many of us for some time at least that lobbying was a specialized activity, that a lobbyist was one who advocated the passage or the rejection of legislation, one who engaged in persuasion for hire—the purpose being to influence legislation.

Now it seems that lobbying—at least I gather that the committee accepts this view—that a man is a lobbyist if he attempts to influence legislation, no matter what purpose motivates him. Am I right? I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] is that the fact?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I may say that the Committee on Lobbying has come to no conclusion as to any definition of the word lobbying.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. It would seem to me that the first thing the committee should do—I hesitate even to offer a suggestion—that the first thing the committee should do would be to get a definition of lobbying. Can the gentleman tell me what he considers lobbying to be? Can he give me some definition?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would remind the gentleman from Michigan that ours is an investigating committee, not a legislative committee; that the definition of the word "lobbying" comes within the realm of the proper legislative committee of the House; it is up to them to define the term and to make their recommendation.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. With all due respect, if the chairman of the committee investigating lobbying cannot give me a definition of lobbying, I cannot see how he is going to get very far. How can a committee investigate lobbying if it does not know what it is looking for, if it does not know the definition of lobbying?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I came in when a statement was being made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania in which I understood him to say that the committee had not yet determined what lobbying was. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is correct.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Do you mean the committee does not know what lobbying is?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I asked the chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] if he knew what lobbying was, and he said he had not made up his mind. He sits here now, and if he wants to give a definition of lobbying, I will be glad to have it, and I think the Members of the House and the people of the country would be glad to know what he is trying to investigate.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. How can you investigate something if you do not know what it is?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Well, ask him.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I might say that in the present Lobbying Act there is no definition, and I do not feel that it is within the realm of the investigating committee to state at this stage of the game and set up any definition of the term lobbying.

BUCHANAN'S LAPSE OF MEMORY AND INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS RELATING TO DEFINITION OF "LOBBYING"

If the replies of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN], made on the floor mean anything at all, the meaning is that he had not attempted to obtain for the use of the committee, and that he did not have in mind, any definition of lobbying. Note his statement last above quoted:

Mr. BUCHANAN. I might say that in the present Lobbying Act there is no definition.

That statement is correct. The gentleman then continued:

And I do not feel that it is within the realm of the investigating committee to state at this stage of the game and set up any definition of the term "lobbying."

BUCHANAN'S DEFINITIONS OF "LOBBYING"

Permit me now, without in any way being critical, to quote from pages 6 and 7 of part 1 of the hearings before the gentleman's committee, held on the 27th day of March 1950. The following is from the statement of the chairman:

As our resolution states, we are to investigate "all lobbying activities."

Before calling on our first witness I want to read a few definitions of the term "lobbying." I am indebted for these to Dr. George B. Galloway, senior specialist in American Government for the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress—and, incidentally, one of our witnesses here tomorrow morning—for some definitions of the term. Many of the definitions he has supplied us are taken from laws intended to regulate lobbyists in one way or another. I shall save those for tomorrow when they become more relevant to the subject matter of the hearing.

But some of the definitions are general, and I will read a few:

From Webster's New International Dictionary: "To address or solicit members of a legislative body in the lobby or elsewhere, as before a committee, with intent to influence legislation."

From the report of the House Investigating Committee of 1933: "The activity of a person or body of persons seeking to influence Congress in any way whatsoever."

According to Senator Thomas, of Colorado, in 1913, lobbying is "any effort to substitute for the public interest a private interest. The lobbyist," he said, is "a man who tries to induce the legislator to forget temporarily all the people and to do something that will promote the fortunes of a single citizen or a group of citizens."

The laws of Georgia of 1923 defined it as "personal solicitation not addressed solely to the judgment of the legislators."

And, along the same lines, Wolff's Statutes (La.), 1920, defined it as "an attempt to influence the action of a member of the legislature by any method other than appealing to his reason."

For some of those definitions one might find wide disagreement.

The final definition I will read today comes from the Yale Law Journal of January 1947, wherein lobbying is described as "any attempt by individuals or groups to influence governmental decision."

The last one is, in my opinion, the one we should follow in our investigation. It is as broad in its scope as our own investigation.

Again, if the foregoing means anything at all, it means that the committee, through the chairman, early in the hearings had and adopted a definition of lobbying.

What, then, did the chairman of the committee mean, in answer to my question from the well of the House on June 15—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 8691—when he said, and I quote:

Mr. BUCHANAN. I may say that the Committee on Lobbying has come to no conclusion as to any definition of the word "lobbying."

One conclusion which might be put upon his contradictory remarks would be that when, on June 15, he was asked for a definition of lobbying he had completely forgotten his own statement made at the committee's first hearing.

LEGAL DEFINITIONS OF LOBBYING

There are other definitions of lobbying:

Lobby: As a noun, a passage or hall of communication, especially when large enough to serve also as a waiting room, etc., as in the British House of Commons and in the capitols of the United States.

Lobbying: The term "lobbying" has a well-defined meaning in this country, and signifies to address or solicit members of a legislative body in the reception hall or elswhere with the purpose of influencing their votes. Presentation by argument in a public and legitimate manner the injurious effect proposed legislation will have on a particular business does not constitute lobbying.

Lobby member: A person who frequents the lobby of a house of legislation for the purpose of influencing measures.

Lobby services: A term generally defined to mean the use of personal solicitation, the exercise of personal influence, and improper or corrupt methods, whereby legislative or official action is to be the product.

Lobbyist: One who frequents the lobby or the precincts of a legislature or other deliberative assembly with the view of influencing the views of its members. Sometimes the term is defined as a person who hangs around legislators and solicits them for the purpose of influencing legislation. (54 C. J. S., pp. 659–660.)

There have been many attempts to distinguish between conduct and propaganda which is lawful and proper, an exercise of the right of free speech, a free press, the right to petition the Congress, and efforts to influence legislation through improper, corrupt, or illegal means.

Space and time do not permit an exhaustive discussion of the subject, but a footnote carries brief excerpts from some of the authorities, which aid in drawing a distinction between legal and illegal activities which tend to influence governmental action:

The law will not lend its aid to the enforcement of any agreement which expressly or impliedly contemplates the employment of corrupt or otherwise improper methods to influence the official conduct of legislators or others charged with public duty. But it does not forbid all efforts of interested persons or classes to secure the adoption of desired legislative measures. The courts do not condemn the attempts to secure legislation for legitimate purposes and in a legitimate manner. A person may contract to appear before the legislature to present, openly and fairly, the merits of a proposed claim or to urge the passage of a bill, and provided he openly acknowledges his interest in the measure, and does not resort to any questionable and unfair methods in urging the consideration of the subject matter in which he is interested, a recovery may be had on such contract. Thus, an agreement to render proper professional services, for example, the professional services of an attorney, is not illegal. Although it has been said that if a layman engages to procure or aids in obtaining the passage of a bill, he necessarily contracts for lobby services, this statement appears to be too broad. Where the services to be rendered are of a legitimate nature, the fact that the person employed is not a member of the legal profession would seem to make no difference, at least where it appears that the services require special knowledge and training and that the person who is to render them has qualified himself to do so. * * *

The fact that the agreement contemplates the use of money does not necessarily render it void. The use of money to influence legislation is not always wrong. Whether its use is wrong depends altogether upon the manner of its use. If it is used directly in bribing or indirectly in working up a personal influence upon individual members by means well known to lobbyists, which aim to secure a member's vote without reference to his judgment, then it is illegal. If, however, it is to be used for the publication of circulars or pamphlets or otherwise for the collection or distribution of information openly and publicly among the members of the legislature, there is nothing objectionable or improper.

As the law does not presume that a person intends to violate its provisions, the general principle controlling the construction of an agreement to influence legislation when the agreement itself does not in terms stipulate for improper means seems to be that it will be upheld, unless the use of such means appears by necessary implication. The test is, Does the contract, by its terms or by necessary implication, require the performance of acts which are of a corrupt character or which have a corrupting tendency? This test has, however, not been applied in the case of agreements to influence legislation by withdrawing opposition to legislative action. Such agreements have been declared to be against public policy.

Personal influence or solicitation: The distinction between valid and invalid agreements to further legislation appears to be that in the former the services or the results thereof are used, or designed to be used, either before the legislature itself or some committee thereof as a body, while in the latter a person is employed to exert his personal influence, whether great or little, with individual members, or to labor privately in any form with them, out of the legislative halls, in favor of or against any act or subject of legislation. The cases are in general accord in holding that all agreements stipulating for the performance of lobbying services, in the sense of exerting private or personal influence with members of the legislature, or in interviewing or bringing pressure to bear on them, outside of the legislative halls, or which by their terms imply that such services are to be rendered, are void as contrary to sound legislation and public policy. (12 American Journal, chs. 203–204, pp. 703–706.)

But back to the record and the chairman of the committee.

From page 7 of part 1 of the hearings held by the gentleman's committee, permit me to again quote him. Referring to the definitions which he had read, the chairman said:

For some of those definitions, one might find wide disagreement.

The final definition I will read today comes from the Yale Law Journal of January 1947, wherein lobbying is described as "any attempt by individuals or groups to influence governmental decision."

The last one is, in my opinion, the one we should follow in our investigation. It is as broad in its scope as our own investigation.

When the chairman read from the Yale Law Journal of January 1947, the definition of "lobbying" which, in his opinion, was the one which the committee should follow, he inadvertently misquoted the Journal.

The statement from the Journal which the gentleman apparently was attempting to follow reads as follows:

If lobbying is defined in its broadest terms as any attempt by individuals or groups to influence governmental decision, it is apparent that in some form it inheres in all government. (56 Yale Law Journal, pp. 304, 306 (for 1947).)[2]

Mr. Speaker, that cannot be the meaning of the term "lobbying activities" which the committee was authorized to make. If it were, then the committee would have the power to modify, to qualify, the right of free speech, a free press, to petition the Congress.

This it could accomplish by requiring one who exercised any or all of those rights to appear before it and give an account of all the means which enabled him to exercise that right.

The committee, by its actions in requiring detailed information as to how and from whom one received the funds which enabled him to speak, write, or petition the Congress freely, would be attaching a penalty to the exercise of that right.

If one, under the Constitution, has the right to speak freely, the Congress is without power, so long as the right is exercised in such a manner as not to interfere with the national welfare or the rights of other citizens, to adopt any legislation which in the slightest degree limits that right.

HOFFMAN'S DEFINITION OF "LOBBYING"

In my own humble judgment, lobbying which the Congress under the Constitution has the power to regulate, which the Congress by the adoption of title III of Public Law 601, Seventy-ninth Congress, intended to regulate, might be defined in this way:

Any attempt—other than through the presentation of facts, expressions of opinion labeled as such, or appeals to reason—by individuals or groups, through pressure, political or economic, the offer of reward or the threat of punishment, or the use of money, to influence the enactment or administration of legislation or any governmental activity, is hereby declared to be illegal lobbying.

Or, phrasing it in another way:

Illegal lobbying is any attempt—other than through the presentation of facts, expressions of opinion labeled as such, or appeals to reason—by individuals or groups, through pressure, political or economic, the offer of reward or threat of punishment, to influence the enactment or administration of legislation or governmental activities.

QUERY AS TO PURPOSE OF LOBBYING COMMITTEE'S STAFF, I. E., "WORKING ONE SIDE OF THE STREET"

From the well of the House on the 15th, I raised the issue as to whether the staff of the House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities, in its study and investigation, was engaged in an effort to ascertain the individuals or organizations who were engaged in improper or illegal lobbying, the purpose of such lobbying and the methods used; or whether there was justification for the thought that the staff was itself engaged in propagandizing for administration policies, left-wing activities, and in an effort to suppress critics of policies or principles to which the staff adheres, critics of the administration, those who were attempting to expose Communists.

Some doubts as to the intentions of some members of the committee staff were raised in my mind by what at the time seemed to be a one-sided inquiry and search for information, and by the attempt of some member of the committee's staff to publicize, without authority, the circulation by Congressmen of frankable material.

There seems to be evidence that staff members were engaged in what was referred to as "working one side of the street."

First. "As to working one side of the street": On May 31, the chairman sent out a letter, seeking detailed information, to some 166 corporations, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the list of organizations to which the chairman's request was sent is significant in that practically all, other than those which were exclusively engaged in business, have been and are vigorous proponents of a constitutional form of government, have been critical of the New Deal and of the Communists.

So far as I was able to learn at that time, friends of the administration, like Kaiser, Latex Corp., Consolidated Vultee, the CIO, the PAC, labor organizations supporting the President, or left-wing propaganda organizations, like Friends of Democracy, the Antidefamation League, or other organizations listed by the Attorney General or the House Committee on Un-American Activities as subversive, had not at that time received requests for similar information or subpenas to appear before the committee.

News Bulletin, published here in Washington by Paul O. Peters, in its Friday, June 16, 1950, letter, gives this report on Friends of Democracy:

ARE THESE "FRIENDS OF DEMOCRACY"?

Friends of Democracy, 137 East Fifty-seventh Street, New York, N. Y., recently distributed a confidential report to friends and supporters in which it is stated:

"Extreme rightist groups now very active:

"(1) Very reactionary groups: National Association of Manufacturers; Committee for Constitutional Government; National Industrial Conference Board; Freedoms Foundation; Americans for the Competitive Enterprise System; Wage Earners Committee of the United States of America; National Small Business Association; Conference of American Small Business Organizations; Freedom Forums; Tool Owners' Union; Southern States Industrial Council, Inc.; Foundation for Economic Education.

"(2) 'Anti' organizations of the reactionary variety: National Council for American Education; The Constitutional Educational League; National Economic Council; Judge George W. Armstrong Foundation; Gerald L. K. Smith's Patriotic Tract Society and Christian Nationalist Crusade."

L. M. Birkhead, national director, announced:

"One of the basic jobs that Friends of Democracy does is to collect all the 'anti' propaganda, publications, reports of meetings, facts about organizations and individuals."

Personally, we do not subscribe to the principle that any organization in the United States should set itself up as a snooping agency to gather facts about organizations and individuals.

Over the past 10 years we have, without attempting to snoop, gathered considerable material on L. M. Birkhead and the Friends of Democracy.

On Saturday, April 11, 1942, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in an editorial, Leave It to the FBI, said:

"Friends of Democracy, Inc., with headquarters in Kansas City, sends out an appeal for funds, which says in part:

"'We must continue to be on guard at home as well as abroad. Our own Nation has its quislings who are doing their utmost to disrupt and disunite us.

"'Of course they can't win—they can't, that is, if we Americans stand guard. That is why Friends of Democracy will continue to police these men who have been giving aid and comfort to our enemies both here and abroad. We know their game and we'll beat them at it.

"'Friends of Democracy, which is acting for you as one of the guardians of our democracy, must have $100,000 to do our part of the job of defending our way of life. When you send your contribution you will receive 64 colorful flag stamps.'"

What makes this communication worthy of notice is the fact that on the back of the letterhead is a list of names of prominent Americans, who are described as the "national committee." Among these are: Louis Bromfield, president; Van Wych Brooks, Walter B. Cannon, David Cushman Coyle, John Dewey, Paul H. Douglas, Will Durant, Frank P. Graham, Jay William Hudson, Eduard C. Lindeman, Thomas Mann, Robert A. Millikan, and Rex Stout.

We cannot believe that these people are in favor of organized private spying such as this letter pledges. We cannot believe that they think that work which falls within the province of the FBI should be assumed by this or any other voluntary organization. Friends of Democracy, Inc., has a good record in exposing demagogs and spreaders of religious prejudice, but it is off base this time.

News-Bulletin of Friday, June 16, 1950, reports:

"From the materials we have at hand and from our study of the old Un-American Activities Committee hearings, we conclude that Friends of Democracy, Inc., needs to be fully investigated by an appropriate committee of the Congress, since many of its alleged members have been at one time or another connected with organizations which have been listed as Communist or subversive."

PAUL O. PETERS.

Mr. Speaker, nor have I been able to learn that the committee sent any questionnaire to the Communist Party, United States of America, with national headquarters at 35 East Twentieth Street, New York, N. Y.

Nor did the committee, so far as I have been able to learn, send any such questionnaires to the district and local officials of the Communist Party.

The names of the organizations and the officers, the committee's staff could easily have found on pages 22 to 32, inclusive, of "One Hundred Things You Should Know About Communism," published by the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

Missing from the list of organizations to which the questionnaire went is the Jefferson School of Social Science in New York; the California Labor School; the People's Institute of Applied Religion, located at 4105½ Third Avenue South, Birmingham, Ala.; the Methodist Federation for Social Action, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York; the Protestant, published by Protestant Digest, Inc., 521 Fifth Avenue, New York—all listed by a House committee as subversive organizations.

Then, on page 65 of the same document, there is a list of communistic schools. None of those, which are engaged in lobbying as defined by the definition adopted by the chairman, is listed for interrogation.

Missing from the list of those to whom questionnaires were sent by the Lobbying Activities Committee are some 29 organizations listed as subversive by the Attorney General—all named on page 68 of the report of the Committee on Un-American Activities.

Missing, too, from the list of those from whom the committee's staff was seeking information are all those individuals and organizations, some 33 in number—cited either by the Attorney General or by the House Committee on Un-American Activities as being subversive.

Why is it, may I ask, that the committee's staff is not, as stated by the chairman, "working both sides of the street"?

It is now my understanding that, since the question was raised on the floor of the House on the 8th of June, a few individuals or corporations which might be termed to the left rather than to the right have been called upon for information.

GRILLING THREE ORGANIZATIONS WHICH HAVE BEEN FIGHTING FOR CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT

Perhaps the three most vigorous and effective organizations which have propagandized for constitutional government are the Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc., the Constitutional Educational League, and the National Economic Council.

Over the years, these three organizations have carried on a campaign to expose Communists who had infiltrated into not only the executive departments of the Federal Government, but into the schools, religious, labor, and other groups and organizations. In 1925 John L. Lewis called attention to this infiltration into the labor movement, though later the Communists and their methods were used to organize and establish the CIO. Just recently the CIO has by public sentiment been forced to oust some Communist-controlled unions.

The campaigns of these three organizations—the Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc., the Constitutional Educational League, and the National Economic Council—to educate the American people, to alert them to the necessity of vigilance if the liberty of the citizen and the security of the public were to be maintained, were apparently producing results, becoming more and more effective.

So far as I have been able to learn, the organizations were not carrying on any illegal activities nor were they apparently taking any part in any campaign for the election of any particular individual.

ASKING CORPORATIONS TO DISCLOSE CONTRIBUTIONS TO EDUCATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

Nevertheless, in the questionnaire to the more than 150 corporations, the committee stated that it "specifically desires you to include all expenditures in connection with the following organizations":

1. American Enterprise Association.
2. America's Future, Inc.

3. Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc.
4. Constitutional Educational League.
5. Constitution and Free Enterprise Foundation.
6. Economists National Committee for Monetary Policy.
7. Foundation for Economic Education.
8. Public Affairs Institute.

The committee subpenaed Edward Rumely, Joseph Kamp, and Merwin K. Hart, officers of the three organizations, in an effort to ascertain, among other things, who was supplying funds for the support of these organizations.

Hart, of the National Economic Council, appeared willing to disclose the information requested.

Rumely, of the Committee for Constitutional Government, and Kamp, of the Constitutional Educational League, refused until it was made to appear that the committee had authority to inquire into the activities of the organizations of which they were officers.

If the Lobbying Committee is sincere and if it follows a logical course, will it not then be required to call the officers of the National Republican and Democratic Committees and, using the information now required to be filed, question those who make contributions to the national committees, to disclose, as Hart was required yesterday by Mr. Little, attorney for the committee, to disclose, the organizations and the policies which the contributors to these two national political committees entertain and support?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. If the newspaper reports of that hearing yesterday are correct, it seems to be that both sides of the table, both Democrat and Republican Members, felt that line of inquiry was out of order. Am I right?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I cannot answer adequately, because I did not attend the hearing.

CONTEMPT CONVICTION OF JOSEPH KAMP

In the House on the 5th of June, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] made, and at other times and places others have made, much of Joseph Kamp's conviction on a charge of contempt of the House; also of a conviction of Edward Rumely, of the Committee for Constitutional Government.

It happens that I was a witness before the Anderson committee where Kamp refused to give that committee, which was investigating political expenditures, information which would have disclosed the names of those who were at that time contributors to the Constitutional Educational League.

At that time, I advised Mr. Kamp to answer the questions put to him and told him that, if he persisted in his refusal and if Congress took action, he would undoubtedly be sentenced to jail for contempt of the Congress.

Kamp replied in substance that, inasmuch as the league was not engaged in political activities, the committee has no authority to ask for the names of those who contributed to its support and that, in any event, the disclosure of those contributors would result in merciless persecution by left-wing organizations, such as the Antidefamation League, Friends of Democracy, and organizations which were Communist fronts.

He then stated that, rather than subject his friends to such a smear campaign, to such persecution—and he was then familiar with the Washington Post's persecution of the so-called seditionists, none of whom were ever convicted of that offense—stated that, if the result was jail, he would pay the penalty, and that without whining.

In my mind, he is the victim of his own considered determination to preach constitutional doctrine, to expose Communists, at whatever the cost to himself.

During the last 15 years, communism has had no more factual, vigorous, effective opponent than Joe Kamp. The statements made in the pamphlets which he has written and which the league has distributed have seldom, if ever, been successfully challenged.

Congressman Dies was persecuted when chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities, and finally driven from Congress. The gentleman from Mississippi, Congressman RANKIN and the gentleman from Louisiana, Congressman HÉBERT were removed from that committee, evidently because they were too active against Communists, refused to take orders from those in high places.

To those familiar with the methods of the Communists, of their friends, and of those who are using them, it is not at all strange that they finally got Kamp and that he is now incarcerated in a Washington jail.

Kamp is now paying the price for the freedom from persecution and vilification which others who contributed to the Constitutional Educational League might otherwise have suffered at the hands of left-wing, of Communist, organizations, had he disclosed their names.

It may be that the attack on the Constitutional Educational League and Joseph Kamp, on the Committee for Constitutional Government, and Edward Rumely, engineered by members of the staff of the Lobbying Activities Committee and what was said from the well of the House on June 5 by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] are but coincidental.

Be that as it may, the same pattern is followed in each case.

CHARGES OF BIEMILLER AND PATMAN AGAINST RUMELY

From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 5, page 8078, note the following excerpts:

Mr. BIEMILLER. * * * In 1937, the committee was organized to fight President Roosevelt's proposal to expand the Supreme Court. Frank Gannett, millionaire publisher and a very active reactionary, furnished most of the money, and Edward Rumely most of the work. After the defeat of the proposal Gannett revealed that the committee had mailed out more than 10,000,000 pieces of literature against it and went around bragging of the success of what he called "mail-order government."

Gannett then put his friend and mentor, Edward Rumely, in charge of the committee as executive secretary. This man Rumely—the same now under subpena in the lobby investigation—has a background passing strange for the active director of an organization pretending to 200-percent Americanism.

Shortly after World War I, he was indicted for over-close cooperation with the agents of the German Government—the government with which we had been at war at the time of the alleged cooperation. Mr. Rumely escaped from that situation relatively well—with a sentence to serve a year in the Federal prison at Atlanta.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIEMILLER. I yield to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Is it not a fact that in that case it was disclosed that this man, Edward A. Rumely, received more than a million dollars directly from the German Government, and that money was used to buy a newspaper in New York City and the newspaper was used to spread German propaganda preceding and during the First World War, and he was convicted of espionage and sentenced to the penitentiary? That is the same Rumely?

Mr. BIEMILLER. That is my understanding of the situation exactly.

Mr. PATMAN. And he is the one who is spearheading this organization, which I consider the most outstanding and most dangerous Fascist movement in America and has been for the last 13 years.

Mr. BIEMILLER. I agree entirely with the gentleman from Texas, and later in my remarks I intend to pay tribute to the fine fight which the gentleman from Texas made a few years ago in exposing the machinations of this nefarious organization.

To give you further insight into this episode and Rumely's attitude toward it, considering these paragraphs from hearings held by Senate investigating committee which once expressed curiosity about the funds of the old Committee to Uphold Constitutional Government:

"Senator SCHWELLENBACH. When a man comes in and represents himself as a patriotic American it is relevant to see if it is the same campaign being conducted by you as was conducted by the German Government in 1915——

"Mr. RUMELY. You have no right to say that——

"Senator GREEN. Weren't you convicted and didn't you serve a term in Atlanta?

"Mr. RUMELY. I did because I fought on an unpopular side.

"Senator GREEN. And didn't you take an appeal to the Supreme Court and didn't the Supreme Court deny an appeal of the case?

"Mr. RUMELY. That is correct.

"The CHAIRMAN. Let me read into the record what the Circuit Court of Appeals said that case was all about—I am reading now from Rumely et al. v. U. S. (293 Fed. 532 at p. 533): 'The plaintiffs in error have been convicted under an indictment which charged them with having conspired to defraud the United States from seizing and administering a certain indebtedness of the defendant Rumely to the Imperial German Government.' "

Then, after referring to an essay contest which apparently the Committee for Constitutional Government had held in Texas, the gentleman from Wisconsin continued—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 8079:

And who do you suppose they sent down to take charge of these essay contests? None other than convicted-enemy agent Edward Rumely. A man who brushed off conniving with an enemy government to prejudice the American people against their allies as "choosing the unpopular side." A man who told a House committee that they had no right to question him about his unsavory connections with Franz von Papen, chief foreign conniver for the Kaiser and later for Hitler. A man who was indicted for contempt for refusing to turn over the records of the Committee for Constitutional Government to the Senate committee in 1938. That is the man whom self-styled patriot Frank Gannett chose to go to Texas and conduct essay contests for school children in Americanism.

CHARGES UNJUSTIFIED BY THE RECORD

One listening to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], or reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as quoted above, would reach the conviction that Edward Rumely had committed some heinous offense; that he was an agent of the German government during the war.

Let us for a moment analyze the statements from the RECORD above quoted. Is there any reason why any individual, any organization, was not, is not at liberty through any lawful means, to oppose the late President Roosevelt's proposal to expand the Supreme Court? Some Democratic Senators did oppose that plan, and it was defeated.

Is the Committee for Constitutional Government to now be condemned because it exercised its right of political expression? The statement carries its own absurdity.

Now what about the conviction of Mr. Rumley? So far as I recall, I never met the gentleman. Let him present his own case, cite his own authorities.

The present is not the first time Mr. Rumely has appeared before an investigating committee. From the committee's booklet, Needed Now, permit me to quote the reprint of chapter 8, captioned "The right of privacy," which reads as follows:

(Ch. 8)

Freedom of the citizen is probably our most basic right. And a fundamental of that freedom is what the late Justice Brandeis repeatedly upheld as the right of privacy.

When the reorganization bill of 1938 neared a vote in the Senate, pressure on Congress from both sides was intensive. A special Senate committee to investigate lobbying activities, headed by Senator Sherman Minton, of Indiana, had an excellent opportunity to investigate the activities of both sides. Toward lobbying for the reorganization bill it kept its eyes tightly closed, but about activities of the National Committee To Uphold Constitutional Government, which had done no lobbying, it displayed wide-eyed curiosity.

March 17, 1938, two agents of the Minton committee visited the New York office and demanded that Executive Secretary Rumely give them access to documents of any kind—papers, letters, telegrams—in the Constitutional Committee's files. The investigators would not describe what documents they sought. They proposed to seize and examine everything.

Citizens had long and meekly submitted to demands like these from congressional committees. Sometimes they gave in because they feared it might be dangerous or expensive to defy such demands. But more often they yielded because they did not realize what their constitutional rights were, or their sense of congressional rights and duties was dulled, or because they had never exercised the courage of a good conscience.

According to the fourth amendment to the Constitution:

"The rights of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

Commenting upon this guaranty, the Supreme Court once said, "A governmental fishing expedition into private papers on the possibility they may disclose evidence of crime is contrary to the first principles of justice." Still legislative committee continue to fish in private files.

Dr. Rumely told the Senate committee visitors that they could not fish. He refused to permit them to dragnet the office files of the National Committee To Uphold Constitutional Government either in its New York office or elsewhere. The Minton Committee investigators intimated that this refusal might result in fine and imprisonment. Dr. Rumely still refused, whereupon he was subpenaed for appearance in Washington the next morning before the Senate investigating committee.

When Dr. Rumely took the stand, Senator Minton demanded all documents of the National Committee To Uphold Constitutional Government. Dr. Rumely asked the Senator to describe what documents he sought. Mr. Minton declined to go into details but demanded repeatedly, "all records, papers, memoranda, books, and documents in your possession." Each demand met with refusal. Mr. Minton finally asked, "Will you produce what I have asked for or not?"

"I will not."

Whereupon Dr. Rumely was excused for 5 days. He took counsel with Chairman Gannett and Representative Pettengill. The committee had nothing to hide. Would it be wise to compromise with the Minton Committee? All three conferees opposed compromise because they believed that a firm stand would teach a timely lesson as to the full meaning of constitutional guaranties.

"We'll resist," said Mr. Gannett, "even if it means we go to jail for awhile."

Again Dr. Rumely faced the Minton Committee. Again he refused to surrender the Constitutional Committee's files. Senator Minton tried coaxing.

"No," said the witness.

The Senator tried intimidating.

"No," was the answer.

"In any event," said Senator Minton, "whether these papers are here or in New York you refuse to produce them?"

"Absolutely," said Dr. Rumely.

Whereupon many people in Washington anticipated that something terrible would happen to Dr. Rumely and to other officers of the committee. But no retribution fell. When the dragon was defied, it evaporated. Dr. Rumely and other officers of the committee were not cited for contempt; they were not even reprimanded by the Senate. In fact, the Senate refused to grant Senator Minton's request for additional funds and thus ended the Black-Minton Committee which had harassed business for years.

Mr. Speaker, permit me also at this point to quote a statement released to the press by Mr. Rumely after his appearance before the Buchanan Select Committee on Lobbying on June 6, 1950, and a statement released to the press thereafter by Sumner Gerard, trustee of the Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc. I read:

RUMELY STATEMENT TO BUCHANAN COMMITTEE

(A statement released to the press after Dr. Rumely's appearance on the stand before the Buchanan Select Committee on Lobbying Activities—June 6, 1950)

I ask the opportunity to make a statement while I am under oath and subject to cross-examination rather than to be compelled to release it to the press without such scrutiny by you and your committee.

This statement, I believe, may be helpful to you, your committee and to the Congress in presenting the matters at issue, in their proper perspective. First, let me say that nothing in this statement is intended as a personal criticism of Mr. Louis Little or his assistants. During the 2 weeks while they were in our offices, they acted with courtesy and consideration.

Our complaint goes to part of the job that they were sent to do, and to what we believe is a wholly misguided and unconstitutional conception on your part of your powers.

When Mr. Louis Little first called, he said, "Chairman BUCHANAN thinks that a new form of lobbying has developed. Lobbyists no longer primarily buttonhole Congressmen but instead reach out to the public back home and build public opinion that causes constituents to speak up to their Congressmen, and thus legislation is influenced. Your organization, we regard as the most efficient operation on the right or conservative side, and we want to see just how you project your viewpoint to the country."

I was horrified at the thought that a branch of Congress could enter the field of dissemination of ideas among citizens in an area where, under the Bill of Rights, they are guaranteed privacy and complete freedom from Government interference.

When I was a young man, a student of medicine in Europe, almost 50 years ago, an incident occurred that left a lifelong impression. One fall, one of our friends, a fellow interne in medicine did not return as we had expected he would for his studies. About a month later, a middle-aged Russian woman, a fellow student of medicine, came and asked, "Please give me 10 francs. The reason our friend and fellow student did not return is that he has been exiled into the coldest part of Siberia where he is shivering without adequate clothing and we are collecting money to buy sheepskin coats and blankets with the wool on them to keep him warm."

This student, leaving for home in July, had left a little money to have his mail forwarded, but he had subscribed to a magazine published in Switzerland, to come to this hospital and it was also forwarded. It was on the prohibited list of the czar's secret police, and the arrival of a single number, showing a year's subscription, caused the police to put this student away for 1 year in exile in Siberia.

In history that is the kind of thing that happens when government invades the area of molding people's thinking—in Russia under Stalin, in Italy under Mussolini, in Germany under Hitler. American correspondents who observed the rise of Hitler report that it was not so much the excellence of his own propaganda as the ability to knock down and shut off the expression of any opposing viewpoint. That, Mr. BUCHANAN, is exactly what you are doing.

The CIO News, in an editorial directed to your committee, entitled "Lobby Probe," said on May 8: "We would like to see a full explanation of such outfits as the Committee for Constitutional Government." In the June 5 number, reporting on your meeting with the press, this same publication says, "At a press conference BUCHANAN made no bones of his personal distaste for these three organizations." We were one of the three. You are further quoted, "Congress is entitled to know which financial interests are back of attempts to influence public opinion and legislation."

Do not clergymen and educators influence public opinion? Are you going to suppress them?

This statement quoted by the CIO News—also on page 1 of the New York Times—confirms the viewpoint outlined by your representative, Louis Little, as the objective of your investigation. We challenge your power to meddle in the processes by which the American people have facts and educational material in books and other publications, presented to them, from which, ultimately, public opinion results.

Of the thousand or more opinion-molding organizations at work, the most gigantic machine ever built is that of the labor monopolies. They report collection of $425,000,000 annually of regular dues, with an estimated $200,000,000 additional in assesments and the services of 100,000 shop stewards, paid by stockholders but misused for political purposes, often against the long-range interests of the workers themselves, as well as the stockholders.

Next in power is the bureaucracy of the Federal Government itself, with 45,000 on the payroll engaged primarily in press-agentry, and costing $70,000,000 annually, plus tens of millions in free postal service to promote their loaded propaganda for bigger and bigger government. The CIO News reports: "The name of the CCG first came up in the lobby probe several weeks ago when Leo Goodman, director of the housing committee, charged that it financed some of the activities of the real estate lobby. Goodman said the CCG sent out mail, paid for print material attacking rent control and Federal housing legislation." The CIO has spent probably hundreds of times as much as we, using its gigantic machine to pressure for rent control, urging confiscation of part of the home owner's income by rent control.

Now, at CIO behest, you and your agents are digging into how we distribute our educational material to citizens back home, on these rent-control and housing issues.

We are carrying on, in the area of public opinion, a nonpartisan, nonprofit educational effort, influencing public opinion, as do newspapers, magazines, periodicals, churches, service clubs, colleges, and innumerable other forces.

It was Jefferson's concept and that of the men who wrote our Bill of Rights that with the free play of such forces all sides, uncurbed and uninfluenced by government, even the unpopular side of a question could be presented and heard. The citizens, with the information before them, could come to sound conclusions and, by their votes, wisely guide the course of their government.

Your agents showed little interest in the tens of thousands of individual purchases of books and literature. For example, on the day after Lincoln's Birthday we received 2,171 units, aggregating $9,452; 30 of these were contributions, averaging $12 each; more than 2,000 purchases of books and literature and the Bill of Rights, with an over-all average of $4.50 each.

Your agents took back to Washington, for your information, copy of our auditor's annual financial reports for the years 1949, 1948, and 1947. For example, the 1949 report shows that we had received no contributions in excess of $490, and only 158 contributions ranging from $101 to $490; 5,526 contributions of less than $10; 1,707 ranging from $11 to $25; and 1,051 ranging from $26 to $100. The average amount received in contributions during 1949 was $22.20, just about the amount the average union member pays in dues. In that same year we sold books and literature in 22,000 separate orders, averaging $15 each.

You had these facts before you, yet you put out a totally false statement that went through the press of the whole United States, saying that you were seeking to find out Rumely's "financial angels." It is true that a few who bought more than 100 books or whose support amounted to more than $100 are public-spirited citizens with means or in prominent position. If you now demand their names and present them as typical of the support of the committee, as you have done, you ignore the evidence before you and misuse the confidence of the press in a congressional committee to project to the Nation a totally false picture. If any private individual or institution put out such a biased and unfounded press interview, it would be looked upon as downright dishonesty.

We have sold about 600,000 copies of Flynn's book, The Road Ahead, during the past 5 months, in tens of thousands of individual orders, ranging from 1 to 10 copies each; a small percentage of the total sales were purchased in quantities, by individuals and institutions, for redistribution. Demanding and releasing the names of these buyers, you would again create a false picture in the public mind. The CIO reports: "BUCHANAN believes that the Committee for Constitutional Government is the parent of a network lobbying against labor and the Fair Deal," and he believes that "the investigation of the financial backing of three organizations will reveal the ties."

That statement of yours, based on your surmise, is false, for our committe has no ties with other organizations. With 80,000 who have given financial support, it, of course, is probable that a small percentage also have given support to other organizations. But you have projected to the whole country an unfounded surmise, before your committee has had a chance to see the facts. That's biased propaganda on your part and not objective investigation.

See attached hereto a statement released by Sumner Gerard, one of our trustees, setting forth how your demand for the names of the purchasers of our books and literature violates our rights—the rights of all citizens—under the first and fourth amendments to the Constitution.

Four of your agents went to work in our office during 2 weeks, going through books of accounts, our files, correspondence, and inspecting every piece of literature and the books that we have printed and distributed. We gave your representatives more than 98 percent of what they asked for—responding to 24 out of 25 demands, although much of it was irrelevant to the purposes of this investigation. For example, your agents went through our correspondence with Members of Congress. They picked out correspondence with Republicans or with Jeffersonian Democrats like Senator BYRD, but when they saw comment from men like Senator PEPPER on our releases they left that to one side.

It is for the reasons set forth in the Gerard statement and these reasons that we are declining to give you the names of the quantity purchasers of our books and literature; also, the names of a few who made loans for the purpose of enabling us to advertise and promote the Fighters for Freedom movement, which has no relation to lobbying activities before Congress; also, to pay for the printing and promotion of early editions of The Road Ahead.

I am taking this stand after consultation and on the advice of my counsel, Neil Burkinshaw, and after consultation with the trustees of the Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc.

EDWARD A. RUMELY.

STATEMENT RELEASED BY SUMNER GERARD, TRUSTEE OF THE COMMITTEE FOR CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT, INC.

The House Select Committee on Lobbying Activities has ordered the Committee For Constitutional Government, Inc., to produce at 10 a. m. on June 6 in Washington various records and data including the names and addresses of quantity purchasers of books which it has published. These include: The Constitution of the United States, by Thomas James Norton; The Road Ahead, by John T. Flynn; Compulsory Medical Care and the Welfare State, by Melchior Palyi; Why the Taft-Hartley Law? by Irving G. McCann.

A basic right of every American citizen is, in our judgment, involved in the Buchanan committee's procedure—as well as the basic right of every publisher, whether of books, newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, or handbills.

Wherever freedom of the press is lost, freedom of the individual citizen is eventually lost. Press freedom is guaranteed in the Bill of Rights not primarily for newspapermen or for printers. It was put there to protect the basic right of the people to know.

Framers of our Constitution demanded it because they knew that in Europe men who dared to criticize the government had their tongues slit, their ears cut off, were imprisoned and fiendishly tortured. Our forefathers wanted to be secure against such government suppression of the voice of the people.

Therefore, the issue coming up in Washington concerns all the people.

For the precedent sought by Chairman BUCHANAN, if not resisted and overthrown, will expose any publisher's private files to unreasonable search and seizure. Nor would he or those who buy his publication or give it financial support be free from smearing attacks, intimidation, and coercion if he printed a book or a paper displeasing to some pressure group powerful enough to cause misuse of the legitimate prerogatives of congressional committees.

We base this conclusion on the current experience of the Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc., of which I am a trustee.

For many years a major portion of the work of this organization, fighting to uphold the principles of constitutional freedom, has been publishing and distributing books.

In the last 6 months it has published and sold some 600,000 copies of its special-size edition of John T. Flynn's book, The Road Ahead. Only a small percentage of sales has been to organizations and individuals purchasing in quantities for redistribution. The Buchanan committee's agents demanded the names of all who purchased 100 or more copies.

Why? To expose them to smear attack by radical commentators and some of the left-wing press. What other purpose?

In 1943 the Committee for Constitutional Government acquired copyright of Thomas James Norton's book, the Constitution of the United States. This book had been selected by a committee of the American Bar Association as the best available on that all-important but long-neglected subject. It had languished in regular publishers' hands. More than 600,000 copies have been distributed since 1943.

William H. Cowles, Jr., editor and publisher of the Spokane Spokesman-Review, like his father before him, every year has purchased from 1,000 to 1,200 copies of the Norton book to present to high school graduates. Has the Buchanan committee's demand for the names of such purchasers anything to do with the investigation of lobbying activities as defined in the authorizing resolution of Congress?

The Committee for Constitutional Government has printed 100,000 copies of Dr. Melchior Palyi's book Compulsory Medical Care and the Welfare State, and it has in page proof Irving G. McCann's book, Why the Taft-Hartley Law? Mr. McCann was counsel to the House committee in its hearings on which that law was based. Explaining his demand for the names of the book purchasers, the chief investigator of the Buchanan committee said, "If an employer buys more than 100 copies of this book on the Taft-Hartley law, why shouldn't his employees be informed about it?" Such disclosure and potential intimidation of book purchasers is outside the legitimate field of investigating lobbying activities. The publicity threat of the Buchanan committee is the reason why one order for 1,000 copies of the Taft-Hartley book was cut to 50.

Since Congress, under article I of the Bill of Rights, cannot abridge the freedom of the press, and since a book publisher, or any publisher, is guaranteed protection against unreasonable search and seizure, Mr. Frank Gannett, a fellow trustee, heartily approves the stand of the committee in resisting this unwarranted invasion of its constitutional rights—the rights of every publisher and of every American. He writes our executive secretary:

"I agree that the Buchanan committee has gone far out of bounds in considering the committee's sale of books as coming under the Lobbying Act. I don't think they have any right to demand the names of purchasers of the books, and I hope our committee stands firm in refusing to give out such information. I believe the Constitution protects the right of privacy in such matters."

Our committee is striving to uphold the rights of every citizen as well as the rights of a free press. If we value our freedoms—and freedom of the press is only one of them that can be lost for all of us—we will recognize the danger of the precedent which Chairman BUCHANAN evidently seeks to establish, and resist it with all the forces that public opinion can muster. Let us thank God for what we now enjoy—and fight to maintain it.

Now back to Rumely's conviction—the one referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BIEMILLER] and by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Here is Mr. Rumely's statement on that subject:

II. WARNING OF LIBEL

(Edward A. Rumely, as executive secretary of the Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc., in resisting what we believe to be an unconstitutional and unwarranted invasion of every citizen's right of privacy under the Bill of Rights, is acting as custodian and under direction of this committee's officers and trustees. His refusal has their full approval and support. They hope by carrying this case to the highest court, if that is necessary, to establish a precedent good as long as our constitutional government endures.)

Some publishers, editors, columnists, radio stations and commentators have fallen into the habit of repeating, inadvertently or maliciously, gross libels against Dr. Edward A. Rumely, and incidentally creating unjustified and damaging prejudice against the Committee for Constitutional Government.

THE FACTS

Edward A. Rumely never was indicted as, nor was he ever convicted of being, a German agent, nor of other of the many defamatory charges loosely disseminated.

He was tried, together with two attorneys, law partners of the well-known jurist Arthur Garfield Hays, for allegedly making a false report under the Trading With the Enemy Act in World War I. All three were convicted—by jurors, five or whom later admitted that "it was our disposition to give to the Government" (not to the accused) "the benefit of whatever doubt existed."

Suffice it to say that within 3 weeks after the conviction, 11 of the 12 jurors recommended that their verdict be set aside by executive clemency. And when evidence suppressed at the trial was made available, 11 of the jurors signed the petition for Dr. Rumely's unconditional pardon. A majority signed a statement saying that had they had before them the evidence which was withheld, they would not have voted as they did, for conviction.

President Calvin Coolidge granted the pardon, with full restoration of citizenship on the ground that there had been a miscarriage of justice and that the convicted men were innocent. The sentence served was 1 month in the Westchester (N. Y.) County penitentiary.

Dr. Rumely was informed, and no proof that he had knowledge to the contrary was ever produced, that the funds which he borrowed to finance, in part, his purchase of the New York Evening Mail in 1915, were those of private individuals. He was informed it was the capital of Herman Sielcken, an American citizen residing at Baden-Baden, but transmitted 2 years before the United States entered the war, via the only means then available, German diplomatic channels. Under war conditions many private transactions for all countries were handled by and through Government channels. The late Charles Nagel, a St. Louis attorney who was President Taft's Secretary of Commerce, cooperated in helping to make this loan for Dr. Rumely possible.

The courts have held that to mention a conviction without also mentioning a pardon, where pardon has been granted, is libel per se.

Permit me to quote further from a statement from Rumely under the caption "An old red herring";

AN OLD RED HERRING

The Minton committee's attack was the most determined campaign conducted against the Constitutional Committee by its enemies. Innuendo spreaders failed to pry into its files. They failed in efforts to discover and harass committee supporters—and to misrepresent them as "wealthy reactionaries" and "contributors of huge slush funds." Likewise, they failed in their ambition to wreck the committee. They had hoped to halt its work when Senator Minton dragged into the hearing slanders on Dr. Rumely.

These slanders are now the fairly exclusive property of irresponsibles and of left-wing publications. They arise out of the case of the New York Evening Mail, of which Dr. Rumely was once editor and publisher. And an examination of the facts of the case indicates one reason for Dr. Rumely's devotion to a cause which resists arbitrary acts of Government.

Dr. Rumely is a native of Indiana, where his people settled nearly a century ago. One of his grandfathers accompanied Carl Schurz to this country after the unsuccessful democratic German revolution of 1848. The Rumelys built agricultural implements. Although educated as a physician and surgeon in England and Germany, Dr. Rumely entered the family business after his father's death and, among other pioneering developments in power farming, brought out one of the first tractors. At the same time, he pioneered in modern education, establishing the famous Interlaken School for Boys near La Porte.

Two years before the United States entered World War I, Dr. Rumely purchased the New York Evening Mail. It was an old ambition, paralleling the urge that led him to found his Interlaken School. Under his editorship, the Mail stood with the United States Government for the rights of neutrals—and in particular it strongly condemned German brutality. Furthermore, the Rumely newspaper was the recognized mouthpiece of his friends, Theodore Roosevelt and Gen. Leonard Wood. It fought vigorously for military preparedness and a watchful America.

In the summer of 1918, Dr. Rumely and two members of the law firm of which the senior partner was the well-known liberal, Arthur Garfield Hays, were charged with conspiring to make an improper report to the Alien Property Custodian. This report had to do with a pre-war indebtedness contracted in the purchase of stock in "The Mail." The trial turned upon the point whether a report of indebtedness contracted 2 years before the United States entered World War I was technically correct. Evidence of pivotal importance was withheld from the defendants and all three were convicted upon this technicality.

A full report of this matter is available. Suffice it here to say that within 3 weeks after the conviction, 11 of the 12 jurors recommended executive clemency. Thereafter, the majority of the surviving 11 jurors stated that at the time of the trial "it was our disposition to give to the Government the benefit of whatever doubt existed" and that they had expected that the conviction, with their recommendation of extreme mercy, would carry at most a monetary fine. They further stated that had the jury had the evidence which was withheld from the defendants at the time of trial, but which was later brought to attention by the Honorable Charles Nagel, who was Secretary of Commerce under President Taft and attorney for the witness whose testimony was withheld, they would have reached a different verdict. The petition of these jurors to the President concluded with the following: "Since in our judgment this new evidence would have altered our verdict or resulted in a disagreement, we therefore respectfully recommend that by the exercise of executive clemency this verdict be now completely set aside."

Both the prosecuting attorney and the trial judge joined in recommending a pardon.

The President, following the request of the jurors that their verdict be set aside, and the supporting recommendations by outstanding national leaders, among them statements of Cabinet members and judges, granted a full and unconditional pardon to all three.

In a later proceeding for the reinstatement to the bar of the two attorneys, Mr. Justice Cardozo, then of the New York Court of Appeals, later a Justice of the United States Supreme Court, in his decision stated: "The President in granting this pardon acted in accordance with the recommendation of his Attorney General, now Mr. Justice Stone of the Supreme Court of the United States, who after examining the record expressed a belief that the petitioners were innocent." In the same decision, Justice Cardozo added: "A pardon may in some conditions be a warning as significant as a judgment of reversal that the looms of the law have woven a fabric of injustice. The very case at hand is indeed an opposite illustration. The record makes it plain that the pardon was granted because the President of the United States was advised by his Attorney General that the petitioners were innocent."

LEGAL OPINIONS

The view has been taken that a person charged with crime may maintain an action for libel or slander if, before the speaking of the words, a pardon has been granted to him. In fact, the opinion has been expressed that even though the words charging a criminal offense expressly fixed such offense to a particular period, since which the liability to punishment therefor must have been discharged by a general pardon, yet the words were actionable, as the scandal of the offense remained. (33 American Jurisprudence, p. 47, sec. 16.)

In the case of a full pardon, it relieves the punishment and blots out of existence the guilt of the offender to such an extent that in the eye of the law he is innocent as if he had never committed the offense. So completely is an offense considered to be obliterated by a pardon that it has been held that pardon of treason or felony, even after conviction, will enable a man to have an action of slander for calling him a traitor or felon. (39 American Jurisprudence, p. 550, sec. 51.)

Effect of pardon: The fact that the liability to punishment is discharged by a pardon prior to the publication of words imputing a crime will not deprive plaintiff of his right of action. (36 Corpus Juris., p. 1196, sec. 106.)

A pardon is construed as a whole to carry out the intention of the grantor and should be construed most strictly against the State and most liberally in favor of the person pardoned. (46 Corpus Juris., p. 1192, sec. 31.)

When a full and absolute pardon is granted, it exempts the individual upon which it is bestowed from the punishment which the law inflicts for the crime which he has committed. The crime is forgiven and remitted and the individual is relieved from all of its legal consequences. (46 Corpus Juris., p. 1192, sec. 32.)

A pardon by the President relieves the recipient from all disability or responsibility on account of the commission of the offense for which he was pardoned. (Rison v. Farr (24 Ark. 161, 87 AMd. 52), (C. J. 46, p. 1183).)

MR. JUSTICE CARDOZO, MR. JUSTICE STONE CONCURRED IN OPINION THAT RUMELY WAS NOT GUILTY OF CHARGE OF WHICH HE WAS CONVICTED

Now I ask you, after reading the report of the actions of Mr. Justice Cardozo at the time the two attorneys convicted with Mr. Rumely and who had been disbarred were restored to good standing—after reading the recommendation of the then Attorney General, later Mr. Justice Stone of the Supreme Court, who, after examining the record of Rumely's conviction, expressed the belief that the petitioners were innocent—just how much weight do you give to the present charge that Rumely is an ex-convict, that he was convicted of a crime? To the present attempt to intimidate, to force into silence, this officer of the Committee for Constitutional Government? Does not the pardon wipe out that conviction?

EDITORIAL FROM WASHINGTON STAR

In the same connection, note this editorial from the Washington Evening Star of October 10, 1944. I quote:

THE RUMELY PARDON

In an editorial commenting on the indictment last week of Dr. Edward A. Rumely for refusing to supply the House Campaign Expenditures Committee with names of contributors to the Committee for Constitutional Government, of which he is executive secretary, the Star stated that after the first World War he was convicted and served a prison term on a charge of violating the Trading With the Enemy Act. That complaint grew out of the purchase by Dr. Rumely of a New York newspaper before this country went to war with Germany in 1917. The prosecution contended that the German government supplied some of the funds for the purchase, a circumstance of which Dr. Rumely denied knowledge. He and two attorneys were convicted, however, on a conspiracy charge based on a report of the transaction which they made to the Alien Property Custodian.

Later, after evidence not introduced at the trial had become available, President Coolidge commuted their sentences, pardoned all three men and restored their civil rights. Mr. Coolidge acted on a recommendation by Harlan F. Stone, then Attorney General and now Chief Justice of the Spreme Court, who expressed the belief that the three men were innocent. In a proceeding for the reinstatement of the two attorneys to the New York bar, Chief Justice Cardozo of the New York Court of Appeals, later an associate justice of the Supreme Court, also indicated his belief that the men had been unjustly convicted. Similar opinions were expressed by other prominent lawyers and jurists.

The Star's editorial did not state that Dr. Rumely had been pardoned, and it is in fairness to him that the circumstances of the pardon are published at this time.

EDITORIAL FROM THE TIMES-HERALD

Then, if you care to bring the story down to date, listen to this editorial from the Times-Herald of June 12, 1950:

ANOTHER BLACK COMMITTEE

The conduct of an investigation into lobbying by a committee under Representative FRANK BUCHANAN, of Pennsylvania, has drawn deserved condenmation from other Member of the House. Mr. BUCHANAN has proceeded with little respect for normal congressional procedures of subpenaing witnesses and examining them or for the constitutional protection of free speech and a free press.

If anything approaching such high-handed methods were employed by a congressional committee dealing with suspected Communists or other subversives, there would be an immediate outcry from the "liberal" wing of the eastern press. Representative BUCHANAN's activities, however, have been greeted with dead silence by these professed champions of due process and the inviolability of the individual.

It has been established by the officers of certain private organizations dedicated to the safeguarding of the American-constitutional system that Mr. BUCHANAN has had the volunteer assistance in his smearing campaign of a poison-pen outfit misnamed "Friends of Democracy."

This is a propaganda racket conducted by Rex Stout, a goat-bearded mystery writer, once on the editorial board of the Communist magazine, New Masses, in association with Leon Birkhead, an ex-preacher, and one Avedis Derounion, a Levantine of many aliases, sometimes known as John Roy Carlson.

REWARDED BY TAX EXEMPTIONS

The principal interest of this crowd seems to be to advance the creeping New Deal revolution by assassinating the character of anyone manful enough to withstand its mud guns and to defend a constitutional Republic. The New Deal recognizes that it has valuable auxiliaries in Stout, Birkhead, and Derounian, and has conferred upon them tax exemption for what contributions they can get by shaking the bushes, justifying this extraordinary boon on the ground that the outfit is engaging in an educational work.

It has become apparent that Mr. BUCHANAN'S interest in lobbying is confined to the activities of organizations which openly oppose the New Deal and call for a return to constitutionalism. One such group, in furtherance of the goal of acquainting the people with the New Deal's progress into socialism, appears to have published some books and to have assisted in the publication and distribution of at least one other—John T. Flynn's The Road Ahead.

Representative BUCHANAN has endeavored to represent these activities, which certainly are valid, as some sort of nefarious plot, and has levied upon the publishing agency a demand that it spread before him the names of those contributing to publication and those who purchased the books. This approach is in open contravention of the first amendment guaranteeing that the state may not abridge the right to a free press, and it would also appear to violate the fourth amendment governing security of person and property against unreasonable searches and seizures.

The further BUCHANAN proceeds, the more it is apparent that he has patterned his star-chamber proceedings upon the model of the infamous inquisition into lobbying conducted by Senator Hugo Black in the early period of the New Deal. In that fishing expedition, Black subpenaed the complete telegraphic correspondence of more than 1,000 specified persons and groups, piling up more than 5,000,000 copies of messages, which were then used to smear the opponents of the Roosevelt administration.

FORMER MEMBER OF KU KLUX KLAN

For this contemptible service, Black was elevated by Roosevelt to the Supreme Court, despite his acknowledged former membership in the Ku Klux Klan, an organization whose terroristic methods conformed to his own.

If the House wishes to preserve respect or its integrity, it will lay Mr. BUCHANAN and his committee away in the freezing compartment before they proceed to still greater outrages. Black finally came a cropper when, having been accused of violating the fourth amendment, he was severely taken to task by the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.

If the House wants to spare itself similar disgrace, it will rebuke BUCHANAN for his illegal methods and strip his committee of all authority.

WHERE IS THE COMMITTEE STAFF HEADING?

While no investigation has been made, from information which has been volunteered, some doubt is created as to the direction in which two members of the staff are traveling.

SPINGARN OF THE STAFF AND PART OF HIS PREVIOUS RECORD

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 19, 1950, at page 669, shows that Jerome H. Spingarn was employed as research assistant to the chairman of the committee.

During the activities of the House Select Committee Investigating the Federal Communications Commission—in 1943–44—Spingarn was Assistant Chief of the FCC's War Problems Division, which Division and others of the FCC, operated in conjunction with the Office of War Information too, and in the opinion of some caused many American citizens to be taken off the air and out of their jobs at numerous foreign language broadcast stations in the United States.

Americans taken off the air were frequently replaced with alien refugees, some enemy alien refugees; and some of those replacements in their jobs censored our religious programs—such as Easter and Christmas programs, and the like.

The FCC never called Spingarn as a witness when it made its defense of charges against it; but, as shown by the hearings of said committee, Spingarn's name was mentioned and referred to by other witnesses as having taken a prominent part in preventing due renewal of the foregn language broadcast station licenses and in taking Americans off the radio.

An examination of the testimony taken in the hearings just referred to shows that many times other witnesses referred to Mr. Spingarn in such a way that it might be construed as indicating that he was not one who would give unbiased consideration to an inquiry into the activities of organizations engaged in a campaign designed to jealously guard and promote constitutional government.

COMMITTEE STAFF ATTORNEY LOUIS LITTLE—BUCHANAN'S STATEMENT

From the well of the House on the 15th, it was stated that I had been advised, in substance, that another member of the committee staff, Louis Little, an attorney, had acted as bondsman for certain individuals charged with criminal offenses, some of whom were or became his clients.

After that statement was made, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] advised me that I was in error—that there might be another Louis Little in Pittsburgh. The following then occurred:

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. * * * Can you give me the street address and something that I may determine whether or not I have unjustly referred to Louis Little? I find in the telephone directory but one Louis Little, and he is listed as an attorney.

Mr. BUCHANAN. He has a law office at No. 7 Court Place, Pittsburgh.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is the one that is in the directory. * * *

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Did the gentleman say that I was in error when I said that he had signed bonds?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is correct. He is not a professional bondsman.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is your statement?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is my statement, and I believe verification of this fact has been handed to me by a member of the staff who has talked to Mr. Little. I believe that he is in the House Gallery listening to this colloquy.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I will be glad to correct any misstatement I may have made, if I find court records do not refer to the Louis Little who is on the committee staff.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

In view of the foregoing, which I assume means that the Louis Little who is on the staff of the committee has not signed, nor is responsible for the signing of any bond in criminal cases, in some of which cases he later appeared as the attorney, and in view of the fact that Mr. Little, whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] stated he believed was in the House Gallery listening to the colloquy, the gentleman's statement, which I assume means that Mr. Little had nothing to do with bailing out those charged with criminal offenses, it may be assumed that the Members of the House will accept the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

QUERY AS TO WHETHER, IN SPITE OF BUCHANAN'S STATEMENT ON FLOOR, LOUIS LITTLE IS NOT INTERESTED IN SIGNING OF BONDS FOR THOSE CHARGED WITH OFFENSES

However, permit me to inquire of the attorney for the committee, Mr. Little, through the courtesy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN], the chairman of the Lobbying Committee, whether he, Mr. Little, was not interested in procuring bondsmen for the individuals named hereafter and who were charged with certain offenses in the courts of Pittsburgh.

SNOOPING BY COMMITTEE STAFF

That at least some member or members of the committee staff seek the intimidation of Congressmen who oppose the New Deal policies, some of the policies of the administration, and who have been fighting communism, is shown by the fact that a staff member went snooping into the folding room, from which some material sent out by Congressmen is mailed, and made inquiry as to what and how much franked mail had been sent out by five Congressmen.

Inasmuch as material which is printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is frankable and as no claim has been made that any one of those named used the frank on anything that was not printed in the RECORD, the only logical conclusion is that the snooper desired to get material which would enable him to smear those who sent out statements or arguments in opposition to policies which he, his associates or those for whom he acted advocated.

That procedure is nothing new. As I pointed out from the well of the House on the eighth, it has been tried before. It did not work then; it will not work now, except as to those who do not feel it worth while to stand up and fight the vicious vilification which all must suffer when they oppose the policies of certain powerful groups, groups determined to have their own way, regardless of the effect upon the welfare or security of the Nation.

I have nothing to say about the other individuals who attempted to enlighten their constituents by the circulation of material which the snooper or his associates did not approve, for they are able and willing to make their own fight.

For myself, let me make the situation clear.

On September 29, 1949, from the floor of the House I made a speech in opposition to the attempt of the President to settle the steel strike through the appointment of his own fact-finding board.

The Constitutional Educational League saw fit to reprint that speech in a pamphlet and, at its own expense and without a cent of cost to the taxpayer, with postage fully prepaid, to send it out to individuals of its own choosing.

Is that fact any business of the snooper or of anyone else? Is not anyone exercising his right to free speech, to a free press, at liberty to reprint any article carried in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, especially when he has the consent of the author? What kind of thinking motivated this snooper or those for whom he was acting?

Those in control of the Committee for Constitutional Government at their own expense photolithed that speech and again, at their own expense and with postage fully prepaid, sent it through the mail.

May I ask this snooper: Is he, are his bosses, the only ones who have the right to reproduce parts of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and at their own expense send them out through the mail?

In addition, the Committee for Constitutional Government asked permission to have reprinted in pamphlet form copies of that same speech and it paid the full cost of the reprinting of those speeches. I caused some of those speeches to be franked out and again I ask, there being no violation of law, what business was that of the committee snooper, or, for that matter, of the committee?

We have not yet reached that stage where a committee of the House or any of its staff can tell a Member of Congress what he shall say, what he shall print, or what he shall, under the frank, send out.

I made two other talks, each a page and a half; one was entitled "Misuse of Hoover Label"; the other was entitled "Taking From All of Us To Give To Some of Us." Each in part was a reprint of statements published by the Committee for Constitutional Government.

I hazard the statement that, on every day that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is printed, it carries a reprint from some publication or a letter from some constituent of a Congressman.

Not only has it never been considered an offense to reprint these letters or these articles, but unanimous consent is first given for the purpose of having them inserted in the RECORD, and there is no doubt of the right of the people to receive this frankable material or of a Member of Congress to mail it.

What the snooper and those responsible for his action were evidently trying to do was to silence, through intimidation, through the false charge that franking out anything which came from any one of these three organizations, was reprehensible, a violation of some Federal law, Congressmen who oppose administration policies.

In my time here I have seen some vicious attacks by unscrupulous individuals and organizations made upon Members of this and the other body in an attempt to silence opposition.

Never, so far as I can recall, has any member of a committee staff had the effrontery, without any justification whatsoever, to act as a tool of those who would cover up and conceal Communists in or out of the Federal Government and whose purpose is to destroy our Government.

Members of the House Committee on Lobbying should realize that in permitting their snooper to inquire into and to criticize lawful activities of their colleagues, they are but following the methods of one, who just a few days ago was characterized by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WOOD] as the arch character assassin of all times.

I have been wondering what the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the Members on his side of the aisle who are also members of the House Lobbying Committee will have to say if after the November election, in January of 1951, the opposition should come into power and a House committee should call the chairman of the present Lobbying Committee and his financial backers and political friends to the stand, and inquire as to their political beliefs, methods, and contributions.

Just how far does the Committee on Lobbying intend to go in permitting this Louis Little, who gained much of his experience as a criminal and divorce court lawyer, in grilling American citizens who attempt to exercise their constitutional rights?

IS LOBBYING COMMITTEE, IN A CAMPAIGN YEAR, MAKING EFFORT TO SILENCE OPPOSITION?

Is it not evident from what has been here said that there is at this time, a political campaign being now on, a deliberate attempt to intimidate, to silence, those who would criticize any policy, any action, of the present administration and its adherents?

Are these efforts to be successful? Are we, the people's representatives, to tamely submit to the unauthorized snooping into our legitimate affairs by the staff of this committee?

That their efforts are meeting with cooperation from at least one columnist is evident from an article which appeared in one of the papers in my own congressional district. The writer, not daring to make a direct charge, nevertheless, by telling but a part of the story, sought by innuendo to convey the impression that I and other Members of Congress had improperly—yes, unlawfully—sent out material in violation of the law.

The writer of that article knew that the inference conveyed was false. Lacking the courage to make the charge directly, it was sought to do it by indirection.

I for one am convinced that, if those sought to be silenced stand up and fight as they should, the result of the effort to purge will be as futile as have been previous efforts on the part of the administration in power.

PREVIOUS EFFORTS FAILED

Some remember Wilson's demand that the people return a Democratic Congress. Result? The people sent back a Republican Congress.

President Roosevelt sought to purge certain Senators. The people returned them to office.

The late President Roosevelt did succeed, with the aid of the American Labor Party, in purging one Democratic Congressman, John O'Connor, of New York.

President Truman, in a primary election, succeeded in preventing the renomination of a Democratic Congressman, Roger Slaughter, who had opposed some of the administration's policies. There is evidence that that purge was accomplished through the casting of fraudulent votes. The net result was the election of a Republican from that district.

At the moment, the President has opened certain files relating to incomes to a Senate committee probing gambling. But he is still holding closed and secret the files which would reveal the truth or falsity of the charges made by a Member of the other body to the effect that there have been and are Communists in the State and other executive departments; the files which would show whether there are or there are not at this time, after 91 homosexuals have been discharged from the State Department, other individuals with like characteristics still drawing Federal pay.

Nor should it be forgotten that, when a House committee sought to look into the files which would show the tax returns of the President's friend, Paul Dillon, who admitted he received a fee of $10,000 for assisting in obtaining the parole of the five Capone gangsters, the President denied the request of the House committee.

He also denied a request for a look at the files which would have shown the income of Maury Hughes, a friend of the then Attorney General, now Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark, who testified that from an unknown individual he received a fee of $15,000 for assisting in procuring the dismissal of an indictment which barred a parole to the five Capone gangsters—gangsters who were convicted of an attempt to extort more than a million dollars from union employees.

DO CONGRESSMEN LACK COURAGE OR INCLINATION TO FIGHT BACK?

There is an old saying that murder will out. It is my humble opinion that if those who believe in constitutional government, who believe that right and justice will prevail, have the courage of their convictions, will stand up and fight, this smear effort will but strengthen the convictions, increase the courage and determination of those who wish to preserve the liberty of the citizen, the security of our Nation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for three additional minutes in order that I may ask him one or two questions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman from Michigan charge any illegal act at all or is he charging an unethical act against a highly successful, eminently qualified lawyer from the State of Pennsylvania? Is the gentleman charging anything of that sort?

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Does the gentleman want me to answer that question?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Yes. That is the question.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. All right. The answer is this: Emphatically no. I am charging that the gentleman has specialized in criminal cases and in divorce matters and in view of the manner of questioning that he is reported to have followed yesterday he is not the proper man to conduct either an investigation or the interrogation of witnesses for a House committee. That is what I charge.

Mr. EBERHARTER. If the gentleman would refer to the bar association of the home county of Mr. Little, if he will refer to the State bar association and the American Bar Association, he would have the answer that this man is very reputable and has been for 25 years. He has earned the reputation of being one of the most successful and one of the most moral and ethical men who ever practiced law. If the gentleman from Michigan wants to continue with his innuendo it is all right with me, but there is no crime in practicing criminal law.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. That is right. Now will the gentleman listen to me for a minute? Will the gentleman just inquire and come back and say on his honor as a Congressman that Mr. Little is not causing professional bonds to be signed and whether or not he has not in the cases where he caused those bonds to be signed acted as attorney? Come back and tell me that. If that is not unethical conduct and so branded by every bar association in the country I do not know what unethical conduct is. As for being a member of the Bar Association, look at your newspaper today and note the news item that there are 5,000 lawyers in the guild who are Communists.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman asked me whether I think it is unethical for a lawyer who has a client accused of criminal conduct to obtain a bondsman.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I did not say obtain a bond.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman asked me a question. The gentleman himself has practiced law in the State of Michigan for many years. I wonder whether or not he himself has ever defended any person accused of crime and whether or not in defending those persons accused of crime he would want to be accused of unethical conduct for defending somebody in a court of justice in this country? That is the innuendo he is putting out. I say frankly and honestly. It requires a man of ability to make the reputation that this gentleman did.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Of course not. Everyone knows that is a silly question because if a man is accused of a crime and he does not have an attorney it is the duty of the court to appoint an attorney for him. Everyone accused has the right to an attorney. There is no question about that. In Michigan an attorney cannot sign a bond in a criminal case. The point I am making is this: Has not Mr. Little over a period of years, since 1947, in at least 150 cases been personally interested in the signing of a bond? That is easily answered. You can take the cases I put in the RECORD today, and then come back and tell us whether he or his agent did not cause bonds in criminal cases to be signed.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman knows that he is using the familiar tactics of associating somebody else with somebody that he is talking about.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. You are defending the gentleman.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Those are perhaps the only tactics that the gentleman can use.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Before we get through you will get the record.

Mr. EBERHARTER. And before the public you can create a wrong impression by asserting all these things by association. I thought the gentleman said the other day he did not believe in the theory of guilt by association.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK] is recognized for 10 minutes.

HON. JOHN DAVIS LODGE

Mr. SADLAK. Mr. Speaker, since the first congressional primaries this year, and earlier than that in other instances, there has been indicated to us in the House that distinguished Members, with whom each of us has been privileged to be associated, will not be colleagues in this body during the Eighty-second Congress.

Some as the result of successful primaries will vie for seats in the other body; others will contest elections for gubernatorial seats; a number are retiring voluntarily; and the Grim Reaper has made untimely visits, thereby lessening the group of familiar names and faces.

The Republican State Convention at New Haven, Conn., on last Thursday by its action added another famous name to the list when it nominated as its candidate for Governor my friend and your colleague, JOHN DAVIS LODGE, the Representative from the Fourth District of the great Constitution State.

From my close observance of the gentleman and association with him, I am of the opinion that JOHN DAVIS LODGE is a man of outstanding ability, of unquestioned integrity and one possessing a great capacity for hard work. It was in recognition of his ability, background, and experience that Mr. LODGE has been selected for a larger opportunity of service to all of the people in Connecticut.

Mr. KEATING. Mr Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADLAK. I am happy to yield to my colleague from New York.

Mr. KEATING. JOHN LODGE came to Congress at the same time I did, and it so happened that I had the good fortune to occupy an office next to his. I feel that, perhaps, with the exception of his Connecticut colleagues, I learned to know his great qualities of mind and heart as well, if not better, than any other Member in the House. Frequently we had occasion to discuss, after the heat of the day was over, problems affecting the veterans, for whom our distinguished colleague, Mr. LODGE, was always a strong supporter, himself being a veteran with a distinguished record. We discussed problems of agriculture, problems of the industrial worker, and problems relating to the responsibilities of our country in the international field, and many others. JOHN LODGE always displayed a great interest in all of these matters; an unusual grasp of the fundamental issues involved, and what is perhaps of even greater importance in the performance of the duties to which many of us hope he will be called, a deep and sincere quality of heart in his desire to see this made a better country, in his desire to see that all of its citizens enjoyed greater prosperity and well-being.

I am very happy that the gentleman has risen here today for this purpose and privileged to have the opportunity of saying on behalf of JOHN LODGE that I know of no Member of this body who has contributed more during his service than has he. I sincerely hope that the people of the great State, for which the gentleman now speaking is the Congressman at Large, will recognize the rare privilege which is theirs to support a man of JOHN LODGE'S ability and integrity for the office of Governor. We, his colleagues and the Nation will miss his outstanding services here, but Connecticut will be the gainer through our loss.

Mr. SADLAK. I am most grateful for the gentleman's gracious statement in regard to my colleague [Mr. LODGE].

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADLAK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Mrs. BOLTON of Ohio. I want to thank my colleague from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK] very much for the opportunity this gives some of us to express ourselves in the matter of JOHN LODGE'S leaving this House, we hope, as our colleague from New York has said, to take on the chief administrative job in the State of Connecticut.

I happen to have a particular interest in Connecticut because my people came from there. They went out to the Connecticut Western Reserve in Ohio when the British burned their properties. We still have in the family the little farmhouse 50 miles from Hartford, where they lived for several centuries.

JOHN LODGE exemplifies so many things that I like to feel the younger men exemplify, men like yourself, Mr. SADLAK, the finer qualities of American manhood, courage, willingness to work, and ability to apply themselves to those things that matter.

JOHN LODGE has had a wide experience. His war service was in the Navy, where he proved his capacities and his courage. A man of great personal charm, with a gift in languages, he has served this country in unusual ways. He came to the Committee on Foreign Affairs as one of what we of longer experience called the "young fry," and soon made himself felt in the committee. He has done a very splendid job.

As a member of a subcommittee of which I was chairman several years ago he went to Europe, stopping off in Italy and France. His report was most interesting and helpful to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and to the other Members of Congress.

I know all the Members on both sides of our committee table are exceedingly interested that John be given an opportunity to use his fine capacity to the greatest extent, and although probably the other side of the table would like to see the other fellow win this fall, when John wins they will give him a hand because they admire him and like him, and they find him good to work with.

I do not know that there is anything finer that can be said of a man than that he is good to work with. You get to know him, you get to understand him, and then you are able to laugh with him, too.

I want to thank the gentleman from Connecticut once again for the privilege of saying these few words about this colleague of ours. With many others of this great body I shall miss him greatly. May he have Dame Fortune on his side.

Mr. SADLAK. I am most grateful for those kind words.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADLAK. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. May I say to my friend and colleague from Connecticut that I, too, regret that JOHN LODGE is to leave the House of Representatives. During our association here I found him more interested in people than in things. I shall always remember his concern for the displaced Polish soldiers who fought in the forces of freedom in World War II. We now know that the new Displaced Persons Act provides for the entry of thousands of those soldiers through the amendment sponsored by him on this floor. That is one of the monuments to his work here.

Mr. SADLAK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SADLAK. I yield to the minority leader.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I appreciate the yielding by my good friend, the able and distinguished Representative from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK].

It is true, as he says, that there are many older members leaving the House, men we can ill afford to lose. Through years of experience and knowledge they are of great value to the Congress and in helping to solve our many difficult problems. But that is the way of life. Time marches on and the call of duty beckons to other fields of State and national service.

So it has been with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE]. I have been acquainted with Mr. LODGE for a good many years. It was my privilege many years ago to be the campaign manager for his illustrious grandfather in his final contest for the United States Senate. The Lodge family has been a family with a long history of national service—of men who enter the service of country with but one purpose, and that is to serve their country and make this life a better one.

I am happy over the nomination of Mr. LODGE for Governor of Connecticut. I think he will be elected. I know he will be a good Governor. I know the people of Connecticut will be very fortunate indeed to get a man of his many attainments and abilities, of his courage and praiseworthy purpose.

Men like JOHN LODGE bring a new spirit and a new lift into the national service. He knows people and how to deal with them. He has the capacity to give a sound and able administration; the desire to promote the welfare of all the people.

So I join with my good friend from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK] in congratulating Mr. LODGE upon his call to a higher service. I know Connecticut will prosper if it chooses him for the high office of Governor.

Mr. SADLAK. I am grateful for the gentleman's fine contribution.

I yield to my colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. MCDONOUGH].

Mr. MCDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say in connection with this symposium which the gentleman from Connecticut is so aptly putting on at this time that we are all happy for Mr. LODGE on his nomination for Governor of Connecticut.

We are hopeful that he will be successful. In that same connection, may I say that it is my hope that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK] who is a candidate for Congressman-at-large from the State of Connecticut, will also be successful in his own reelection to the House as a Member of the Eighty-second Congress.

In my opinion he has shown a courage and statesmanlike attitude in the House of Representatives that the people of the State of Connecticut can be proud of. The fact that he has to run at large, just as the governor, as well as the fact that he belongs to the present minority party, makes his task difficult and I hope he will be successful.

I trust the people of Connecticut will fully appreciate his excellent services here in the House of Representatives and that they will return him for another term which he has earned and is so deservedly entitled to.

Mr. SADLAK. I am most grateful for this unexpected tribute from my friend, the gentleman from California.

I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should like also to pay tribute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK]. I hope he will return to the House with even a greater majority than he had before.

He has worked mightily for the protection of the industries of New England and is fighting day by day for everything that is fine in America.

I join with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SADLAK] in our appreciation of Mr. JOHN LODGE. We shall miss him in the House. I have a personal feeling of interest and affection for him because of his Massachusetts association and his Massachusetts forbears. We were very sorry to lose him to the State of Connecticut.

I would like also to mention that I believe the gentleman is making a very real sacrifice in leaving the House, because he is a prominent member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, and has taken an enormous interest in all our international affairs as well as the internal affairs of the United States of America.

He will make a very able governor. We shall miss him. We shall also miss his charming helpmeet who has been very helpful to Mr. LODGE in his career.

Mr. SADLAK. I thank the gentlewoman very much.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who desire to do so may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity of joining with my colleagues in saying a few words regarding JOHN DAVIS LODGE. While as a Massachusetts man I have known members of his family for many years, I did not have an opportunity to get to know him intimately until he came to the House. During the years here, we have worked on many problems together. Not only has he been practical, but he has been able to apply a very keen and discriminating intelligence to each legislative problem as it came along. In addition, with his diligence and conscientiousness, he has made an outstanding legislator.

The Republican Party of Connecticut is to be congratulated in choosing him for its nominee for Governor. My one regret in his acceptance is that the House of Representatives will be the loser. All of us who know him will wish him the victory he so fully deserves in November.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, it has often been said that the great men and their accomplishments die with them; that their descendants are people of average or mediocre ability, who contribute very little to the national scene. Not so in the case of my good friend and your colleague, the Honorable JOHN DAVIS LODGE, who is a member of a family that has distinguished itself in many fields of work. John epitomizes the growing concern of the American people for a world which is ever growing smaller; for a world in which nations, through the sheer necessity of the atomic age, must learn to live together. In him we find a man with vigorous ideas which are keyed to the needs of this modern day and age.

During my close association with and observation of John, I have always been impressed with his warm friendliness of manner, his competence and his integrity, and have found him to be a man of the people. As one who has served the State of Connecticut and the Nation capably in Congress, who served with distinction in the naval service, who has comprehensive knowledge of domestic and foreign affairs, John is undoubtedly well fitted to become the Governor of the great State of Connecticut, particularly in a time when all public officials must have vision and understanding not only of national but international problems.

Connecticut sorely needs a helmsman capable of steering the State through the turbulent waters of economic dislocation. JOHN LODGE is the direct antithesis of the present executive in our State and, under John's able guidance, our citizens may look forward to a steady course in the future. I doubt not that our citizens will recognize his worth and ability, as have the constituents in his congressional district on two occasions, and as have we who served with him in the Congress.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God our Father, we thank Thee for the unquenchable impulse toward Thee Thou hast planted in us. Open our eyes to see Thee, not out on the far rim of the universe, in some distant star, but in human love which hallows our lives and which edges with crimson and gold the common days.

Conscious of Thy overshadowing presence, we pray for fidelity, not to shirk the issues of these momentous days. May our own lives freed of pettiness and prejudice, and radiant with good will which leaps all barriers, be channels through which Thy saving grace may flow for the healing of the nations. Amen.

INVESTIGATION OF COST OF EQUALIZING WHITE AND NEGRO SCHOOL BUILDINGS

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, out of order, I introduce a joint resolution which would require the Department of Education in the Federal Security Agency to investigate and compute the cost of equalizing white and Negro school buildings in the South. The object of the joint resolution is to ascertain the cost of equalizing the school-building facilities in order that some equitable basis may be arrived at for contributions by the Federal Government and the States involved to equalize the white and Negro school-building facilities in the States with a dual school system.

Recent decisions of the Supreme Court are an attempt to tear down the dual school system of the South. The Southern States, Mr. President, have offered the world a classic example of two races in great numbers who live side by side in harmony and good will. In fact, there is more racial amity and harmony in the Southern States than in the city of Washington or in any of the Northern or Eastern States. The basis of this sound racial relationship is the dual school system cherished by white and black alike. As long as the system prevails the sources of friction are removed and amity and good will will be permitted to flourish.

Mr. President, racial segregation is our way of life. The white race, the Negro race do not desire and will not have interracial schools. The Negro race desires better schools, and this the southern white man is giving, and will continue to give. Who will deny that tremendous progress has been made?

There is much about the system and its practical aspects that outsiders do not understand. In the first place there is a time lag between intention and realization that is very real, but unavoidable. The common sense of the American people must realize that 85 years ago there were very few, if any, Negro school teachers or Negro school buildings in the South. The Negro race was illiterate and was just emerging from slavery. The South manfully and with a deep regard for its responsibility embarked upon a program of education for the Negroes living in their midst. A Negro school system was started from scratch. The problem was further complicated by the poverty in which the South was overwhelmed as a result of the war and the chaos attendant upon reconstruction. Among many vast problems, not only were we confronted with the problem of Negro education but with the rehabilitation of white education. No one in his right mind would say that the South should have retarded white education in order that a previously nonexistent Negro educational system could be built up. The task of educating Negro teachers and the building of Negro schools has grown apace with the advancement of economic conditions in the South. The time lag necessarily inherent in the problem which confronted the South has been narrowed with the passing years. In fact, in the past few years, as economic conditions improve, Negro education has made more progress than white education in the Southern States.

To show the progress that is being made I asked the Department of Education in the Federal Security Agency to give me figures on three Southern States. We selected North Carolina, Georgia, and Mississippi.

In the school year 1941–42 Georgia spent on Negro schools $3,893,000. In 1947–48, Georgia spent $12,426,000. In other words, in a period of 6 years Georgia more than tripled its Negro school appropriations.

In 1941–42 North Carolina spent $7,799,000 on Negro education and in 1947–48 North Carolina spent $23,200,000. Thus, in this period North Carolina more than tripled its appropriation for Negro education.

In Mississippi in 1940 $2,200,000, was spent on Negro education and in 1950 $8,832,000. Thus, Mississippi in 10 years had quadrupled its appropriations for Negro education. Teachers' salaries also in the South have almost without exception been equalized.

If the South is permitted to continue its efforts and the country is patient, the educational difficulties of the South will be solved. Southern people favor better schools, better hospitals and health facilities for the Negro. In fact, Mr. President, southern people believe in equality of economic opportunity for the Negro. We of the South realize that as an area we cannot prosper if the Negro is ground down in poverty. We realize that his increased purchasing power and a higher standard of living for him mean a higher standard of living for everyone. It is only when the social angle is injected that we draw the line.

Mr. President, we have no apologies to make for racial segregation. Regardless of what the agitators say, racial segregation in the South is not about to crumble. We believe in it. We shall continue to practice it. We defy those meddlers who attempt to force racial equality upon us. Segregation lives in the minds and hearts of southerners. It is integral to southern culture. As the agitators and racial demagogs rave and rant against it, they merely strengthen the determination of southern people to protect their culture and preserve their way of life.

Mr. President, regardless of court decrees, the dual school system will continue to exist and flourish. There is no other way. An educational system cannot be built by substituting chaos for order, and strife for amity. Examples are replete over the Nation. Where schools are mixed in approximately even numbers there is great friction and discord, and education suffers. The Anglo-Saxon people of the South cannot permit themselves to be submerged. They cannot permit their culture to be destroyed. They cannot permit their educational system to be wrecked. We cannot permit agitators and strife breeders in combination with pressure groups, who know nothing of the problem, to force us to relinquish a segregated-school system. We demand, and we shall enforce the right as human beings to live our lives and set up our social customs as we please.

We desire to equalize the school facilities between the races. If the States are not financially able to equalize them immediately, then the Federal Government if it is sincerely interested in helping the Negro, should contribute to the construction of school buildings. The object of the joint resolution introduced by me is to ascertain the amount of money it will take in order that we can decide upon equitable percentages of contributions by the States and by the Federal Government. The States involved will operate the school facilities without Federal aid or Federal donations after their construction.

Mr. President, because of the position of the court, because of the drive to destroy the South, because of the attempt by the use of force of the Federal Government to remold us to the image desired by agitators who know nothing about our conditions or our problems, I cannot and will not vote for Federal aid to education. I cannot and will not support anything which could in time give the Federal Government any voice in the control of our school system either white or black. We cannot permit our schools to become dependent upon Federal aid, and I shall certainly oppose any appropriation of Federal funds for maintenance of or the operation of the schools of the country. I am afraid that American democracy is doomed if we have Federal bureaucratic control of the school system. With the present political complexion of the country it is plain to me that a program for Federal aid for schools is the most dangerous proposition that has ever faced us. I shall oppose it to the limit and I hope if it is ever enacted my State of Mississippi and all Southern States will refuse to accept Federal funds. We cannot afford to gamble with the welfare of little children.

If it takes more money for the operation of our schools, then the money must be provided by the States. Let us not be so naive as to believe that when our school system is dependent upon Federal moneys, and we are at the mercy of the Federal Government, the anti-southern pressure groups will not open their drive to control our school system and use it to teach our children what they want them to learn and mold to their desires our social habits.

No, Mr. President, Federal aid for the maintenance and support of schools in the South cannot be accepted without bringing with it a train of evils now so clearly indicated. On the other hand, if the Nation is truly concerned with a more rapid advancement in educational facilities for the Negroes then the sensible and acceptable way to accomplish it is through the building of school facilities and physical properties. This can be accomplished at a far less expense than could a Federal-aid-for-education proposal. The job can be done in the course of a few years and no further Federal obligation will be incurred. It is the realistic, practical approach to a very complicated problem.

I send the joint resolution to the desk for appropriate reference.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 189) to provide for a study of the cost of equalizing public elementary and secondary schools in States where separate schools are maintained for minority races, introduced by Mr. EASTLAND, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

ACTION ON RENT-CONTROL CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, yesterday when the majority leader made a request for unanimous consent to vote upon his amendment to strike the so-called Russell amendment from the selective-service measure, the junior Senator from Nebraska, reserving the right to object, asked the majority leader if it was his intention to move a recess after the amendment had been voted on. That colloquy is found on page 8989 of the RECORD. It was my understanding that the majority leader stated that immediately after the vote on the Russell amendment, there would be a recess until 11 o'clock this morning.

Because of that, I informed several Senators on this side of the aisle that there would be no further voting, and some were absent at the time when the rent-control conference report came up for consideration, and did not have an opportunity to vote on it. In fact, I was one of the Senators who was absent, having made an engagement, after the assurance that there would be no further votes taken, with a Nebraska constituent who was in Washington asking for relief from an order of one of the Government agencies.

Mr. President, I want the RECORD to show that I was absent on that official business, and that I relied upon the statement of the majority leader that there would be no vote. I was necessarily absent. If I had been present and permitted to vote, I would have voted against the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, in my opinion Members of the Senate should take into consideration the fact that an effort is being made to bring about final adjournment on July 31, and although the majority leader may announce that it is the intention to adjourn or take a recess following a certain record vote, yet when matters come up which are more or less agreed to, as was the rent-control conference report, and no fight is made against them, it is nevertheless appropriate to act on such matters. I believe that in the future every Senator should hold himself in readiness to be present immediately after any vote may be taken, in order that the business of the Senate may be transacted.

Of course, announcements may be made as to what the intentions are, but after a yea-and-nay vote yesterday, when nearly all Senators were present, no objection was made to proceeding with the rent-control conference report, and I do not believe it can be said there was any breach of faith so far as the majority leader was concerned. The minority was represented on the floor of the Senate when the request was made. The question was asked as to whether there was any objection to considering the rent-control conference report, and no objection was made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to join the Senator from Nebraska in protesting the action that was taken last night. I was present in the Chamber at the time the majority leader made the announcement that immediately following the vote on the Lucas amendment he would ask for a recess of the Senate, and that no further business would be transacted. After voting on the amendment when the yeas and nays were called, I, too, left the Senate to catch a train, with the full understanding that there would be no further business transacted.

I think the Members of the Senate have a right to expect that when the majority leader gives us an indication of his program, he will live up to what he tells us he will do. I have no objection to the majority leader holding a night session if he wishes, but I must say that when he tells the Senate something, we have a right to accept his statement.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, the Members of the Senate should expect that until adjournment controversial matters may be brought up, and they should take notice that conference reports may come up at any time and be acted upon when no objection is made. The question was asked whether there was any objection to the consideration of the conference report on the rent control bill, and no objection was made. If any Senator on the other side had desired to object, there would have been a different story, but no objection was made to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I want the floor in my own right if I can get it.

Mr. McFARLAND. Very well.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not disposed to argue with the acting majority leader. His admonition that Senators should be on the floor is one which I have expressed many times, and I will put my record against his or that of any other Senator so far as attendance on the floor of the Senate is concerned. But that is not the point involved at all. We on this side are perfectly willing to cooperate 100 percent with the majority in attempting to facilitate and approve or to disapprove programs and measures which are presented. But I should like to say once again that the rent-control measure is a controversial one. The fact that a record vote was taken upon the conference report shows that the subject of rent control is controversial. The vote on the conference report was 40 yeas and 24 nays. That in itself shows that the subject is controversial. If no objection had been made to the consideration of the conference report, but a yea-and-nay vote were asked for, then, in order to keep faith with the Members of the Senate, I believe the majority leader should have requested that the report go over until 11 o'clock this morning and have the vote taken then in order that all Senators who desired to do so could express themselves on the conference report.

I should like to say to my distinguished friend from Arizona that, if now announcement is to be made which, regardless of any statements made to the contrary, I can depend upon, the minority Members will be here. They will be here from the time we start until we adjourn and will be ready for any emergency.

Certainly, Mr. President, I relied in good faith upon the statement of the majority leader. I want Senators to know that when I told Members of this side that they might go home last night, as there would be no further vote taken, I did so in good faith.

Even though the minority did not make objection when the proposal was made to consider the conference report, yet when there developed a controversy and a yea-and-nay vote was asked for, I think the only fair thing to have done at that time would have been to hold the conference report over until this morning. It would only have required a few minutes this morning to have the vote taken, and if that had been done each and every Member would have had an opportunity to vote upon the report.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I do not care to prolong the colloquy. I am not speaking for the majority leader. But I serve notice that when I am in the position of acting majority leader, and the question is asked whether there is any objection on this side or the other side to proceeding with a measure, and no objection is made, I shall consider it proper to proceed to the consideration of the measure. That is exactly what happened in connection with the conference report on the rent-control bill.

I am informed that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK] did not consult the majority leader, because the Senator from South Carolina had an agreement with the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] that the report could be considered and a decision upon it had by voice vote. The Senator from Washington later wanted a yea-and-nay vote. No objection was made on the other side to a yea-and-nay vote. The question was not raised until after the vote was taken. So I do not consider that any breach of faith is involved.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for an inquiry, does the acting majority leader propose to ask unanimous consent for the transaction of routine business?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be transaction of the usual routine business at this time, without speeches or debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MRS. MARION T. SCHWARTZ—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 1169) for the relief of Mrs. Marion T. Schwartz, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1169) for the relief of Mrs. Marion T. Schwartz, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by the Senate amendment, insert "$3,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

PAT MCCARRAN,
HERBERT R. O'CONOR,
ALEXANDER WILEY,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

WILLIAM T. BYRNE,
WINFIELD K. DENTON,
JOHN JENNINGS, JR.,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, will the distinguished Senator from Nevada give us an explanation of what is involved?

Mr. McCARRAN. Briefly, the facts in the case are that the now deceased husband of the claimant was injured through the negligence of a civilian employee of the Army, at the Oakland Army Base, in September 1944. At the time of his injuries, the deceased was a part-time employee of the Government working at the Army base three evenings a week, and earning approximately $48 a month. He was regularly employed in the daytime as a clerk, for the East Bay Municipal Utility District of Oakland, where he earned about $280 a month. There was a manpower shortage at the time, and all able-bodied men in the vicinity had been urged as a patriotic duty to take this part-time work wherever possible.

As a Government employee, Schwartz received compensation payments from the Bureau of Employees' Compensation, but because such payments were calculated on the basis of the monthly wage of the employee, the amounts he received for his injuries were negligible, in view of the serious nature thereof. That is to say, he was paid $283.20. For this reason the Government agencies concerned were inclined to look with favor upon the bill as passed by the House. The Senate committee reduced the amount awarded by the House to $1,671, which was the amount that he actually lost in wages from his regular employment because of the injuries sustained on the part-time job.

The compromise between the House and the Senate was for $3,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask another question or two?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Are we receding from the Senate's position?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes. This is a private claim which has been in conference since April 25, 1949. The conference committee consisted of the senior Senator from Nevada, the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], and the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY].

The House passed the bill providing for an award of $4,000. The Senate Judiciary Committee proposed an amendment reducing the amount to $1,671, and the Senate accepted this amendment and passed the bill in that form. The conferees have split the difference, making the figure $3,000.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the conference report is agreed to.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of June 21, 1950]

BRITAIN MOVING FOR UN ENTRY OF CHINESE REDS—PLANS TO EASE THEM IN BY FIRST GETTING THEM INTO UN SUBSIDIARY GROUPS

(By Kenneth Bilby)

LONDON, June 20.—Cautiously, and with considerable reluctance, the British Government is taking new soundings on the possibility of getting the Chinese Communist regime admitted to the United Nations, it was established today.

When the Economic and Social Council, one of the UN's major organs, convenes in Geneva again on July 3, British representatives, according to Foreign Office sources, will sound out other neutrals on the possibility of switching from abstention to affirmative votes for the Reds.

Until a majority is assured for the Communists, Britain will not change from abstention. But there are unmistakable official signs that the Government is exercising persuasion to induce smaller nations such as Ecuador, Cuba, and Egypt to support a switch in Chinese regimes.

It was officially conceded today, in fact, that British representatives at the meeting of the International Children's Emergency Fund consulted other countries on the subject. When it was determined that a majority could not be raised, the British decided it would be premature to press for a vote.

The British initiative is based on the conviction that the United States, for political reasons, is helpless to lead a movement in favor of the Communist regime. Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin informed the House of Commons last month of the Government's desire to see the Communist regime admitted as the representative of the vast majority of the Chinese people, if Russia would cease its boycott of the UN.

Since Russia has not altered its policy, Britain is moving toward the goal of a unified UN via the back door. Rather than switching to an affirmative vote itself, and thus pressing for Chinese Communist admission to the Security Council, the Government appears to be seeking a solution through the fringe organizations where countries not members of the Security Council are represented.

It is obvious, in the British view, that if the new Chinese Government is seated in first one and then two or three of the subsidiary organizations of the UN, it will be impossible to refuse participation in the Security Council deliberations. It is pointed out here that an intolerable situation would arise if two warring Chinese delegations were represented in the UN on different bodies. If the Communists gain a foothold, their status as Chinese representatives is expected by the British to spread rapidly throughout the UN.

Britain's embarrassment at taking the initiative in this delicate problem is manifest here. Having already recognized the Communist regime, the British have been informed that they cannot expect Communist counterrecognition unless they adopt a positive attitude toward the new rulers in the UN. Rather than submit to this direct pressure, the Government is adamant in refusing to vote affirmative until a majority of the UN members are ready to endorse the new regime.

In the meantime, however, encouraged by strong hints that France is prepared to support the Chinese Communists, the British Government is pursuing that aim quietly in the belief that ultimately the Communists are bound to be admitted.

SAVING THE UN

(By Ludwell Denny)

A slick diplomatic trick is being worked to slip Red China into the United Nations through the back door as payment of Soviet blackmail.

Stalin says he will continue to boycott the UN until he has his way, so some are ready to appease him in the name of friendship for the international security organization.

Trygve Lie, UN Secretary General, leads this movement. But he cannot deliver without support of the British and French foreign offices. He is beginning to get that aid from London and Paris.

If the movement succeeds the results will extend far beyond a Russian victory and American defeat on the China issue, which is the immediate point of dispute. It will change the nature of the UN. It will confirm the trend by which Stalin has been gaining negative control of the UN—through misuse of the veto power, and through boycotting the organization unless it bows to his dictate.

Even the most enthusiastic appeasers cannot contend such a shackled and subservient body was the kind the authors of the Charter supposed they were creating at the San Francisco conference.

Some may argue—with disregard of past costly failures of appeasement—that this is a more realistic approach to peace and security. But it is the opposite method to which the Russian Government and all others pledged their honor and their loyalty when they signed the Charter.

Secretary-General Lie is accused by United States Senators and others of being a Stalin tool. To attempt to judge the motives of a public servant is usually as fruitless as it is unfair. But regardless of motives, the net effect of Mr. Lie's avowed activities is to get Russia back into the UN operation on Stalin's terms rather than to guard the Charter standards.

Mr. Lie's recent trip to Moscow, his report to UN members, and his projected campaign trip to Europe on June 30, coincide with Stalin's phony "peace" maneuvers to split the defensive democratic alliance barring Soviet aggression.

The British Foreign Office made the mistake some months ago of recognizing Stalin's puppet regime in Peiping, only to be snubbed by those Reds. Now they promise to return the recognition favor, and save Britain's face, if she will get them seated in the UN.

This week Britain tried behind the scenes to slip Red China into one UN subsidiary body and failed. She probably will repeat the effort when the UN Economic and Social Council meets in Geneva July 3.

Meanwhile France, which has withheld recognition of the Peiping Reds because of their aid to the Indochina revolution, is putting out feelers for a deal on the UN pay-off. Britain and France together might also swing the votes of Egypt, Ecuador, and Cuba.

And all this is happening in the name of "saving" the UN.

THE THREATENED RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I should like to have the permission of the Senate to introduce certain items into the RECORD, and make a brief statement with regard to them, which will take only 5 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be set forth in the body of the RECORD two articles appearing today, one in the Washington Post entitled "Rail Tie-Up Threatened Over Nation," the other an article appearing in the New York Times of this morning entitled "Switchmen To Strike on Sunday on Five Roads Over 40-Hour Week."

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of June 22, 1950]

REAL TIE-UP THREATENED OVER NATION

CHICAGO, June 21.—AFL switchmen today called a strike for Sunday against five big western and midwestern lines. The carriers said a Nation-wide tie-up is threatened for July 15 by a walk-out of two other unions.

The Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific, one of the five lines named in the switchmen's strike call, said it will shut down completely Sunday if the men go out. The Rock Island operates an 8,000-mile rail system between Chicago and the west coast. It also serves the Southwest.

The AFL Switchmen's Union of North America also called a strike for 6 a. m. local time Sunday against the Great Northern, Chicago Great Western, Denver & Rio Grande Western, and the Western Pacific lines.

The carriers said the switchmen's union and the big trainmen and conductors' unions notified them they were rejecting wage and hour recommendations made June 15 by a Presidential fact-finding board.

CAN STRIKE ANY TIME

The switchmen's union can strike legally at any time, having complied with all peace machinery of the Railroad Labor Act. The trainmen and conductors are restrained from striking before July 15 by a 30-day cooling-off requirement of the act.

There was a chance that some other roads named in the switchmen's strike call would not attempt to operate. Daniel P. Loomis, chairman of the Association of Western Railroads, said before the Rock Island announcement he understood some of the railroads planned to shut down.

The Presidential board recommended a 40-hour week and 18-cent hourly pay boost for 75,000 railroad yard employees but denied wage raises for 125,000 trainmen and conductors who man the trains. The ruling applied specifically to the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors. In a separate case the board recommended a 40-hour week and 18-cent hourly pay increase for 4,000 yard workers represented by the Railroad Yardmasters of North America.

The trainmen and conductors did not set a strike date. They will meet in Chicago July 10 to consider future action.

The board did not hear the switchmen's case but recommended to President Truman April 19 that the findings in behalf of other yard workers be applied to these employees. The switchmen's union rejected this recommendation and has been legally free to strike since May 19, when the 30-day cooling-off period ended.

The yard workers represented by unions had asked 40 hours' work at 48 hours' pay. In addition the 125,000 operating employees represented by the trainmen's and conductors' unions had demanded a sliding scale of pay rates depending on weight of locomotives and reduction of the basic day on passenger trains from the present 150 miles or 7½ hours to 100 miles or 5 hours.

[From the New York Times of June 22, 1950]

SWITCHMEN TO STRIKE ON SUNDAY ON FIVE ROADS OVER 40-HOUR WEEK

CHICAGO, June 2.—The Switchmen's Union of North America, AFL, announced today it would strike at 6 a. m. Sunday against five midwestern and western railroads, including two Chicago lines.

The railroads scheduled to be struck include the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co., the Chicago & Great Western Railway Co., the Great Northern Railway Co., the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co., and the Western Pacific Railroad Co. The Rock Island and the Great Western have their headquarters in Chicago.

With many of the major western roads unaffected by the strike call, a serious curtailment of passenger and freight traffic from the East and consigned through Chicago to western points is not expected.

In the case of the Rock Island, however, service would be interrupted daily for an average 2,000 through passengers and several hundred shippers who use the carrier's 8,000-mile system in 14 States in the West and Southwest.

ROCK ISLAND TO SHUT DOWN

Officials of the Great Western said tonight they were taking no immediate steps to cancel its 10 passenger and 30 freight trains operated daily between Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, and the Twin Cities.

Shortly after the union issued its strike call, J. D. Farrington, president of the Rock Island, announced his line would shut down completely if the walk-out was not canceled before Sunday morning. He noted that the union had 1,400 members on the Rock Island.

The strike call was issued to enforce a union demand for a 40-hour week without a reduction in pay. At present switchmen work 48 and 56 hours a week. The strike against the five lines would involve about 4,000 switchmen. The union says it has a membership of 25,000, but railroad spokesmen insist that the figure is only 6,000.

Computed on a 48-hour week, the present average annual pay of switchmen was reported as follows: Switch tenders, $4,010; yard conductors, $4,976; and yard brakemen, $3,944. A spokesman for the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, whose membership includes 85,000 switchmen, said the switchmen's workweek was virtually the same on all roads.

A. J. Glover, president of the switchmen, who issued the strike call, said:

"It is about time the switchmen had a 40-hour week. American industry has operated on a 40-hour week for years. More than 1,000,000 other railroad workers have a 40-hour week."

UNION POLITICS CHARGED

Mr. Loomis, however, said that the switchmen were playing union politics in their ambition to make a better showing than two other rival unions, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors.

"The switchmen in their reckless drive for prestige and members are making a mockery of the Railway Labor Act," he said.

Although the union demand is relatively simple, its position is complicated in connection with the Railway Labor Act. When the switchmen's case came before President Truman for assignment to a fact-finding board, he named as a board the same men who were reviewing similar demands presented by the trainmen, the Order of Railway Conductors, and the yardmasters of America. The trainmen's union has many members who do switchmen's work.

The board and the switchmen's union failed to agree, however, on the order in which the union's case was to be reviewed. It was never formally heard in the customary way. The board stated, however, that its findings in regard to the other three unions should also apply to the switchmen.

Last week the board recommended that all the yard workers be put on a 40-hour week and be given an increase of 18 cents an hour to compensate in part for the loss of 1 day of work. The railroads agreed to this, but the switchmen, trainmen, and conductors rejected it.

Meanwhile Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., chairman of the National (Railway) Mediation Board, and Leverett Edwards, board member, came to Chicago in an effort to head off the walk-out. They helped settle the strike of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen against five railroads last month.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, in the article in the New York Times it is stated that—

The railroads scheduled to be struck include the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co., the Chicago & Great Western Railway Co., the Great Northern Railway Co., the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co., and the Western Pacific Railroad Co.

The strike has been called by the Switchmen's Union of North America, A. F. L., and has been called for 6 o'clock on the morning of Sunday next, against these five midwestern and western railroads.

Mr. President, I think it is of particular importance that these matters be inserted in the body of the RECORD because of their immediate applicability to the pendency of a bill which I had the honor of introducing on April 21, Senate bill 3463, included in which bill is a provision that—

Any strike, including any concerted stoppage of work by employees or any concerted slow-down, sit-down, walk-out, or other concerted interruption of operations by employees, or any lock-out by a carrier, arising out of or in connection with any dispute falling within the purview of this act—shall be unlawful.

Mr. President, the Nation has only recently passed through strikes and threatened strikes in the railway industry. In addition to the one by the switchmen which has just been called for next Sunday morning, I undertake to say there is substantial reason for apprehension with respect to what the trainmen and the conductors may likewise do with respect to a controversy now pending. I call attention also to the fact that the carriers have stated that the switchmen's union and the big trainmen's and conductors' unions notified the carriers they were rejecting the wage-and-hour recommendations made June 15 by a Presidential fact-finding board.

I shall not go into details at this time with respect to the effect of a strike such as that which has been called for next Sunday morning, but I should like to have the RECORD include a paragraph from what I think was a telegraphic message sent or to be sent by Mr. J. D. Farrington, president, Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co., a copy of which I received yesterday afternoon or evening, which paragraph reads:

It is unfortunate that this strike comes just when the new wheat crop is being harvested and regrettable that numerous industries and towns which are served by 8,000 miles of Rock Island lines in 14 States will be seriously crippled. The strike of our 1,500 switchmen will cause approximately 20,000 of the other employees to be laid off for the duration. The situation arising from this strike will so paralyze transportation throughout the widespread area served by the struck railroads, a great part of which area is not served by other railroads, as to create an emergency which will affect the entire national economy and thus create a national emergency which should be averted promptly by appropriate legislation to protect the interests of the public, the railroads, and the nonstriking employees.

Mr. President, I submit that this pending strike and the history of the past few weeks, the tremendously dangerous situation which developed in 1946 when for 2 days practically the entire Nation's railways were paralyzed in a Nation-wide strike, the situation existing in 1948 when it was only through a Federal injunction that a strike which was then threatened was called off—all of these illustrate and indicate most strikingly and conclusively the high importance of the Senate giving prompt and active consideration to the passage of a bill which as Senate bill 3463, which would make unlawful, as I have indicated, any strike or any lockout by a carrier arising out of or in connection with any dispute falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act.

From time to time I shall take the liberty of asking unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD various newspaper articles and perhaps magazine articles which bear upon the vital importance to our country of seeing to it that we realize and, through legislation, implement the realization, that not merely the interest of the carriers or the interest of their employees is involved in these strikes, but, likewise, the interest of a third party, the public of the Nation, is involved. That fact emphasizes indisputably, to my mind, the importance and urgent necessity of placing into effect some such legislation as that which I have proposed.

Mr. President, as I have indicated, in my judgment Senate bill 3463 is the remedy to apply at this time. I believe we should make any strike in this particular field unlawful, not solely because of its effect upon the carriers or upon the employees who are striking, or upon the employees of other departments of the railways, but because of the interest of the public at large. Therefore, I think the Congress should and must pass effective antistrike legislation applicable to this field of industry.

Mr. DONNELL subsequently said: Mr. President, in emphasizing further the importance of prompt enactment into law of the bill (S. 3463) to make unlawful strikes and lock-outs by carriers, rising out of or in connection with any dispute falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks there be inserted in the body of the RECORD an article appearing in today's Evening Star, of Washington, D. C., entitled "National Rail Tie-up Seen If Other Unions Join Switch Strike."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL RAIL TIE-UP SEEN IF OTHER UNIONS JOIN SWITCH STRIKE

CHICAGO, June 22.—A possible Nation-wide rail tie-up was foreseen today as—

1. A switchmen's union set Sunday as a strike date against five big lines, and

2. Two more unions become legally free to strike July 15.

The Rock Island and the Western Pacific said they would stop running Sunday if the switchmen left work.

The AFL Switchmen's Union of North America told the Rock Island, the Western Pacific, Great Northern, the Chicago Great Western, and the Denver & Rio Grande Western lines yesterday that they were turning down a Presidential board's wage-and-hour recommendations.

PROVISIONS CARRIED OUT

The board made its suggestions April 19. Since May 19, under the Railway Labor Act 30-day "cooling-off" period provision, the switchmen have been legally free to strike. All the peace-making provisions of the law have been carried out.

The carriers were notified at the same time that the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors were rejecting a wage-and-hour recommendation by a Presidential board on June 15, They must "cool off" until July 15.

The officers of the two unions made a joint statement saying the June 15 findings were an "insult" to railroaders, as well as the "most unjust, unfair, inequitable, and injurious report" by the emergency board since enactment of the Railway Labor Law.

F. H. Nemitz, chief of the conductors, and W. P. Kennedy, head of the trainmen, said their unions were "ready to use economic strength, if necessary, to force a fair settlement of the issues."

40-HOUR WEEK RECOMMENDED

The Presidential board April 19 recommended to President Truman that the switchmen be awarded a 40-hour week and an 18-cents-an-hour wage increase. The switchmen want a 40-hour week with the pay they now get for a 48-hour week.

The fact-finders on June 15 specifically did not recommend a boost for the trainmen and conductors when they recommended a 40-hour week and 18 cents an hour to 75,000 yard employees.

The 125,000 members of the trainmen's and conductors' unions also wanted sliding scales of pay rate depending on weight of locomotives and a reduction of the basic day from the present 150 miles or 7½ hours to 100 miles or 5 hours.

The trainmen and conductors did not actually set a strike date. They will meet in Chicago July 10. Future action will be mapped then.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, in further emphasizing the importance of prompt enactment into law of the bill S. 3463, I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD at this point in my remarks an article appearing in the Kansas City Times of today, entitled "Strike Job Peril."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STRIKE JOB PERIL—ROCK ISLAND AND THE WESTERN PACIFIC LINES THREATEN A COMPLETE HALT IF SWITCHMEN GO OUT—UNION MEMBERS NOW PLAN TO WALK OFF POSTS EARLY SUNDAY MORNING

CHICAGO, June 21.—The Rock Island Railroad anounced today it will shut down completely Sunday if strike plans of AFL switchmen go through.

One of five lines named in the switchmen's strike call, the Rock Island operates an 8,000-mile rail system between Chicago and the west coast. It also serves the Southwest.

The carriers said a Nation-wide tie-up is threatened for July 15 by a walk-out of two other unions.

ALSO WOULD CLOSE DOWN

The Western Pacific Railroad will not attempt to operate any trains if the switchmen strike, Frederic B. Whitman, president of the road, said.

"We will close down completely," he said. That will affect about 4,500 employees.

Thirty freight and four passenger trains would be halted, he added.

The switchmen's union also called a strike for 6 a. m. (local time) Sunday against the Great Northern, Chicago Great Western, and Denver & Rio Grande Western.

The carriers said the switchmen's union and the big trainmen's and conductors' unions notified them they were rejecting wage-and-hour recommendations made June 15 by a Presidential fact-finding board.

The switchmen's union can strike legally at any time, having complied with all peace machinery of the Railway Labor Act.

ROCK ISLAND GIVES VIEWS

J. D. Farrington, Rock Island president, said in announcing plans to suspend operations:

"After careful consideration of the situation and the difficulties involved in any attempt to operate in the face of a strike by all switchmen and the possibility of illegal strike of associated running crafts we feel that the interest of the public and the railroads can best be served by our complete suspension of operations over our entire 8,000 miles of system."

He said 20,000 to 21,000 of the system's 23,000 employees will be laid off at a payroll loss of $7,400,000 a month. The union's wage demands, he said, would cost the Rock Island $1,800,000 a year.

The Rock Island operates in Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Tennessee. Its largest yards are outside Chicago, at Silvis, Ill., in Kansas City, Kans., Des Moines, and El Reno, Okla.

The line operates 22 Diesel streamliners and hauls 29,000 Chicago suburbanites daily. Twelve through trains operate in and out of Chicago daily.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, in further emphasis of the necessity for the prompt enactment into law of Senate bill 3463, I ask unanimous consent that at this point in my remarks there be inserted in the body of the RECORD an article appearing on the front page of the Kansas City Times of today, entitled "Unions Increase Pressure on Railroads."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIONS INCREASE PRESSURE ON RAILROADS

CHICAGO, June 21.—The country's 300 class 1 railroads tonight were confronted with strike threats served within a few hours by three unions, which, if carried out, would paralyze the rail transportation systems and imperil the national economy.

Tonight the Brotherhood of Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors, two of the five operating unions, announced that the 250,000 members of the two organizations "were ready to use economic strength, if necessary, to force a fair settlement of the issues."

The announcement was made in a joint statement issued by F. H. Hemitz and W. P. Kennedy, presidents respectively of the ORC and BRT, in which they assailed the Presidential emergency board's findings. They described the findings, issued June 15, as "the most unjust, unfair, inequitable, and injurious report and recommendations issued by an emergency board since the Railway Labor Act became law."

The two unions cannot legally strike before July 15.

The announcement followed one by the switchmen's union which said it would strike against five western and midwestern railroads Sunday.

THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION—LETTER BY THOMAS J. DODD

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, today the New York Times carries a letter signed by a distinguished lawyer of my State, Mr. Thomas J. Dodd. His letter is on the subject of the Genocide Convention. That convention has been referred to the Foreign Relations Committee, and I am informed that it will shortly be considered by the committee. Mr. Dodd, with typical clarity, addressed himself to some of the objections which have been made, but which both he and I believe to be without substance. I ask unanimous consent that his letter be printed at this point in the RECORD, following these remarks by me.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOR GENOCIDE CONVENTION—CONSTITUTION SAID TO PERMIT SUCH INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

As several members of the American Bar Association's Special Committee on Peace and Law Through the United Nations have actively opposed ratification of the Genocide Convention, I, as a member of that same committee, should like to record my opinion in favor of the treaty.

There is no provision in the American Constitution which prevents this country from joining with other civilized nations in this humanitarian pact. To the contrary, the Constitution readily permits this kind of international cooperation, as article I specifically vests Congress with the right to define and punish offenses against the law of nations.

Article V of the Genocide Convention provides that legislatures of the contracting nations implement the treaty through such legislation as their respective constitutions permit. Thus, the treaty is not self-executing. There are several Supreme Court decisions in point.

In Foster against Nielson and United States against Percheman it is stated that a treaty provision which is made dependent on legislative action does not take effect as a law of the land until such action is had.

These cases apply fully to such a treaty as the Genocide Convention.

I had the privilege of serving as executive trial counsel at the Nuremberg trial. Based on this experience, I realize that had this genocide convention been in existence in the early days of the Hitler regime, what happened might not have happened. For one thing, the Nazi state would have stood condemned. Its ministers and ambassadors would not stand in the same position as those of other nations not in violation of a genocide convention, and great numbers of people inside Germany would have taken heart and might have been more vigorous in their resistance to the regime itself.

I have heard it asked: "What can we do about the Russians, who are probably doing the same sort of thing behind the iron curtain now?"

It is not true that Russia is independent of public opinion of the world. Russia is spending hundreds of millions on propaganda in foreign countries. She wants to appear as a savior of the small nations and of the colonial peoples in Asia. She certainly would not like therefore, to see herself exposed as a Cain of nations. Russia will not be able to push genocide too far once it becomes an international crime. She cannot afford to appear before the forum of the world as a common criminal.

THOMAS J. DODD.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1606) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Auf der Heide-Aragona, Inc., and certain of its subcontractors against the United States.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5368) to authorize the Departments of the Army, Navy, and Air Force to participate in the transfer of certain real property or interests therein, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. VINSON, Mr. BROOKS, Mr. KILDAY, Mr. SHORT, and Mr. ARENDS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY BY DEPARTMENTS OF ARMY, NAVY, AND AIR FORCE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5368) to authorize the Departments of the Army, Navy, and Air Force to participate in the transfer of certain real property or interests therein, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BYRD, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. SALTONSTALL conferees on the part of the Senate.

BLAINE W. HUGHES

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on Wednesday, April 19, during the call of the calendar, the Senate passed Senate bill 2807, for the relief of Sgt. Blaine W. Hughes. This bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary on February 7. On February 21, a companion bill, House bill 6692, was passed by the House, and this House bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate on February 22, 1950.

The House bill should have been held on the Senate Calendar, and substituted for the Senate bill when the calendar was called.

Therefore, Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from consideration of House bill 6692, which is identical with the Senate bill, and that it may be immediately considered by the Senate with a view to its passage without amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, as I understand, this action will correct the RECORD; is that correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is to correct the RECORD.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 6692) for the relief of Sgt. Blaine W. Hughes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE WORK AND WORKLOAD AS OF MAY 31, 1950, EIGHTY-FIRST CONGRESS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement with reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The workload of the Senate Judiciary Committee during the Eighty-first Congress, as of May 31, 1950, consisted of 40.3 percent of all Senate bills and resolutions introduced; 49.9 percent of all House bills and resolutions presented in the Senate; and 42.5 percent of all bills and resolutions irrespective of origin.

Not only has the Judiciary Committee received a far larger share of the workload than any other standing committee of the Senate; it has also performed a larger share of all committee work than any other committee. Of 1,754 written reports filed in the Senate by all committees, the Judiciary Committee filed 840, which represents 47.8 percent.

The total of reports filed to the Senate does not give the whole picture of committee activity, because committee consideration of many bills resulted in adverse action and indefinite postponement. Furthermore, the committee has handled and disposed of more than 4,000 individual immigration cases, involving suspension of deportation. Each immigration case is equivalent to a bill.

Through May 31, 1950, during the Eighty-first Congress, the Judiciary Committee has received 1,713 Senate bills and resolutions and 637 House bills and resolutions, making a total of 2,350 bills and resolutions.

As of May 31, 1950, the committee had disposed of 1,043 Senate bills and resolutions and 528 House bills and resolutions, or a total of 1,571 bills and resolutions.

Of the bills thus disposed of, 199 were general bills other than claims or immigration; 676 were private relief bills; 631 were private immigration bills; 14 were general claims bills; and 51 were general immigration bills.

Committee approval was granted to 410 Senate bills and resolutions and 439 House bills and resolutions, or a total of 849 bills and resolutions of both Houses.

It will be noted that written reports were filed by the committee with respect to all but 9 of the 849 bills and resolutions approved.

Of the bills and resolutions acted upon favorably, 102 were general bills other than claims or immigration; 407 were private relief bills; 320 were private immigration bills; 12 were general claims bills; and 8 were general immigration bills.

Bills indefinitely postponed by the committee included 633 Senate bills and resolutions and 89 House bills and resolutions, or a total of 722 bills and resolutions of both Houses.

Of the bills thus acted upon unfavorably, 97 were general bills other than claims or immigration, 269 were private relief bills, 311 were private immigration bills, 2 were general claims bills, and 43 were general immigration bills.

Measures pending before the committee as of May 31, 1950, included 670 Senate bills and resolutions and 109 House bills and resolutions, or a total of 779 bills and resolutions of both Houses.

Of these bills, 103 are general bills other than immigration and claims, 194 are private-relief bills, 451 are private-immigration bills, 23 are general-claims bills, and 8 are general-immigration bills.

It will be noted the committee disposed of 528 House bills and resolutions out of 637 such measures referred to it, leaving only 109 House bills and resolutions pending as of May 31, 1950.

In comparison, out of 1,713 Senate bills and resolutions referred to it, the committee acted upon 1,043, leaving 670 Senate bills and resolutions pending.

In this connection it should be noted the committee received 160 Senate bills and 103 House bills subsequent to March 31, 1950.

Suspensions of deportation by the Attorney General, under authority delegated by the Congress, are submitted in groups; but in the committee, each individual case requires separate investigation, appraisal, and action. At the beginning of the first session, there were pending in the committee 1,501 cases of suspension of deportation, to which were added 5,723 additional cases submitted during the Eighty-first Congress, making a total of 7,224 cases, of which 4,180 were approved, 38 were rejected, and 135 were screened out and held for further consideration, and 10 were withdrawn by the Attorney General, leaving 2,861 cases in process as of May 31, 1950.

Through May 31, 1950, the committee received 207 executive nominations, of which 95 were Federal judges, 49 were United States district attorneys, 46 were United States marshals, 1 was Attorney General of the United States, 1 was an Assistant Solicitor General, 3 were Assistant Attorneys General, 1 was a Commissioner of Patents, 3 were members of the Displaced Persons Commission, 4 were members of the War Claims Commission, and 4 were members of the Motor Carrier Claims Commission.

As of May 31, 1950, nominations not yet acted upon totaled 10.

During the Eighty-first Congress through April 30, 1950, the committee and its subcommittees conducted 139 hearings, which involved 272 separate hearing sessions. The record of these hearings total 29,452 folios.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, during the debate yesterday afternoon, the distinguished majority leader and the distinguished minority leader requested some statistics on enlistments in the armed services. I said I would obtain those figures in detailed tabular form. I now have them.

Before placing these figures in the RECORD, I wish to reiterate, for the third time during this debate, that the armed services is not urging this legislation solely on an emergency basis, either an emergency regarding enlistments or an emergency in which the Nation's capital is about to be attacked.

As I distinctly said yesterday, we are reasonably confident that the armed forces can continue, exactly as they have for the past 18 months, to get the necessary men by voluntary enlistments. But let me again say, as I said yesterday, that we base that estimate on the assumption that the Selective Service Act will be continued in its present form. Further, we decline to assume the responsibility of guessing whether, if the present act is modified in form such as requiring some form of congressional declaration, we can continue to get enough men on a purely voluntary basis. I think the record should be crystal clear in that regard. As a committee, we refuse to speculate, or to gamble, with anything so important.

Now, sir, as to the recruiting picture as it looks today: The great boom in enlistments which began when the Congress passed the 1948 act kept up during 1949. There was no difficulty in meeting quotas. In fact, a cut back in strength made it possible to stop all new enlistments for a short period of time.

The 1950 problem has as yet caused no serious concern. It is true there is at present a net shortage of roughly 60,000 below strength for all three services. This shortage is largely due to an increase in discharges during last November, December, and January. So far as we know, it is not the result of a gradual decline. We are hopeful that these numbers can be built up during the next 4 or 5 months.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. Was the shortage due in any measure to a decline in enlistments?

Mr. CAIN. A good many of the discharges came about by reason of the fact that some wartime family allowances were repealed or eliminated by virtue of action taken by the Congress. Therefore it automatically followed that a large number of young men in the lower grades within the Army, possessed of families, many of which were large, thought they could do better in the future in private life than by continuing in the Army. That in itself was responsible for a very large number of discharges in the last 3 months of 1949.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. Does the Senator have any figures showing what the current rate of enlistment in the armed services is as compared with a year ago, or any other comparable time?

Mr. CAIN. Immediately after the Senator from Washington has concluded this brief statement he will submit for the RECORD some figures on that subject, and he would be pleased to have the Senator from Utah look at the figures prior to that time. The figures cover the enlistment record beginning with July 1948, and concluding with May 1950. It seems to me that these tabulations will answer accurately the question which has just been asked of me by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CAIN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Washington for furnishing the statistics which the junior Senator from Nebraska requested in the debate yesterday. I should like to ask whether the figures show a breakdown by the services, that is, by Army, Navy, and Air Force, as well as by the branches of the service, such as the Marine Corps, for example. The reason I ask the question is that prior to the time when the extension act was passed, the enlistment difficulty was largely with the Army. The Navy and the Air Force had sufficient enlistments. Is that correct?

Mr. CAIN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Do the figures now show any difference in that relationship as compared with the time when the Draft Act was passed?

Mr. CAIN. The figures which are now offered to the Senator from Nebraska are broken down in rather fine detail, and cover each of the three services. I shall restate this last paragraph of my remarks. The 1950 problem has as yet caused no serious concern. It is true there is at present a net shortage of roughly 60,000 below strength for all three services. This shortage is largely due to an increase in discharges during last November, December, and January. So far as we know, it is not the result of a gradual decline. We are hopeful that these members can be built up during the next 4 or 5 months.

Quotas were not being filled during March and April, but that in itself is not alarming. Initial reports for May look more hopeful. I use the word "initial" because the reports which are now in the hands of the Senator from Nebraska indicate that the figure for May was on an estimated basis. The Navy has cut back slightly on its physical requirements. The Air Force is planning on cutting its classification score back to 90. The Army is already at 90, and may be forced to cut back still further.

The point is that we feel the enlistment problem is tighter today than it was a year ago—and the figures bear that out—but it is not alarming. We feel quotas can be met, but we base our estimates on the extension of the present act in its present form.

If the power to make inductions is taken from the hands of the President, where it is now vested, we would withdraw our estimate, because we feel it would be giving the American people a form of false reassurance based on what could only be considered to be an outright gamble.

Mr. President, I ask that the tables be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. WATKINS obtained the floor.

Mr. WHERRY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, if I may have the permission of the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], for that purpose—inasmuch as he has the floor at this time—that I be permitted to ask further questions of the Senator from Washington relative to the statistics he was so ably submitting for the RECORD at the time when other Senators were permitted to make insertions in the RECORD.

Mr. WATKINS. Yes, Mr. President; I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nebraska may propound such inquiries to the Senator from Washington, without causing me to lose the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that the questions I am about to propound may appear in the RECORD following the conclusion of the questions I have previously asked of the distinguished Senator from Washington. I make that request in order to preserve the continuity of the subject matter, which I am sure should be maintained, and also because of the interest which some may have relative to the enlistments which are occurring.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the transposition will be made.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

Then, Mr. President, if I have unanimous consent for this purpose, I shall proceed with the questions.

Does the Senator from Washington have any statistics relative to the number of draftees, those who have been brought into the draft boards, and who have enrolled in the various classifications? Does the distinguished Senator from Washington have those statistics at hand?

Mr. CAIN. That is what is known as the manpower pool.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. CAIN. It results from the registrations which are required under the Selective Service Act of 1948. They total approximately 10,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. How many of those are in class 1–A?

Mr. CAIN. Permit me first to say that of the manpower pool of approximately 10,000,000 men, approximately 1,000,000 new men, as a result of registering, move into the manpower pool each year; and another million men, because of growing older, move out of the manpower pool. So, generally, we can rely upon having a manpower pool of registrations of approximately 10,000,000 men.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. CAIN. Of the 10,000,000 men who come into the manpower pool as a result of the registering of young men between the ages of 18 and 26, 9,790,000 are registrations by young men between the ages of 19 and 26. The Senator from Nebraska knows, of course, that a young man of 18 years of age must register under the Selective Service Act of 1948, but he is not required to be inducted before he has reached his nineteenth year.

Of the manpower pool of approximately 10,000,000 men, the draft boards of the United States have thus far classified 7,638,000. Obviously, as all of us can understand, there is a necessary lag between the time when a man registers and the time when his draft board gets around to classifying him.

Of the classified group of approximately seven and one-half million men, 1,466,000 are classified as being either 1–A or 1–A–O. The latter class is a small one, and consists of individuals who, although they are otherwise, physically and mentally, qualified to serve in combat, are conscientious objectors. The Senator from Washington cannot hazard a guess as to the total number of those classified as 1–A–O who are included in the total of 1,466,000.

The Senator from Nebraska should look to the classification of 1–A for those who are and who will continue to be the best qualified to serve their country in the event of an emergency or if at some future date they are required to be inducted.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. How does the figure of 1,466,000 of eligible registrants compare with the figure of a year ago? Has that class decreased or increased in numbers, as compared with the situation a year ago?

Mr. CAIN. I am advised that it happens to be a little bit larger at this time than it was a year ago. However, as a general premise, we would always secure approximately the same number of men to be classified as 1–A, out of a total group of registrants approximating 10,000,000. These figures indicate to me that of every 10,000,000 men who either have registered heretofore or will be registered in the future, approximately 1,500,000 of the 10,000,000 should be suitable for classification as 1–A.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that statement, and it is based upon the theory that we have approximately as many men becoming 18 years of age as we have men who leave the manpower pool because of their increase in age.

Mr. CAIN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. But are the voluntary enlistments added to the 18-year-old registrants, regardless of whether they are inducted?

Mr. CAIN. Many a young man would have registered, following which he would have enlisted for the service, without being inducted as a draftee; but his registration card would remain in the pool of 10,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. If the man who volunteered was not of draft age, but if he was permitted to volunteer for service, would he be added to the class of 18-year-olds who are inducted each year?

Mr. CAIN. No; no 18-year-olds are inducted. And if I understood the Senator's question——

Mr. WHERRY. I refer to the class that he would be in, if he were 18 years of age. I am trying to find out how much manpower we have in 1–A, and how much manpower we have through voluntary enlistments, not included in 1-A. Is the number appreciable, or is it small?

Mr. CAIN. I should rather not hazard a guess. I think the Senator is entitled to an accurate answer; and, in the light of the question, I shall attempt to determine how many voluntary enlistments there are, which are not represented among the registrants, as a result of the Selective Service Act.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly, if I am permitted to do so.

Mr. WHERRY. In the opinion of the Senator from Washington, does the draft act serve as a feeder, by way of inducing voluntary enlistments?

Mr. CAIN. I think that is the basic reason why the Senate Armed Services Committee has recommended an extension of the Selective Service Act of 1948 for a period of 3 years. We may be wrong, but as a committee we certainly think we are right in believing that the mere existence of the Selective Service Act in the laws of the land is a powerful stimulus and encouragement to voluntary enlistments. We further feel that without the existence of such a law it would be extremely unlikely that we could provide for the defense needs of the country through voluntary enlistments.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. Are the inducements which have been offered sufficient to keep the boys in the service after they have once enlisted? If not, why do we find so many discharges? It is a double-barreled question, but I think both parts of it are related.

Mr. CAIN. I shall answer as best I can. I understand that in the Army at present about from 50 to 60 percent of those who serve for one enlistment period reenlist. It is obvious to anyone who has looked into the question at all that the Nation has progressed continually in recent years in the matter of making it more attractive to men to remain in the armed services.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. My theory is that we should make the inducements sufficiently attractive to assure our getting voluntary enlistments. My feeling is that that will result in the best kind of army that can be obtained, and the best kind of defense. That was my position a year ago.

Mr. CAIN. I think there is a point beyond which a nation cannot go in the matter of providing so-called inducements. The inducements now provided by the military services of the Nation, according to my view, are very substantial, very attractive. But however attractive we may make them, there will obviously be tens of thousands of young men who, having served one or more enlistments, will seek to return to civilian life in order to develop civilian careers.

Mr. WHERRY. That is because they would not care to make military service a career. They feel that they have rendered their service, and with them it is no longer a question of inducements, but a question of getting back into private life. Is that not correct?

Mr. CAIN. I think it is true that many a young American thinks he wants to make a career of military service.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Without taking too much additional time, I should like to inquire, in order to carry out and to bring to a fulfillment the questions asked by the Senator from Nebraska, whether it is not true that there are in the Army many married men who seek to make it a career, in order that they may receive all the emoluments that go with it? Is not that the answer to the question?

Mr. CAIN. My answer to that is a positive "Yes."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Is it not also true that the minimum pay of a private has risen from about $30 a month to about $80 today?

Mr. CAIN. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. And is it not true that from that point it goes up very quickly to around $120 a month?

Mr. CAIN. That is true.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. What we have done is to try to make the Army attractive to men seeking a career. However, we cannot expect to get 100 percent of reenlistments, for various reasons, physical, mental, and the desire to go elsewhere. Is that not true?

Mr. CAIN. Is it not a very proper thing to say that as of this time the Congress has made service in the armed services as attractive as the Congress thinks it possible to do?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I may answer the Senator's question absolutely in the affirmative. Today the private in the Army is costing, if my memory serves me correctly, approximately $3,000 a year, for pay, maintenance, upkeep, and everything else that goes with it, so that we feel that we have made the Army as attractive as possible to volunteers. What we need is to have this act on the books, not as a feeder, as the Senator from Washington suggests, but as an inducement for volunteers.

Mr. WHERRY and Mr. WATKINS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield further; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. CAIN. I should first like to say that I appreciate exceedingly the indulgence of the Senator from Utah for permitting my use of his time.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have a final question I should like to ask.

Mr. WATKINS. I am very glad to yield. However, I had a question I wished to address to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. I shall try to answer it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the question I should like to ask is this: On the theory which has been advanced here that it is necessary to extend the Selective Service Act in order to be able to get volunteers, does the Senator from Washington feel that the draft must become a permanent procedure in order that we may build up the defenses of the country and that there will continue to be extensions of the draft at intervals of 1, 2, or 3 years in order to enable us to maintain an Army, a Navy, an Air Force, and a Marine Corps? Is that likely to be the ultimate outcome?

Mr. CAIN. I am wondering whether the junior Senator from Washington can answer the Senator's question. The best he can do is to try. It is his considered opinion that for so long a time as our Nation thinks it necessary to maintain an Army, a Navy, an Air Corps, and a Marine Corps of the present-day strength, or of a larger strength in the future, it will be the intelligent and proper thing to maintain a Selective Service Act.

Speaking more to myself yesterday afternoon than to anyone else, I suggested in concluding my remarks in the name of the committee that the junior Senator from Washington is like a number of other Senators who look forward to the day when it will be unnecessary, in America or outside America, for any nation on the face of the earth to maintain a selective-service act, when war itself will somehow disappear from the face of the earth. But until such time as we learn the final direction in which our great Nation and other nations of the world are going to move, and for so long as we think we must maintain a reasonably and relatively strong defense position, I think I shall continue to believe in the continuous need of a Selective Service Act.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for one more question, did not General Bradley, in his testimony before our committee, say that the fact of having the Selective Service Act on the books made it possible for us to have a smaller armed force in being?

Mr. CAIN. That was General Bradley's considered opinion, as stated to us.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, is it the Senator's answer to my question that, in order to get the kind of defense the Senator feels the Nation needs, it is necessary to continue to extend the Selective Service Act, so that in effect it will result in having that act permanently on the books?

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington, with other Senators, is recommending a 3-year extension. We do not think that the facts available to us today justify our looking ahead more than 3 years.

Mr. WHERRY. Why not make it 2 years? Why not make it 1 year? Why not let the Congress review each year the need of continuing the Selective Service Act?

Mr. CAIN. I am not suggesting that the Senator from Nebraska does not have a defensible point in suggesting an extension of 1 year, 2 years, 5 years, or any other number of years instead of the 3 years recommended by the Senate Committee on Armed Services. It is a moot point. We are much more concerned with an extension of the Selective Service Act, for the time being, than we are with a 3-year as opposed to a 2-year recommended extension.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree that it is probably a moot question. I feel that Congress should assume the responsibility of extending the draft act and the provisions which go with it. My suggestion was that, instead of tying it up for 3 years, which, to my mind, is a long period, why would it not be sensible to extend it for 2 years or for 1 year, and let Congress review the situation? Unless that is done, it seems to me that, upon the argument advanced by those who are interested in selective service, it becomes more or less a permanent procedure.

Mr. CAIN. The committee has recommended a 3-year extension. We feel very certain in our own minds that that is a proper recommendation to make. We are not suggesting that other Senators should not make other recommendations. What we are hopeful of is that recommendations will be made, and if they are contrary to the recommendations of the Senate Committee on Armed Services, we shall resolve the matter and agree on an extension date, and do it very soon because of the expiration hour of 12 midnight on Saturday of this week, which is almost upon us.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. We have been assuming that the expiration date was on Saturday at midnight, but yesterdey the legislative counsel, after I discussed the point, advised that the expiration date is on Friday, tomorrow, at midnight, rather than on Saturday.

I merely mention that to remonstrate how important it is that we take action immediately on the bill; otherwise we shall be compelled to adopt a joint resolution extending the act for a period of 30 days. We cannot, it seems to me, let the act expire and create all the confusion and the chaos which would be created as a result of the expiration of the act without taking some action.

Mr. CAIN. I agree most thoroughly with the majority leader.

The Senator from Washington would like to make this observation: To his mind, the length of the extension is not the fundamental question which is to be resolved by the Senate, we hope, this afternoon. A compromise may easily be reached on that point. What is going to be the important issue at stake is whether we shall provide for an extension of the Selective Service Act which can be brought into play only by virtue of a joint resolution of the Congress, or by executive authority, as is presently the case. I am most hopeful, speaking as an American and as a member of the Armed Services Committee, that somehow we can have that serious question brought up and taken care of without a continuing joint resolution, and conclude the matter tonight, if possible.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS, 1950

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8567, making appropriations to supply deficiencies for the present year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily set aside for the consideration of the bill which the clerk will state by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8567) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill, but I suppose the distinguished Senator from Tennessee will take some time in making a statement, will he not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the report was unanimous, the Republicans and Democrats on the committee all agreeing to the items in the bill. It is absolutely necessary that the bill be passed at this time, since it will have to go to conference, because some additions were made by the Senate committee. That is why I am asking unanimous consent at this time for the consideration of the bill. I do not think there will be any objection, and I was about to ask unanimous consent that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. May I ask the distinguished chairman of the committee whether the appropriations added by the Senate committee do not amount to about $34,000,000 or $35,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. There is an increase of $34,000,000 or $35,000,000, which is why we will have to have a conference with the House.

Mr. WHERRY. Will not the Senator say, offhand, about what that increase is for? It is mostly to cover increases in pay?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it is largely for construction work which has heretofore been authorized.

Mr. WHERRY. That is, for the Military and Defense Establishment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Twenty million dollars is for that purpose, and there is another appropriation of $3,500,000 for the Post Office Department. We added $4,000,000 to that because of increases in pay which have just been passed by the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. So that a brief analysis would indicate that approximately four and a half million dollars is for the Post Office Department, $20,000,000 for the Department of Defense, and about three and a half million dollars for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics?

Mr. McKELLAR. The statement of the Senator is substantially correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill. I realize that the pay bills which were passed in the first session of this Congress are on the statute books, and the amounts are authorized.

Mr. McKELLAR. And we are obliged to appropriate the money.

Mr. WHERRY. We are obliged to increase the appropriations to pay the amounts authorized. The bill will go to conference anyway, and the differences will be adjusted.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection; the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8567) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am a member of the committee, and there is one item about which I should like to ask a question. I refer to the appropriation for the Executive Office of the President. How much is allocated for that purpose?

Mr. McKELLAR. Two million dollars. That is usual in such bills as this.

Mr. WHERRY. This fund is one that is used for emergency relief purposes, is it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Which the President can use at a moment's notice?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. WHERRY. It applies mostly to States where relief is asked, as in States which are suffering because of the floods in the West. Is that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is for relief caused by the suffering from floods in the West, to a very large extent.

Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

That is a reduction, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, would it be proper to address a question to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. CAIN. I should like to inquire concerning the figure "$600,000" found on page 26, under the item for the Office of the Housing Expediter. My question is, Is that $600,000 a figure which came to the Senate Committee on Appropriations from the House, and whether or not the figure $600,000 represents what the Housing Expediter requested as a deficiency appropriation?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Expediter requested $800,000, and the Budget Bureau sent in an estimate for $800,000. The House reduced that to $600,000, and the Senate committee recommended the House figure. I hope the provision will be agreed to.

Mr. CAIN. Will the distinguished Senator from Tennessee permit me to make a very brief observation?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. CAIN. I think it was only several months ago, probably the 15th of March, when the Office of the Housing Expediter requested of the Congress a deficiency appropriation in the sum of $3,600,000. He said that was the very least amount on which he could reasonably manage the affairs of his office for the remainder of the year.

The Senate and House at that time cut that requested figure of $3,600,000 to $1,400,000, which, when we add $600,000 to it, leaves, as a result of congressional action, a net saving, as I understand figures, of $1,600,000.

I merely wanted to point out that if the Office of the Housing Expediter can get along with the $1,400,000 which we gave to him in March and the $600,000 which we are presently prepared to give to him, it stands to reason that the Office of the Housing Expediter requested in March a sum which was entirely indefensible and unjustified, and I think it ought to be mentioned by someone in passing that the Congress at least has saved $1,600,000 for the taxpayers.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to make that statement in behalf of the Senate of the United States and to compliment the distinguished Senator from Washington for the very constructive interest he has taken in helping to reduce the amount to $1,600,000.

Mr. CAIN. The junior Senator from Washington and other Senators understand we are in this body to represent not the executive branch of the Government or to agree with their whims and their requests, but we are here to serve the people of the United States; and I am delighted to join with other Senators in acknowledging the small saving that has been accomplished in this year of 1950.

Mr. WHERRY. I may say to the junior Senator from Washington that if other Senators will take the same interest in other legislation I am confident we can do the same thing all along the line.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Chapter X—Department of Defense," on page 30, after line 17, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE

ACQUISITION AND CONSTRUCTION OF REAL PROPERTY

For an additional amount for "Acquisition and construction of real property, 1950," to carry out the provisions of title II of the act of October 27, 1949 (Public Law 415), relating to the Air Engineering Development Center, $20,000,000, to remain available until expended, and, in addition thereto, the Secretary of the Air Force is authorized to enter into contracts for the same purposes in an amount not to exceed $35,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Chapter XII—Increased pay and travel costs—Department of Labor," on page 55, line 11, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$41,000, and $85,000" and insert "$6,000 and $120,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Claims for damages, audited claims and judgments," on page 63, line 1, after the word "in", to insert "Senate Document Numbered 177, and"; and in line 3, after the word "Congress", to strike out "$8,627,922.79" and insert "$9,914,909.82."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is open to amendment. If there are no further amendments, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 8567) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. GURNEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I thank the two leaders, the acting majority leader and the minority leader for their support of this measure. I believe we can get it back from the House so final action can be taken before the end of the fiscal year.

I also thank the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] for yielding.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6326) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment as amended.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] has the floor.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I notice the Senator from Washington has mentioned a number of times that the mere presence of the Selective Service Act is an inducement for the youth of the country to enlist in the Armed Forces. Will the Senator explain to the Congress and to the people of the country why it is an inducement?

Mr. CAIN. Yes. I think the Senator from Washington can, as can many other Senators, explain it in a word or two. The Senator from Utah, I imagine, and, I hope, every Senator and every American, is conscious of the fact that within a 2-year period or within a very limited period after the Selective Service Act of 1948 was approved by the Congress, volunteers by the tens of thousands entered the service. The Senator is aware of that fact, is he not?

Mr. WATKINS. I understand enlistments increased as a result of the passage of the act, but why does the Senator think it is an inducement for the youth of the country to join the armed services?

Mr. CAIN. I wanted the Senator from Utah, first, to be conscious of what has happened since the Selective Service Act of 1948 was passed. I shall give my own reason why I think the mere existence of the act encourages young Americans to volunteer. In the presence of an act which says to them, "You are likely to be called to serve for a period of 21 months; you are given a chance on a volunteer basis to serve your time in the Military Establishment of the country on your own terms"—a man who has registered for 2 years as 1-A, for example, and is between the ages of 19 and 25, can be called up at any period during those years when he is anywhere from 19 to 25 years of age—many a young American most certainly, in considering his own future, what he wants to do, and what he wants to become, will say to himself, "If there is a very good chance that I shall be called into the armed services at some future but uncertain and unknown date, and perhaps when I am in the middle of a job which it will take me several years to complete, I had better go ahead and get my service to my country over and done with."

From my point of view, that is the best single answer I can give as to why I think the existence of the Selective Service Act encourages thousands and thousands of young men to volunteer for service in the Armed Forces, who, in the absence of a Selective Service Act, would be inclined not to serve at all.

Mr. WATKINS. As I gather from what the Senator has said, there is an element of coercion, or sort of a threat, held over the youth of the country by the act which induces them to volunteer. Is that the logical conclusion from what the Senator has just said and from what other Senators have said with reference to the act?

Mr. CAIN. To use the words of the Senator from Utah, no man can deny that there is a threat of war hanging over the world. In attempting to minimize that threat, in attempting to prepare ourselves to conquer in whatever emergency may be forced upon us, in an attempt to make the likelihood of armed conflict with any nation in the future less likely, this country, through its Congress, has determined on a certain personnel strength for the Army, the Navy, and the Air Corps. In order to carry out what we have already determined through our appropriations we have devised a selective service act which says, in substance, two things: "If as an American you seek to exercise a free choice and to volunteer for service for a limited period of time in the armed services of your Nation, that is your choice."

If a sufficient number of Americans do not see fit at an early age to exercise the choice of serving their country on a voluntary basis, the law provides the machinery through which the intent of the Congress of the United States will be carried out. I do not construe it as a threat; I construe it as a reality, and that if Congress says we shall appropriate X dollars to provide for maintenance and care of X men, we are only being realistic, reasonable, and intelligent by providing the machinery which will provide the men for the dollars appropriated for their maintenance and care.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. CAIN. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. I appreciate the Senator's answer. I cannot say I agree with him 100 percent in his conclusions, but he is very frank.

Mr. CAIN. I intend to be.

Mr. WATKINS. I should like to invite attention to one other consideration which has been brought up here, and that is by reason of the inducements in the way of pay, education, travel, and whatever others there may be, which we give to the young men of the country, many of them remain in the service.

Mr. CAIN. Presently about 50 to 60 percent reenlist.

Mr. WATKINS. Fifty or sixty percent. Has the Senator read a recent article published in Look magazine which calls attention to the deplorable conditions in Alaska with respect to the armed forces there?

Mr. CAIN. With particular reference to housing?

Mr. WATKINS. With particular reference to housing. If the Senator has read the article, I wonder if he would tell us what if anything the Committee on Armed Services has to recommend or suggest which would take care of a situation which, if true, certainly is deplorable.

Mr. CAIN. I have seen the magazine article to which the Senator has referred. I believe it was published some months ago in Look magazine. I can only say in answer to the Senator's question that the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Armed Services have and are investigating what has and has not been done in the way of military housing in Alaska, and what might be done in the future. If I am not mistaken, legislation which is now known as the Wherry law has been designed in a direct and positive effort to make housing available in Alaska, as well as in continental United States, for the benefit of military installations at a far more reasonable cost of construction than has been the case in recent years.

Mr. WATKINS. From what the Senator has said, apparently we are still talking about doing something, and we are still talking about some legislation which is on tap to take care of the housing situation. Is it not true that Congress, about a year ago, passed legislation giving money to the Armed Forces to take care of the very situation which has been called to our attention in this magazine article? If the situation is as has been described in the article, housing conditions certainly would not induce men to serve in Alaska or to enlist for service there, or to reenlist up there.

Mr. CAIN. We are faced with a housing problem in Alaska which is far bigger than any military consideration. If the Senator will do what I have done, namely, take a thoughtful and searching look into the testimony given at some of the hearings, thus determining that a single unit in Alaska, consisting of five or six rooms, for a variety of reasons costs from $20,000 to $40,000 to construct, the Senator will at once recognize that the problem is not a simple one. The junior Senator from Washington has no ready answer to how the housing needs of military personnel and civilians in Alaska can be taken care of in the next several years. I do not know.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield so that I may address a question to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Washington, in answer to questions propounded by the junior Senator from Nebraska earlier today, stated that because of uncertainty in conditions, and for other reasons, the Armed Services Committee felt that the Selective Service Act should be continued. I suppose those uncertain conditions mean that we have failed to win the peace and that there is an acute situation in the world today which necessitates an extension of the Selective Service Act. Is that correct?

Mr. CAIN. As an individual Senator who happens to be a member of the Committee on Armed Services, I should like to say to the Senator from Nebraska that if the Senator from Washington was in opposition to voting for an extension of the Selective Service Act of 1948, in all consistency he would want to say, and back up what he had to say, if he could, and vote vehemently against every ECA appropriation which may come before the Senate, and he would vote against any military aid to Europe. He would vote against the Atlantic Pact. He would be in opposition to the extension of any help, as we have given it, to Turkey and Greece. If the junior Senator from Washington were against an extension of the Selective Service Act, he would consistently have to be against everything Congress has done in other ways in recent years, because, although he may be wrong, his conviction is that the Selective Service Act is a part of a policy which, however regretful the fact may be, we have found necessary as a nation to develop and support.

Mr. WHERRY. That really answers my question in the affirmative, to the effect that we have lost the peace and we have spent $35,000,000,000 in western Europe under ECA, and we have spent money here, there, and everywhere, willy-nilly, and we have not won the peace, and the situation today, if the military is correct, is that we are losing the cold war. Is that correct?

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington does not know if we have lost the peace. What he does know in this month of June 1950, is that we have not won it. He is in support of the extension of the Selective Service Act for a reasonable period, in the hope that it will help win the peace, which is so much in jeopardy at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, selective service is notice to the one world power which is extending its lines in Asia, where since World War II I think it has accumulated or placed in its orbit something like 13,000,000 square miles, and about 800,000,000 human beings. We are being asked to extend the draft act 3 years. Yet Mr. Acheson, the Secretary of State, has already stated, according to press reports, that he will abide by the decision of the vote of the majority delegates in the United Nations whether the Red delegates from Communist China are to be seated in the United Nations. I ask the distinguished Senator from Washington whether asking for the extension of the draft is one thing, but asking the United States of America to permit the seating of the delegates from Communist China in the United Nations is quite another thing? Should we not also serve notice on Russia and let its leadership know that fact, rather than admit Red China to the family of nations and give it the prestige that follows such a course of action? If we are to take a stand, why do we not take a stand on that question, just as we are asked to take a stand on the question of the extension of the draft?

Mr. CAIN. I would rather answer the Senator's question as an American citizen. In direct answer to his question, I should like to say that I do not think Mr. Acheson's position, as the Senator has stated it to be, is tenable, and certainly I have every intention of continuing to oppose it. However, I wish to add to my statement to one of the best friends I have in the Senate, the distinguished junior Senator from Nebraska, that on the question before us every member of the Committee on Armed Services has done his level best to arrive at what would best protect the legitimate needs of this country in the foreseeable and immediate future, and which would help to maintain us until we can secure a competent peace. It was from that point of view and in that effort that we have presented our recommendation of a 3-year extension of the Selective Service Act of 1948.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to return the compliment which the Senator from Washington has offered to me. I have no closer friend in the Senate than the junior Senator from Washington, and I appreciate the flattering remarks he has made about the junior Senator from Nebraska. The point I wanted to bring out very forcibly if I could was brought out by the question I asked. The policy we have in China has been one of letting the dust settle. We have no policy. Even though recommendations relative to Formosa have been made by such men as General MacArthur, we are still in the dark.

We are asked to support a continuation of the draft law, it seems to me to implement what I think are mistakes which have been made since the shooting war terminated. We are not gaining in China, we are not gaining in Formosa, yet we are being asked to continue the draft, and at the same time the one who is leading in our foreign relations policies has said he will sit by quietly and take no interest in seating in the United Nations the Reds who are causing the difficulty in Asia, where they have taken over 13,000,000 square miles and 800,000,000 human beings since the shooting war ended. It is difficult for me to go along with the assistance asked for in the draft act when we are frittering away the peace which the people of America and of the world are seeking.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, responding to the Senator from Nebraska, even though the two of us look at the problem in a slightly different way, I wish to say, and very feelingly, that I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that great and grievous mistakes have been made in recent years, resulting in uncertainty and confusion and doubt as to what we can or must or will do in the years to come. It is because of that uncertainty, because of that confusion, because of some serious mistakes which I think have been made in other branches of the Government, that as one Senator, I think we can best protect American welfare by a reasonable extension of the Selective Service Act at this time.

Mr. President, I express deep gratefulness to the Senator from Utah for his willingness to permit the colloquy which has just been concluded between the Senator from Nebraska and myself.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the colloquy which has taken place between the junior Senator from Washington and other Members of the Senate respecting some of our problems. I do not desire to delay action on the bill, but I do wish to call attention to the fact that day after day during the present session, and almost during the entire time of my service in the Senate of three and a half years, we have been called on to meet deadlines and emergencies which, in my humble opinion, need not have arisen had there been proper management of the legislative program.

I realize and understand that the leaders, both on the Republican side and on the Democratic side, have their problems, and probably they are doing the best they can in view of all the pressures which are being put upon them to put this bill or that measure on the calendar, or on the agenda for immediate action. But now we arrive at a time when we have before us one of the most important measures affecting the youth of this country and the peoples of the world, and it is brought in at the last moment and we are urged to speed up the procedure in order to enact the measure. I shall do my best, so far as I can and still express my views on the measure, to expedite its consideration, because I realize that we are facing a deadline, and that we must do something about it.

The peoples of the world have all wanted peace, the people of this country want peace, and I imagine that if they think about it at all—many of them do, but we are becoming so callous to emergencies and crises that the people simply laugh them off, and they attract attention for only a day or two—they must realize that the pending measure is going to affect the lives of literally millions of young men, and some of the girls of this country. Realizing that, if they do realize it, they would expect us to give proper time and attention to the subject.

It might help us and might help the country and the world to stop occasionally and think about where we are and whence we have come, and what has happened to us on the way. Why are we in the condition in which we are today? The junior Senator from Washington has indicated, in a measure, some of the things which have happened, and the Senator from Nebraska called his attention to certain mistakes and blunders. The little people, the rank and file of the nations of the world, are not responsible for these blunders. The leaders, those who have had the responsibility placed upon them of conducting the affairs of the world, have failed, and that is one of the reasons why we are in the situation in which we find ourselves today.

We find almost a total abandonment of moral force to help to bring peace in the world. I have been chagrined, and I am sure many of my colleagues have been, at the more or less callous way in which are received the various suggestions from Members of this body and Members of the House of Representatives with respect to attempting again to find, by negotiation, some means of bringing about an understanding with those who are opposing us and our way of life. Unfortunately, I believe, for the good of this country, the President of the United States and the State Department are not receptive to those suggestions. It seems to me that the moral forces of the world should be brought into play, that every effort should be made to justify our position and get the truth to the peoples of the world, and to keep on trying and trying as long as there is anyone who will listen to us.

I remember the statement I made in April 1947, soon after I came into this body on the occasion of the Greek-Turkish loan. I voted for the measure then pending, as I have for practically all the measures to aid in the fight against communism and to restore our friends in Europe to their feet. I have made a statement then of which I have never been ashamed since. It was rather crudely worded, perhaps, but to my mind the principle to which I called attention has been one of those things which have been lacking over the years. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to a few of the things I said at that time, which was when the Truman doctrine had been presented to the Congress, and we were asked to make large loans to Greece and Turkey. I said:

Mr. President, I am voting for this bill with the belief and the hope that this is only the first step; that we shall now come back to the first principles as set forth in the Atlantic Charter not only in Greece and Turkey but in China.

I underscore the name "China," because of the debacle which has since happened in China had not then occurred. I said further:

That we will reverse the action we took in that nation recently when we decided not to take sides as between the Nationalists and the Communists, but decided to get out.

As I recall, the great general who had been sent over there to carry out the mission entrusted to him by the United States, said, in effect, "A plague on both your houses," and left the Nationalists to face the Communists. At that time they were regarded only as agrarian reformers.

I said further:

That we will redeem our promise made to the Koreans that they shall have their independence; that we shall refuse to make any more agreements with Russia until she gives some evidence that she is willing to honor and respect the agreement she has already made from the days of the Atlantic Charter down to the present time; that as a logical outgrowth of that stand we shall not ratify the treaty with Italy which renders Italy defenseless for a long time to come against a constant threat of the Communist Tito and his government which is a satellite of Russia; that with respect to Germany we make no further agreements of any kind with Russia respecting that nation, until such time as Russia honors her past agreements; that we lay all of the facts on the table before the United Nations.

In other words, that we call for a showdown.

Let us also declare (at that showdown meeting) it is our policy that we expect to honor all our agreements and expect other nations to do likewise, that we shall be glad to help Russia attain any of her legitimate ambitions and her necessities by peaceful means.

Mr. President, have we ever tried to do that with Russia? If we have, it has escaped my attention. Have we ever sat down with her and tried to help her achieve her legitimate ambitions and her necessities by peaceful means?

I remember sometime back there was a discussion, and a similar discussion pops up occasionally, over Russia's claim of her right to have access to the warm waters of commerce, to have warm-water ports, among other things she demanded which we could have looked into. It might have meant that we would have had to spend some money to aid her to get what she felt she was legitimately entitled to. Had we taken that step at that time, it is my humble opinion we might possibly have averted many of the events which have occurred since, and we might have removed the great threat to world peace today. But, instead of that, we and the other nations have been insisting on this right and that right, but not having in our minds and in our methods anything to try to help that particular nation get some of the things to which she might be legitimately entitled. She wanted to get her products into world commerce, and to have the raw products of the world brought to her. How much cheaper it might be in manpower and in suffering and in lives if we could have worked out that problem with that great nation.

I said at that time:

Let us declare to her that as we are a Christian Nation, we shall be willing to abide by the doctrine of the Christ, known as the Golden Rule.

I wonder if we have ever tried to put that into effect in a realistic manner? Oh, I know, we talk about it. It becomes a platitude to most of us, a generality, and we say it cannot be done. But I think under the circumstances we are now facing that this Nation cannot afford to overlook any method short of war to accomplish the overwhelming desire of the great number of the people of the world, which is peace. We cannot neglect anything that may be open to us.

I stated further at that time:

By taking this stand, Mr. President, I sincerely believe we can stop the present ideological war and prevent a shooting war of world war III. Halfway measures, in my opinion, will not do. We must go the full distance. This is a case which requires the boldest of action. By any other methods I believe we court disaster, and I say this notwithstanding the fact that we have the atom bomb.

That statement was made in 1947. It was made before Czechoslovakia was taken behind the iron curtain, and before Hungary also was taken over. It was made before China fell, and before many other events happened that have made necessary legislation such as we are talking about today.

Mr. President, sometime, someday, we are going to face across a peace table Russia and her satellites and other nations who oppose us. It may be 25 years from now. It may be within a few years. It may be after we have sacrified on our side and they have sacrificed on their side many millions of lives and have undergone great suffering. Let us remember that if we are going to live in this world we have got to come to peace terms and we have got to sit at the peace table with other nations.

Mr. President, I realize it will be said that we have tried, that we have been patient, that we have met with objections all the time from a certain nation, and that we could not get anywhere with her. I often wonder if we have done everything we could. I have a great deal of sympathy for my colleagues in the Senate, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], and others, who have made various proposals for another try. It is all well worth while. That can be going on while we are doing these other things.

So today in considering the draft measure it is a good time for the American people to take stock of where we are, what distance we have covered. Are we on the road, as many think we are in our present course, rushing headlong into another world war that will almost wipe out our civilization? Can we do anything now to help stop it?

I said something about the United States being a Christian nation. There may be some who will object to that. I have so many times seen pressure groups come to Congress and in their greedy way demand that they get theirs, irrespective of what happens to the rest of the people, that I have begun to doubt that we are a real Christian nation. What have we in our country except a great prosperity and a great many institutions to demonstrate to the world that we really are as Christian as we may think we are? I will admit we have made great progress over the years; but when one sees these contending groups, in our own country, actuated by greed and avarice and hatred, it makes one wonder whether we are in very deed followers of the lowly Nazarene who wanted all men to do unto others as they would like to be done by.

It seems to me that the moral forces of this country could do a great deal by demonstrating to the rest of the world that we know how to be unified and how to get together; that we place spiritual powers and forces above any of the material things of the world; that when we pray to Almighty God we get down on our knees and in faith and in right to ask for blessings from Him; and that when the Chaplain of the Senate prays in our behalf it is not an idle gesture, but we catch that spirit and use it in our deliberations.

Mr. President, I do not intend to talk very much longer today, but I desire to call attention to a number of things in connection with this particular bill which I think we should keep in our minds and should take into consideration. We are asked to extend the Draft Act. Personally, I am in favor of doing that. I voted for the act in the first place on the theory that from the representations made to us by our military commanders and our President it was absolutely necessary to do it.

There have been many times in the past when I have not had confidence in all of the promises and the plans and the suggestions made by the executive department. Many people of this country have not had confidence in them. When we have considered the long series of events that have happened in the previous administration and in the present administration, the long series of events in our foreign affairs which have turned out to be monumental blunders, that seem to have thwarted all our efforts to bring about peace, we have found on analysis that many of them are the very things that have put Russia and her satellites and communism in a commanding and threatening position today. So if we may look with some lack of confidence upon the President of the United States and the State Department, I think we may be pardoned.

I would say, and I say it in all kindness, the President of the United States in his connections with the Eightieth Congress and with the Eighty-first Congress has not shown any great degree of confidence in the Congress. Confidence begets confidence. He has been unsparing in his criticism of this body and of the work of the Eightieth Congress, notwithstanding the fact that we went down the line time and time again and voted for appropriations and for measures to help undo the great blunders that had been committed in the foreign field.

Some of us say, as I am going to say, that we are placing entirely too much power in the hands of the President of the United States, in one man, to say when this draft act shall become operative and the young men of our country shall be taken into the armed forces. In connection with that let us remember that last year we ratified and approved the Atlantic Pact, which binds us in effect upon an attack being made upon any one of the signatories to that pact other than ourselves, to rush to their defense. Let it be remembered also that the Senate refused to accept a reservation which reserved to the Congress of the United States its constitutional right to pass or not to pass without being under force or duress or coercion of any kind, a joint resolution to declare war. That reservation was defeated. In my humble opinion, the Constitution of the United States was thereby violated. The failure to adopt that reservation placed in the hands of the executive department the right to proceed and wage a war if a major attack should come against any one of the nations signatory to the Atlantic Pact, irrespective of how it happened. If we place in the President's hands, in addition to that power, the power to call the young men of the United States into the armed forces without action by Congress, it seems to me we shall have gone too far. Already, by what we have done, we have abdicated too much of the congressional power.

The situation as of today has changed from the former situation.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Does the President presently, under the provisions of the Selective Service Act of 1948, have the power and authority to induct American young men into the armed services?

Mr. WATKINS. The President does have that power, and the Congress gave it to him because he said an emergency was existing at that time; his statements and the intelligence reports led us to believe that we might be engaged in a war in a short time. So the President was given that power by the Congress. However, since that time we have ratified the Atlantic Pact, and it has changed the situation materially.

From now on, Congress itself should either be constantly in session or, if it takes a recess, should be on call at any time by its officers, so that it could quickly return into session if occasion should again arise to require the induction of our young men into the Armed Forces.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. How long has it been since the President exercised any of the authority given to him by the provisions of the Selective Service Act of 1948?

Mr. WATKINS. The Senator from Washington knows the answer, for he made a statement on that point yesterday, as I recall. The President exercised that power for a short time only. Because of the understanding that if they did not volunteer for service, they would be brought into the Armed Forces by way of induction, considerable numbers of our young men volunteered for service at that time, and therefore it was necessary to induct only approximately 30,000, as I recall.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator is correct. I simply wanted to keep the continuity of the matter clearly before us, so as to show that, in fact, it has been 18 months since the President required the induction of even one man under the Selective Service Act.

Mr. WATKINS. My point is that it is the duty of Congress to prepare and provide the means for defending the country. The President may be the Commander in Chief; but it is the right and the power and the obligation of the Congress to provide the means for defending the Nation. It seems to me that after placing in the hands of the President the tremendous power he has under the provisions of the Atlantic Pact—and we note the way that power is being exercised; agreements are springing up on all sides, and they will call for larger and larger appropriations, and may eventually call for the sending of our troops abroad, to help garrison those lands—we have given him sufficient power. When we note all those things going on, we realize that the President does have tremendous power.

However, the situation existing today is not what the situation was when the Draft Act of 1948 was passed.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. First of all, Mr. President, let me say that although I do not agree with the Senator from Utah in regard to the amendment which he is submitting, nevertheless I have a high regard for his sincerity and his point of view. As in the case of most public questions, in this case, likewise, there is room for an honest difference of opinion on the question of the Senator from Utah has raised on the floor of the Senate.

I am interested in the statement the Senator has made that the situation at the time when the draft act was passed in 1948 was much more tense than the situation is today.

Mr. WATKINS. Permit me to interrupt the Senator, for I think he misunderstood me. I said the situation was tense. I would not say it was more tense than the situation is today, because we really do not know the exact truth about the situation. The President has said, if we can credit what he has told us, that we are in the best situation now, with respect to peace, that we have been in for 6 years.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Of course, I agree with the Senator that the Congress has a responsibility which it cannot lightly put aside or abdicate to anyone. However, it seems to me that by means of the enactment of the selective-service legislation, the Congress is performing its constitutional duty to raise and support armies.

As the Senator pointed out the other day, when the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the heads of the National Defense Establishment come to the Congress and say, "In our judgment, the minimum requirements for the Army, Navy, and Air Force are so many men," and when the Congress of the United States then enacts legislation fixing the size of our Military Establishment, the Congress has an obligation to see to it that the Military Establishment is maintained at the size thus established.

I do not know whether the Senator has been so familiar as members of the Appropriations Committee have been with some of the statements made by witnesses who appeared before that committee. I think I can say without fear of contradiction that every one of the responsible members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff—the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, General Bradley; the Chief of Naval Operations, Admiral Sherman; the Chief of the Air Force Staff, General Vandenberg; and the Chief of the Army General Staff—General Collins—all of them emphasized that the present very large budget for our Military Establishment is required in order to meet the minimum requirements for the defense of the United States.

The facts of the matter, unpalatable as they may be, are that within the last year, two great events occurred. One was the President's announcement that the Soviet Union now has the atomic bomb. That statement by the President is backed by every top scientific man who has had anything to do with the development of our own atomic weapons.

The second event, as the Senator from Utah has pointed out, has been the catastrophic series of events which have occurred in the Far East, and which have uncovered our defensive position in the entire Pacific area.

With those facts in view, it seems to me that the Congress has the responsibility of seeing to it that our defense establishment at least comes up to the minimum requirements.

I agree with the Senator from Utah that I would much prefer to withhold, insofar as we can, the granting of any excessive power to the President of the United States. However, the fact remains, under our constitutional system, that he is the President; the fact remains that he is the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy. The fact still remains—we can try to laugh it off or try to toss it off, but we cannot change it—that now, in the month of June 1950, we are living in the age of the airplane and in the age of the atomic bomb and of atomic energy. Everyone agrees that never again will we have a period of 1 or 2 or 3 years in which to prepare for war. In my judgment, no nation will strike in Europe until it has first struck at the heart of America—at our great industrial centers, at our great communications centers. I believe it is entirely possible, in this age of the airplane and the atom bomb and atomic energy, that the Congress of the United States might not be able to function under such circumstances; that by the time the Congress could get together, a period of 30 or 60 days might elapse, during which this country might be completely stymied, as regards making the necessary moves to build up our defense establishment.

For those reasons, I think there is sufficient justification for enabling the President of the United States to keep our military strength up to the minimum requirements.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's question and to his argument, let me say that I realize the force of his argument. However, let me point out, as a realistic, practical matter, the situation as it is today. If a sudden attack should come upon our country, an attack such as the Senator from California has implied by what he has said, neither the President nor anyone else from the draft system could get together sufficient forces to meet that particular attack.

I have served in the Senate with the Senator from California and with other Senators; and we have voted many billions of dollars of appropriations for the building of the defenses of this country—for great air forces, for the most modern planes, for bombs, indeed almost an untold sum for the development of additional bombs to aid in the defense of our country. They are in being. If the figures given me are correct, we now have an army of 1,370,000. Let me call attention to the fact that our very military leaders who are advising on this matter now have already said within recent weeks that we no longer need the same number of men for defense that we once needed. At least those statements were made with reference to Europe.

When the nations of western Europe began to find out that under the program they were to furnish the line—we were the backfield, and they were to furnish the ground forces in large numbers to meet the attack—we then had the startling statements made about the great advance which had been made in the matter of defensive weapons, so that now we will not need so many ground troops, for the new weapons will stop the foe and hold him until we can get into operation.

If the Congress is dispersed when there is a threat hanging over the heads of the people of America, then I think we shall be to blame for having the Congress dispersed. It should be kept in being, even if we have to recess subject to call by the Presiding Officers in the face of a threat of that kind. The same damage, the same bombing that would come to the Congress, if we were here, would likewise come to the President and the executive department. Someone must make the decision; and it becomes important, in connection with the North Atlantic Pact and the other agreements we are now making with the European countries, that the people who are going to do the dying and the fighting on the battlefields of the world, should have here their own representatives under the Constitution to which we all subscribe, to say when they shall be called to the colors and when the battle shall take place.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Of course I do not think there is any difference between us with regard to the ultimate objectives in which the Senator is interested. I am sure every one of the 96 Members of the Senate of the United States and every one of the 435 Members of the House—and, indeed, of the 140,000,000 people of the United States—will agree that what we want is peace with honor. There is no question that we could get an agreement with the Soviet Union overnight if we would give them everything they want and agree that they could extend their influence over any power that might be in their way. I think there is no doubt that we could sit down with them tomorrow and get that kind of agreement. But I do not think it would be peace with honor. I am sure the Senator agrees with me that no nation has a moral right to surrender the liberties and rights of other nations and to deal with them as one would deal with chips or chessmen in a game.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. The executive department has done just that, without the approval of the Senate or even submitting numerous executive agreements which have fixed boundaries in the East, in China and in Korea and in that general area, as well as in Europe. The executive department has gone ahead, time and time again, making executive agreements, which have all the force and effect of treaties, without ever submitting them to the Representatives of the American people in Congress. The actions on the part of the Executive have done that very thing. Those actions have largely been responsible in a measure for the difficulties we are in today.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator from Utah knows that I have been just as critical of the agreement made at Yalta as has the Senator from Utah. I agree with him that we lost some of our moral leadership in the world when we entered into the Yalta agreement and certain of the others, such as those made at Tehran and other places, without the consent of the American Congress or of the American people. I think we must begin to rebuild and to regain some of the moral leadership we lost by so doing. But I may say to the Senator that it would seem to me it would do very little good for a community of law-abiding citizens to create a police department if it then refused to man the police department. It would do very little good to build firehouses and put new equipment into them, if the community refused to pay for the firemen, or refused to see that the firemen were secured for the purpose of manning the equipment.

Mr. WATKINS. May I interrupt?

Mr. KNOWLAND. If the Senator will permit me to continue for a moment, I may say we are not going to be the ones to determine when the fire is going to break out or when the act of the international gangster may occur; but whenever it occurs, we must be prepared to discharge our responsibilties.

I believe this Nation offers to its young men more rights and privileges than any other nation on the face of the earth. I believe we should point out to our young men and women the rights, privileges, and opportunities they have in America. But I also think we should talk about our obligations of citizenship. I do not think a citizen can be on the receiving end only. I think every citizen has an obligation to serve his country. The Swiss, who over many years have had a system of compulsory military training, are one of the freest, most democratic nations on the face of the earth. I do not believe that a Republic such as ours loses any of its liberties or any of its rights or privileges by providing through the legislative and democratic process, a force which will help maintain a system of international law and order, so that the peace of the world can be maintained for ourselves and our children.

The 13 men in the Kremlin are a very cold and calculating and practical group. It is my judgment that they will not begin a war, if they ever do, until they think the calculated risk of their winning it is greater than the calculated risk of their losing it. Our greatest contribution to the peace of the world will be to make sure that their calculations of losing it are going to be much greater than their calculations of winning it.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, there is so much that the Senator has said with which I agree, that it is difficult to pick out the statements with which I do not agree. But I should like to point out to the Senator one of the things that have moved me to propose the amendment which I am proposing, in cooperation with certain of my colleagues, to leave it in the hands of the Congress to determine when inductions shall become operative is the simple fact that over the years the executive department has made so many blunders that I do not want to entrust that power to the executive department again. That is the reason. I merely do not have the confidence. The President does not have confidence in us, and, personally, I do not have it in him.

I think the decision should be in the hands of the representatives of the people. I believe the program can be carried out, as I have pointed out, in a realistic manner, and that we can get the necessary men into the Army, who will be needed at a given time. I believe the Congress can do it better than it could be done by the President.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, that I may make a slight observation in his time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WATKINS. The time is all between us. I yield.

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY 101 CHILDREN FROM THE TWENTY-FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, the Twenty-first Congressional District of Illinois is composed of seven counties. It is ably represented by PETER F. MACK, JR., the Representative from that District in the House of Representatives. PETER MACK, JR., has brought to Washington 101 of the most deserving children from his congressional district. The children are now seated in the gallery on my left. I merely want to call the attention of the Senate to their presence, because I think Representative MACK is deserving of a tribute for having brought these youngsters to Washington and affording them an opportunity to look in on what is going on in the House of Representatives, the Senate, and other places in and about the seat of the Government of the United States.

These children have been selected by an impartial board. They were recommended by the teachers in the respective counties, after which an impartial board decided which of them were the most deserving. The decision of the board was made regardless of race, color, creed, or politics.

I thank the Senator from Utah for having permitted me to make this observation. I saw the youngsters in the gallery. And, by the way, seven of them are from my own county of Mason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). On behalf of the Senate, the Chair congratulates the State of Illinois upon having sent to Washington this fine delegation of children from that State. The Chair joins with the Senator from Illinois and other Senators in extending to them a most cordial welcome.

Mr. WATKINS. I join with the Senator from Illinois in greeting these young people from his great State. I am proud of the fact that the Senator has so many present from his home county. I personally extend to them my welcome as well.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from Utah. Although we do not agree upon the amendment which he has been seeking to have the Senate adopt, we can agree upon the youngsters of the country.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I heard a part of the speech of the able Senator from Utah, and I know the serious spirit and the conscientious attitude he has toward these questions. I should like to put this consideration to him: That the whole trend of events, so far as modern war is concerned, forces upon us the necessity of being immediately ready. That is due to two things. First of all, nations no longer take the trouble to declare war and give advance notice of an attack. If that should occur, we would at present have no one holding the enemy back for us; we would have to do it ourselves. It is also due, in the second place, to the fact that technological warfare is much more complicated and requires a much longer training period. Many years ago a young man grabbed his musket and marched off with his regiment. That situation no longer applies. We must be ready when the whistle blows. We have to have people who know the profession of arms. Without in any way differing from what the Senator has said with reference to confidence or lack of confidence in the party which happens to be in power, the fact of the matter is that Congress, by its very nature, is utterly unable to meet these issues, and even if it were in session it would not be in position to exercise the leadership and control the factors which are essential to military success.

Mr. WATKINS. Does the Senator want us to have a system such as exists in Russia?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think we face at all the choice of becoming a dictatorship, as is Russia, on the one hand, or of being a soft push over, on the other. I think we can keep this Nation in a strong defensive position without bankrupting our economy or scrapping our democracy. I think we are smart enough to do that, and that is what I think we should do.

Mr. WATKINS. The Seantor was probably not present when I mentioned it before, but we are told by the executive department that we have a wonderful Air Force, a great Army, and a great Navy, and we have nearly everything we ought to have to meet any initial surprise attack. In fact, the Secretary of Defense has gone to the extent of saying—and I have heard him say it in his speeches at dinners—that at 4 o'clock on any morning we are ready to meet the enemy. That is as it should be, because we have spent on the armed services approximately fourteen or fifteen billion dollars every year since I have been in the Senate, which has been 3½ years. If that is a fact, why is it necessary to have so many men inducted each month and turn over to the President the power to say when the act shall become operative?

The Secretary of State does not agree with some of the other leaders, one of whom says this, another says that, and another says, "We have not yet had enough money," and the President says we are in a better situation than we have been at any time in 6 years. In view of that confusion I do not want to turn over to them the power to say when they are going to start inductions again. I am in favor of keeping the act in operation, the records, the books, the employees, everything necessary to have it all ready to go. The only difference I have with the Senator from Massachusetts and with some other Senators on the other side of the question is that I should like to know who is going to push the button and start it in operation. That should be done by the representatives of the people, under the Constitution.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Unfortunately, we cannot win battles with records, books, and registration forms. It must be done with men.

Mr. WATKINS. Is there now any lack of men?

Mr. LODGE. For any kind of a major war we have a great shortage of manpower in America. That is one reason why we have to have friends and allies, because there are simply not enough Americans to wage another major war by themselves. That is why we have the Atlantic Pact, and that is why we are hoping to get the west into a strong posture, within 3 or 4 years, to build up a strong front there which will be so strong that no aggressor will ever be tempted to overrun the west. It seems to me we are in one of those fateful moments in history when we have it within our power to make a decision whether we shall have world war III or whether we shall not. If we maintain the condition of military weakness in which we have been, and go along without building up any additional strength, we can be very sure that an aggressor will jump on us in 3 or 4 years, or we might even be so manifestly weak that the aggressor can win even without a war. On the other hand, if we get to work and build up a position of strength and get the west into a strong posture, in 3 or 4 years, world war III may never happen at all. If we are going to expect the nations of the west to do their share toward this end—that means munitions and also men—certainly it would ill become us to refuse to extend our own manpower law when the price at stake is the avoidance of world war III——

Mr. WATKINS. I agree that we should be prepared. I have been fighting right along to get the necessary money and men. I voted for the Draft Act. The only difference I can see between the Senator's position and mine is that I think Congress should have the say. After an attack is made, we can make the declaration of war. If the attack is made on our own territory, we are automatically at war. I think those questions belong to the Congress, and I do not think we have a right to pass them on. If the Defense Department has planned carefully, it now has the necessary planes, guns, tanks, radar, and whatever it takes to meet an initial attack, without the Draft Act. If we have not those things, God pity us.

Mr. LODGE. Is the Senator talking about an attack on continental United States, or as offensive action abroad?

Mr. WATKINS. An attack on the United States. The only reason we went into any of these other arrangements was because it was supposed to react and protect us in this country. It is the primary duty of a nation to defend its own people.

Mr. LODGE. Of course; and that is what we are discussing here. It is obvious that the defense of the West is just as vital to this Nation as would be the repelling of an invasion on the Atlantic coast. There cannot be any question about that.

Mr. WATKINS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. WATKINS. Is it not a fact that within recent weeks our defense experts have pointed out that we do not need so many men now, that we do not need to have such big armies as we had in the past, that by reason of our modern weapons of defense, which have been increased in their effectiveness, we do not need to have as many men to repel an initial attack? I hope we have in this country today such an expert group that can meet any initial or surprise attack, or emergency.

All I am pleading for is that we leave in the hands of Congress that power, because of the confusion in the executive department. If the situation is so dangerous as some Senators say it is and has been intimated by the Senator from Massachusetts, we had better stay within call.

Mr. LODGE. Let me say to the distinguished Senator from Utah that military operations must be commanded or headed up by an individual. If the Senator from Utah is right when he says that confusion exists in the executive department—and I think there is some confusion in the executive department—it is nothing to the confusion which would exist in Congress if the 435 Representatives and the 96 Senators undertook to exercise military command in an emergency. I can imagine nothing more utterly disastrous to the welfare of our country and to the young manhood of our country than such a possibility.

Mr. WATKINS. The Senator from Massachusetts wishes to leave in the hands of one man the question of determining when we are to go to war and whom we are to fight.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. WATKINS. The Senator says that unless the——

Mr. LODGE. The Constitution states who shall command the troops. In a fast changing and fast moving situation like the present, the legislative situation which we have had for the last few years meets the situation. Congress, with its power to authorize the size of the Armed Forces, and with its power to appropriate funds, still retains basic control of the size of the whole thing at all times anyway.

Mr. WATKINS. All I am asking for is that we live up to our Constitution and do our constitutional duty. It may be that a democracy has much more difficulty in making its decisions than any other kind of government, but it has much to make up for that weakness. Personally I am not ready to surrender that constitutional duty. If it is done, it will be done over my objection.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, I should like to say that no one appreciates the blessings of democracy more than the Senator from Massachusetts. It has been said that democracy is like a raft: one's feet are always wet, but no one ever drowns. It is true that people in a democracy go through some periods of indecision and inefficiency, but in the long run they come through all right, because they believe in what is being done and do things because they want to do them and not because of compulsion.

Mr. WATKINS. We have done a great deal without a draft act.

Mr. LODGE. We have not done a great deal without a draft act in World War I or in World War II. To do it without a draft act is precisely the worst way to do it.

Mr. WATKINS. We are doing it now, and I am voting for it, as I did.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator has voted for it, and I have voted for it. We agree that the draft is a good thing.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I am a little worried about the possibility of the draft extension bill not becoming law by tomorrow at midnight. I have conferred with some Senators on this side of the aisle. Because of the emergency, and because of the lateness of the hour, it seems to me that the best course to pursue would be temporarily to lay aside the pending bill and pass a joint resolution continuing the present draft law for a period of 30 days. That would give us time to continue the debate, and it would assure the country that the Selective Service Act would not expire tomorrow night. I do not like to interrupt the Senator's address. I am wondering how much longer he wishes to hold the floor.

Mr. WATKINS. That will depend a great deal on my colleagues. I think I have practically completed my remarks, and in view of what the distinguished majority leader has said, I do not care to prolong them. I believe I have made all the points that I wished to make. I cannot add to them by repeating them, even though they were made in the course of colloquy with my colleagues. I doubt the necessity of passing a joint resolution unless the distinguished majority leader has reasons with which I am not acquainted. There is no desire on my part to delay action on the bill, even though I believe we should have sufficient time to debate it properly.

Mr. LUCAS. If the Senator will further yield, I should like to say that I am not taking this action as the result of the address which the Senator from Utah is making. I appreciate the fact that he desires to see action on the bill expedited with all convenient speed. However, a situation in the House is involved which may delay matters beyond midnight tomorrow. That is why I was eager to get a joint resolution through the Senate and the House. Perhaps it would not be necessary to have the resolution go into effect, because it may be possible that we could get the bill through in time. However, I do not believe that Congress can afford to take a chance in view of what would be involved if we permitted the Selective Service Act to die. We have been all over that. Every Senator knows what is involved. We all know the chaos that would exist. It seems to me a definite crisis with respect to this legislation exists, and I hope we can agree on a joint resolution. If we could agree, we could then debate this bill as long as we wished to do so.

Mr. WATKINS. May I ask the distinguished majority leader whether he would ask to lay aside the pending bill to offer such a resolution?

Mr. LUCAS. I would ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the pending bill. Following the passage of the joint resolution we would move right back into debate on the pending measure and would continue debate on it until we had finished with its consideration. I hope we can finish consideration of the bill today, get it into conference, and perhaps dispose of its before midnight tomorrow. However, it seems to me the danger is too great not to pass a joint resolution.

Mr. WATKINS. I should like to say to the Senator from Illinois that if we were to pass the resolution he suggests, we would have 30 additional days, within which time we could prepare whatever amendments we wished to offer to the bill. I have some doubt about some amendments.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield so I may address an inquiry to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I have no objection to a joint resolution extending the act. However, in view of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, which raises the question whether the President should have the power to put the act into effect, or whether it should be done by a concurrent resolution of Congress, I wonder whether the proposed joint resolution should not contain a provision that the Draft Act shall not become effective except on the adoption of a concurrent resolution by Congress. In other words, the President would have the power to continue the machinery of the draft, but would not have the power actually to call up any young men except in accordance with a concurrent resolution adopted by Congress.

Mr. LUCAS. I am aware of the position of the able Senator from Missouri. However, I hope the Senator will not seriously press that point. In other words, what I am proposing is merely an extension of the Draft Act for 30 days. If we extended it with the kind of proviso suggested by the Senator from Missouri the resolution would have to go to the House and they would probably have to debate it because it is the same proposal as that contained in the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. Is it not true that the House has already adopted largely what I am contending for? If such a provision were added to the resolution the House might pass it all the more readily.

Mr. LUCAS. There is no question about that. It does seem to me, in view of the fact that the joint resolution would involve an extension for only a 30-day period, we should leave it just as it is. I am sure the House will act on it. Of course I would have to object to any amendment along the line which is now suggested by my friend from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, may I say that the Senator has not made clear why he would have to object to such an amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Because I do not believe in that kind of proposition. In other words, my philosophy of the Selective Service Act is exactly in line with what was reported by the Committee on Armed Services. If I were to adopt the Senator's suggestion, I would be abandoning my position and going along with the distinguished Senator from Utah. I could not do that.

Mr. KEM. It does not seem to me that the Senator, by agreeing to this temporary extension resolution, would make any concession of that kind. He would merely make a concession to those who think that that should be the law in order to get his 30-day extension through the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I could not do that, and I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I doubt the Senate would do it if there were a vote on it.

What I am trying to do is to expedite this matter, but I do not want to expedite it by including a provision of the kind suggested, which is unalterably opposed by the entire Armed Services Committee which reported the bill. The Senator from Maryland, the chairman of the committee is not present, and I am speaking only for myself, but I rather think that the Committee on Armed Services would take the same position I am taking.

It seems to me that, considering the importance of this measure, we should not have any trouble in extending the act for a period of 30 days without any amendment, which would afford everyone an opportunity to discuss and debate the amendment and finally get a vote on it, and the Senate would make the determination. If the Senate should defeat the Senator's amendment and it should go to conference, the conferees would have plenty of time to work out something which would be satisfactory to all Senators. The House of Representatives, I understand, are in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah; in fact, they passed a bill to the same tenor. So if we should defeat the Senator's amendment, and it went to conference, it would give the conferees plenty of time to work out something which would be satisfactory.

It seems to me that from the standpoint of all Senators, whether they favor the proposition or whether they are opposed to it, a mere 30-day extension is a proper thing, and I sincerely hope we can agree to that without much trouble.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. There are two versions of the proposed law. There is the version already adopted by the House, and there is the version proposed by the Senate Committee on Armed Services. I do not see why the able Senator from Illinois, the majority leader, should seek to impose in his proposed resolution of extension the Senate committee version rather than the House version. Does he not know that a considerable number of the Members of this body believe strongly in the House version rather than in the Senate committee version?

The Senator says that the proposed extension would be for only 30 days. I invite his attention to the fact that it would take only 30 minutes for the President to put the draft into effect under the existing law. There is no reason to create a hiatus, in my opinion, during which he would have powers which he very likely will not have after the final passage of the legislation.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I suggest that, by unanimous consent, we lay aside the unfinished business temporarily, and then take up the joint resolution and debate it. The Senator then could offer his amendment, and the same arguments the Senator from Utah has made for his amendment would apply to the amendment the Senator from Missouri would want to make. Then let us vote on the joint resolution within a reasonable length of time, and get it to the other House. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I do not care to hold up for one moment an effort to have such a joint resolution passed.

Mr. LUCAS. I am very grateful to the Senator.

Mr. WATKINS. Then, even if it does not have in it the amendment the Senator from Missouri thinks it should contain, in my opinion nothing will happen during the next 30 days. I do not wish to delay, and I shall yield the floor now, and, so far as I am concerned, I shall not object.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from Utah for his consideration in this matter, in the light in which the Senator from Illinois placed it before the Senate. I know how deeply the Senator is interested in his amendment, but as a matter of good sportsmanship, in order to get something through, the Senator has yielded, and I deeply appreciate the statement he has made.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator wish to make a speech?

Mr. KEM. I desire to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LUCAS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. KEM. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Ecton	Hunt
Benton	Ellender	Ives
Brewster	Ferguson	Jenner
Bricker	Frear	Johnson, Colo.
Bridges	Fulbright	Johnson, Tex.
Butler	George	Kefauver

Malone	Russell	Tydings
Martin	Saltonstall	Watkins
Maybank	Schoeppel	Wherry

Mundt	Smith, N. J.	Williams
Murray	Sparkman	Withers

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] is detained because of attendance at a meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). A quorum is present.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 190, introduced today by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], to extend the period of the effectiveness of the Selective Service Act for 1948 for 15 days. It had originally been intended to make the extension period for 30 days, but it was later decided to make it 15 days.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like most respectfully to suggest to the majority leader that if the Senate will accept the House draft measure it will take only a few moments' time to pass the bill in the Senate and it will not be necessary to have the extension of time which the Senator has requested.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I appreciate the suggestion made by the able Senator from Colorado, but a situation exists in the House of Representatives which compels us to do what I am now asking be done. I definitely understand that if certain parliamentary moves are made in the House of Representatives, which will be made, the House cannot pass the bill by midnight tomorrow, and the act will expire. That is the basic reason why the Senator from Illinois is attempting to secure an extension of 15 days.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If I may interrupt again and make a further suggestion: If we accept the House bill then there will be no action required by the House, will there?

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, the Senator is probably correct in that. But I think the Armed Services Committee is pretty much inclined not to accept the House bill. In view of the fact that the Armed Services Committee unanimously reported this measure I believe the Senate itself ought to have an opportunity to vote upon the amendment to the bill offered by the able Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS]. Of course, if the Armed Services Committee's position is lost, that would be the end of it. If it is won, then the matter would go to conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. So far as the Armed Services Committee is concerned, the only proponent of the measure I have seen active on the floor is a member from the minority side. I have not seen the chairman of the committee active. I have not seen other members of the committee active. But I have seen one of the minority members of the Senate Armed Services Committee on the Senate floor very, very active. I wonder how that happened.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Colorado has not been on the floor all the time. That is where the trouble lies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is true.

Mr. LUCAS. There are many Senators who have been active in connection with the bill; the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], and the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN]. I have heard from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] frequently. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN] is ready to take the floor in defense of his position at any time, I believe. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] will also speak.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Whenever I am on the floor I see a minority member of the committee active.

Mr. LUCAS. He has been talking quite a good deal. I believe the Senator is referring to the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN].

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. He has been interrupted many times by various Senators who have taken a very active position.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am not objecting to the Senator's unanimous-consent request.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wish to say that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the chairman of the committee, is tied up today in the hearings of the Subcommittee on Foreign Relations, which has an important witness before it, and requested that some of the other Senators who were on the committee look after the bill while he is otherwise occupied. I think that is a perfectly legitimate excuse for the Senator from Maryland not being here. I am sure there are many members of the Armed Services Committee who have already participated in the debate, or are expecting to do so during the course of the time between now and when the vote is taken. I wanted the RECORD made clear on that point.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator from California; and that is a true and correct statement of the facts with respect to the able chairman of the Armed Services Committee. He has been very busy, and he requested that I do what I could, as majority leader, to help this matter along.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, the passage of the joint resolution in no way would interfere with further debate on the selective-service extension bill. Is that correct?

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it the intention of the majority leader that if the joint resolution is passed, there will be a night session tonight on the selective-service extension bill; or will the passage of the joint resolution obviate that situation?

Mr. LUCAS. It probably will obviate it, although I would hope that we might dispose of the amendment of the Senator from Utah this afternoon. I understand that amendment is practically the only matter yet to be disposed of in connection with the bill. The Senator from Missouri has a speech to make on that subject.

The moment the joint resolution is passed, we shall then return to the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the Selective Service Extension Act. I should like very much to have the Senate conclude action on that measure, so that we can take up other vitally important matters.

If we are unable to reach a vote on that measure this afternoon, I do not wish to try to hold Senators here tonight for that purpose; but I certainly hope the measure can be handled today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has requested unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 190, extending for 15 days the life of the Selective Service Act of 1948.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, may the joint resolution be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subsection (b) of section 17 of the Selective Service Act of 1948 is amended by striking out "the second anniversary of the date of enactment of this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "July 9, 1950."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Senate Joint Resolution 190?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider Joint Resolution 190.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I have already made my argument on the joint resolution itself, and I should like to have a vote on it now, if possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Chair correct in understanding that an amendment changing the period of extension provided by the joint resolution from 30 days to 15 days has already been incorporated in the joint resolution?

Mr. LUCAS. It was originally intended to introduce the resolution for a 30-day extension, but it has been decided to make the extension only 15 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190) extending the period of effectiveness of the Selective Service Act of 1948 for 15 days was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I desire to express my thanks to the Senator from Utah, the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Colorado, and my distinguished friend, the minority leader, the Senator from Nebraska, for their cooperation in connection with this matter.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8567) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CANNON, Mr. MAHON, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. TABER, and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

EXTENSION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I wish to address myself to the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], which, in effect, provides that no person shall be inducted or ordered to report for induction into the armed forces of the United States until the Congress has by concurrent resolution declared that it is necessary that such induction be made.

The amendment of the Senator from Utah is based upon an important constitutional principle. This principle is that each of the three coordinate branches of the Government, created by the Constitution, should discharge the duties and responsibilities placed upon it by the Constitution. I am sorry to be compelled to say that, in my judgment, the bill as reported by the Committee on Armed Services is inconsistent with, and contrary to, that principle. In the absence of compelling necessity, no branch of the Government should abdicate its responsibilities, and shift its duties to another branch.

Article I of the Constitution of the United States defines the powers of Congress. Section (8) of this article specifically confers on Congress the power "to declare war." Congress is also given the power "to raise and support armies," and "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections and repel invasions."

The amendment of the Senator from Utah, which amendment is substantially embodied in the bill as passed by the House, is described in the House committee report as a "trigger provision." The House committee says this of the provision:

The effect of this amendment is evident. It keeps under congressional control the decision as to when compulsory service is necessary. It protects the Nation from administrative whimsy in the implementation of Selective Service authority.

Mr. President, I believe that almost everyone agrees that Congress should not surrender important powers to the executive branch of the Government except in the case of compelling necessity. What is the necessity in this case? Here is the justification given in the Senate committee report:

In other words, the 1948 act—

provided many enlistment incentives, and directed the continuance of a vigorous recruiting campaign. But if these measures failed to produce the number of men actually authorized by the Congress, the President was authorized to resort to inductions. For example, if the current shortage of over 25,000 in the Army persists in spite of all efforts to fill it by recruiting, and if by perhaps November the strength of the Army has fallen another 25,000, the President could induct men necessary to fill the shortage and meet the totals already authorized by the Congress.

Mr. President, here is the reason given in the Senate committee report for the inclusion of the provision giving the President this great authority:

Thus the 1948 act was intended to meet what is in reality a very practical, yet vital, situation, rather than to provide a course of action to be taken should some vague threat of national disaster suddenly materialize.

Now, Mr. President, we see the unusual circumstance that the committee in its report supports the provision on one ground; and when the provision reaches the floor of the Senate for consideration, it is justified by members of the Armed Services Committee on an entirely different ground. In other words, the committee report says very clearly that the justification is not some vague threat of national disaster suddenly to materialize. On the other hand, we hear able and distinguished members of the Armed Services Committee saying that the justification is the atomic bomb threat, the chance that our cities will suddenly be bombed or the possibility of some other sudden catastrophe.

In other words, if I may be permitted to say so, the committee, in its official report, and on the Senate floor, is blowing both hot and cold. If the reason we should pass this bill is that pointed out on the Senate floor, then the committee has used in the report language which successfully conceals that thought.

I agree that if voluntary enlistment fails to provide the number of men for the Armed Forces authorized by Congress, this is, in the words of the committee report, a "very practical yet vital situation." But, Mr. President, is Congress unable to deal with a vital, practical situation? Are we being told by our committee in polite language that Congress has lost the power of effective action? Have we become a flock of "sitting ducks"? Are we mice or are we men?

The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachment by men of zeal, well-meaning, but without understanding—

Said Mr. Justice Brandeis in a famous case.

I should like to be permitted to say, Mr. President, that the greatest danger to our liberty is not in encroachment by the President upon the powers of Congress. The greatest danger, in my judgment, lies in the supine surrender by the Congress of its constitutional powers. When Congress voluntarily gives up its powers, it does not do so through any lack of zeal, patriotism, or good intention. We all know that. It is due either to a lack of appreciation of the fundamental principles of the Constitution upon which our liberties are based or a failure to apply them to the case at hand. When there is a concentration of power in one person, there is a loss of liberty. History proves that to be so. The proposal of the committee is a further instance of the present-day trend to transfer authority from the legislative branch of the Government to the executive branch, with a resulting concentration of power in the President.

Mussolini said, "Mankind is tired of liberty." That may have been true of the people of continental Europe when those words were used, but it is certainly not true of the people of the United States. On their behalf, I repudiate the idea.

We all recognize that most of us have a natural tendency to shrink from responsibility. We are glad to avoid, when we can, the stark necessity of thinking, standing, and acting on our own. I believe, Mr. President, that if we decline in this case to keep the "trigger" in our own hands, to use the language of the House report, we shall simply be making a concession to the frailty of human nature. "Liberty means responsibility," says George Bernard Shaw; "that is why most men dread it."

When Lincoln was on his way to Washington to assume the duties of the Presidency, he stopped off at Lawrenceburg, Ind., where he made a short speech. That was on February 28, 1861. He said:

I have been selected to fill an important office for a brief period, and am now in your eyes invested with an influence which will soon pass away. But should my administration prove to be a very wicked one, or what is more probable, a very foolish one, if you the people are true to yourselves and the Constitution, there is but little harm I can do, thank God.

One of the most important functions of the Congress is to act as a check on the executive branch of the Government and to define the channels through which the power of the President is to flow. Lincoln tells us that so long as we adhere to the Constitution our system of checks and balances will bring us through.

There would be no need—indeed, there is no need—for Congress if, when it is confronted with an important decision, such as determining when to call men to the colors, all we do is to write a law giving the President the power to do anything he likes about the matter. Any clever bureaucrat could cover that situation by a directive.

All authority in our Republic belongs to the people. Members of the Congress are the representatives of the people. When Ethan Allen was asked by a British officer by whose authority he demanded the surrender of Ticonderoga he answered, "In the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental Congress."

I should be glad to support legislation designed to keep the selective service organization on a stand-by basis, to be available in the event of an emergency. But the machinery should not be turned over lock, stock, barrel, and trigger, to the President, his bureaucrats, and his military leaders. Let me repeat that, Mr. President. The machinery should not be turned over in whole to the President, his bureaucrats, and his military leaders. I do not think that is what the people of the United States expect of the Congress. I do not think it is what they want the Congress to do. The trigger should remain safely and securely under the control of the people through their representatives in the Congress.

I have supported, and I shall continue to support, legislation to give the United States a modern air force, second to none, and an adequate Army and Navy. I have supported, and I shall continue to support, legislation to develop and to provide for our Armed Forces the very lastest types of equipment which the superb technical and productive facilities of America and the inventive genius of our people are able to furnish. We should develop, as has been said already in this discussion, a national defense so strong that no nation will be under the slightest temptation to attack us.

But I cannot justify abdicating to the executive branch of the Government under present peacetime conditions the power vested solely in the Congress of raising an army by compulsory induction. This harsh power to reach into the homes of the land and take away its sons for military service is perhaps the most drastic of all the powers of the Government. Certainly none affects the fathers and mothers of the land more intimately.

Why, why, should it be surrendered by the representatives of the people?

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment to H. R. 6826, as amended.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment, as amended, is open to further amendment.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment lettered E.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, between lines 17 and 18, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. The Selective Service Act of 1948 is hereby amended by inserting after section 20 the following new section:

"SUSPENSION OF AUTHORITY

"SEC. 21. No person shall be inducted or ordered to report for induction into the armed forces of the United States under this title unless the Congress after the date of enactment of the act entitled 'An act to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 604) for a period of 3 years and for other purposes,' has by concurrent resolution declared that it is necessary to supplement voluntary enlistments in the armed forces of the United States in order to maintain the strength thereof to the extent appropriated for by the Congress."

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, this amendment provides substantially what is provided by the House bill, except that it leaves in Congress the authority to say when inductions under the Draft Act would become operative. That is the only substantial difference. It removes from the House bill the statement with reference to an emergency. I think it is an improvement over the House version. It would retain in Congress the power to make operative the induction feature of the Draft Act. It would extend all the other features of the act which would be extended by the Senate bill. The induction machinery of the Selective Service Act would be in full force and effect, as well as the records, the keepers of the records, and all officials. The only difference is that the House and the Senate combined, would have to declare when the induction machinery would go into operation. That is the chief difference between the amendment and the committee bill.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Would the Senator's amendment keep intact all the selective-service machinery in the various States of the Union?

Mr. WATKINS. It would. It would have the same effect as the House bill, except for the provision that Congress would have to declare an emergency to exist, which is eliminated.

Mr. MARTIN. In other words, before the President could call up any men through selective service, it would be necessary for a concurrent resolution to be adopted by Congress?

Mr. WATKINS. It would have to be done by action of the Congress. It could be a resolution or an act. However, Congress would not have to find that an emergency existed. Under the amendment, section 21 would provide:

No person shall be inducted or ordered to report for induction into the Armed Forces of the United States under this title unless the Congress after the date of enactment of the act entitled "An act to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 604) for a period of 3 years and for other purposes," has by concurrent resolution declared that it is necessary to supplement voluntary enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States in order to maintain the strength thereof to the extent appropriated for by the Congress.

It would not be necessary to adopt a resolution declaring an emergency to exist. All the features of the Senate version would be in effect if this amendment were adopted.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. Would there be any dislocation of the various selective-service organizations in the United States?

Mr. WATKINS. I am informed that there would be no dislocations.

Mr. MARTIN. If I may ask another question, am I correct in understanding that all the selective-service machinery, including personnel, such as directors of the various State boards, and organization in the various counties, would remain intact?

Mr. WATKINS. That is my understanding.

Mr. MARTIN. Before they could start to function, calling men into the service, it would be necessary to have action by the Congress, would it not?

Mr. WATKINS. That is correct.

Mr. MARTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I should like to say to the Senator from Utah that in this discussion I find myself confused as to the impelling reason for taking this power out of the hands of Congress, where it is placed by the Constitution, and putting it into the hands of the executive branch of the Government, where it is placed by the Senate committee version of the bill. I have looked at the report of the Senate committee, and the report says that this provision giving the authority to the President is intended, quoting their language, to meet "a very practical, yet vital, situation, rather than to provide a course of action to be taken should some vague threat of national disaster suddenly materialize."

I have listened intently to the statements made by members of the Committee on Armed Services. They all bear down on the threat of atomic attack, the bombing of cities, and that sort of thing. Which is it—is it that we are asked to pass this as a practical means of meeting a usual situation, and not to meet an emergency, or are we asked to pass it to meet an emergency? Which is it, and what is it?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATKINS. In a moment.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Will the Senator yield to permit me to answer the question?

Mr. WATKINS. I shall give my answer, and then the Senator may give his.

I have heard two versions from the proponents of the committee bill. One version is that it is to meet an emergency, such as an atomic bomb attack. It is said that we will not have any time, if we are hit by force, and that we must put this machinery into effect immediately. That is one version.

Mr. KEM. Let me ask the Senator this question: If the first is the justification for the provision, why did the committee send in a report saying that is not the justification, but that it is merely an attempt to meet a practical yet vital situation?

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Massachusetts, a member of the committee, may answer the question. I cannot speak for the committee.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I can speak only for myself as a member of the committee, but I say emphatically as I can to the Senator from Missouri that my vote for the continuation of selective service is impelled by a desire to maintain a sufficiently strong Army so that we will keep the world at peace. I believe the selective service law—call it an inducement, or call it a background—should encourage voluntary enlistments, so far as we can get them. If we can get them, then we will not have to use the law. We want to keep the world at peace.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, may I address a question to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WATKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri may, in my time, address an inquiry to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether he has lost confidence in the ability of Congress to conduct its business in a way calculated to keep the peace. Why should not this drastic power continue to be vested in the Congress, where it was placed by the founding fathers? Why do we have to run in the teeth of the teachings of the framers of the Constitution?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Because if it had to be done by Congress, after debate and after discussion, it would absolutely contravene one of the purposes for which the selective service is established, namely, to keep our Army strong and to keep our people confident that the world will remain at peace. If we stir the people up, if we arouse a feeling that we have to have a large additional force, or draft men into the service, it would give our people a lack of confidence and make them think we might be going to war.

Mr. KEM. May I address another question to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WATKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri may address a question to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. KEM. Am I to understand that the Senator from Massachusetts has lost confidence in the legislative branch, and wants to substitute for our constitutional form of government a dictatorship, which can act quickly, and without discussion or debate?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I certainly would say to the Senator from Missouri that I think just the contrary. Whoever he may be for the time being, I believe that under our system of government we have to place a certain amount of confidence in our Commander in Chief. We can always impeach him; we can always deprive him of his office.

Mr. KEM. The Senator will agree that the Constitution does not place this power in the Commander in Chief, but, to the contrary, places it in the elected representatives of the people in the Congress; will he not?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator misunderstood me. Under the Constitution, the Commander in Chief is the Commander of our Armed Forces.

Mr. KEM. That is correct, and the Senator will agree that the Commander in Chief does not have the power to induct citizens into the Army without the consent of Congress.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That is correct.

Mr. KEM. Very well. Then why does the Senator want to change the constitutional set-up of our fathers and give this great, harsh power to the President?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I do not want to change the Constitution; I do not want to change the degree of power given to the President. I believe we are living in very difficult and uncretain times, and I, for one, want to keep peace in the world. I believe that if we have a sufficiently strong Army, and give the Commander in Chief certain powers in these uncertain times, which we must give him, we will keep peace in the world. The powers proposed are to exist for only 3 years. I would respectfully call to the attention of the Senator from Missouri the fact that they can be repealed by majority vote in the Congress at any time.

Mr. TAFT. Not if the President vetoes the bill.

Mr. KEM. No; not if the President vetoes the bill.

Let me ask the Senator another question. Is there anything in the recent experience of the people of the world to indicate that setting up dictatorships, to indicate that vesting vast, unchartered powers to one man leads to peace?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I would answer the distinguished Senator from Missouri, whose questions are always very penetrating, by saying that the powers given to the President are not, as the Senator would seem to imply, the broad, unlimited powers which a dictator has. They are extremely limited powers.

Mr. KEM. The Senator from Massachusetts will agree that there is no more drastic power than the power to take our sons from the homes of the land and induct them into the military service. He will agree to that, will he not?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That is a very large power.

Mr. KEM. If the Senator from Massachusetts wants to do away with the teachings of the Constitution, if he wants to embark on an unchartered sea, where is he going to stop? If he is in favor of vesting such a power in the President as is proposed, what is he going to deny him? Is he going to give him a blank check, to go ahead and do whatever he and his bureaucrats and military chiefs think is advisable to preserve the peace of the world? I dare say the people of Masachusetts do not want that done. I know of nothing in the writings of the great patriots of Massachusetts which would lead me to believe that was in their minds.

The Senator was not in the Chamber a few minutes ago when I referred to the words of a great New Englander, Ethan Allen. The Senator will recall that when he was asked by a British officer under whose authority he demanded the surrender of Ticonderoga, he said, "In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress." In other words, the Senator from Massachusetts surely thinks that these powers are in the people, and should be vested there or in the elected representatives of the people. We should not take away these powers without giving the most careful and thoughtful consideration to what we are doing.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I would agree with the Senator from Missouri entirely. I would also suggest to the Senator from Missouri that I am confident that the people of Missouri do not want to go to war. If we are to keep the peace, and if by giving limited powers to our Commander in Chief, the Chief Executive of the country, in a most uncertain condition of the world, we can keep the peace, I believe we should do it. I am against giving unlimited powers to the Executive. I am for keeping the powers in the Congress.

I am sorry to see the discussion of the point at issue get into this angle, because to me it is not the point of view from which to consider it. The angle from which to consider it is how best we can maintain a sufficient number of volunteers in our armed services in order to keep the Armed Forces up, so that the equipment and training of the men will be ample, and no other nation will want to go to war with us.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from Massachusetts mean to suggest that it is out of order to discuss the fundamental principles of our Constitution on the floor of the United States Senate? If so, since when did it become so?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I certainly do not.

Mr. KEM. Then why, in considering the grant of this vast power to the President, should we not discuss the basic principles of the Constitution? Why should we soft-pedal them? Why should there be sent up from the Armed Services Committee mealy-mouthed language to the effect that the bill is not to meet a national disaster which may suddenly materialize, but is merely a practical way to meet a practical situation? Why does the committee send the bill to the Senate with one kind of a report, and then come forward and assign and argue an entirely different reason for the passage of the bill?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I most respectfully say to the Senator from Missouri that I do not consider those words mealy-mouthed. I did not write the report. It is the report of the chairman. So I cannot take the responsibility for those words. But I think this is an attempt to meet a practical situation.

Mr. KEM. I do not wish to characterize the language of the draftsman of the report in any uncomplimentary terms, but I should like to ask the Senator if the justification given in the report is not entirely different from the justification the Senator from Massachusetts is presenting to the Senate?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I would not suppose so. I would want to read the whole report.

Mr. KEM. I invite the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the language:

Thus the 1948 act—

Containing this power, as it does—

was intended to meet what is in reality a very practical, yet vital, situation, rather than to provide a course of action to be taken should some vague threat of national disaster suddenly materialize.

As I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, his argument is that we want to meet some vague threat of national disaster which may suddenly materialize, which is exactly what the report of the committee says the provision of the bill is not intended to meet.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I would answer the distinguished Senator's question by saying that I do not say there is anything vague to meet. I believe we want to keep the present situation from becoming more uncertain than it is today. The way we can do it is to keep our country strong.

Mr. KEM. My question of the Senator is: Is the justification he is giving for the bill the same as the justification contained in the report?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The member of the committee staff who is sitting beside me says it is the same. I would have to read it myself.

Mr. KEM. May I say that I have just read it to the Senator.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Will the Senator show me where he is reading?

Mr. KEM. I am reading from page 9 of the report of the committee, the last sentence in the fourth paragraph, the fourth paragraph being the one which deals with the subject under discussion.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I read:

Thus the 1948 act was intended to meet what is in reality a very practical, yet vital, situation—

And that is to keep our forces up to the strength the armed services consider necessary.

Mr. KEM. Exactly. Will the distinguished Senator continue to read the sentence?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Yes—

rather than to provide a course of action to be taken should some vague threat of national disaster suddenly materialize.

The purpose of that sentence, as I understand it, is that if the present Selective Service Act should expire, some event might occur by reason of which we would have suddenly to recruit a great many men for the armed services and we would not have the means at hand to take the steps necessary to be taken properly to recruit them. I would say most respectfully to my friend, the Senator from Missouri, that what I have tried to say I believe backs up the reasoning behind that sentence.

Mr. KEM. The Senator suggested a few minutes ago that he thought the people of Missouri want peace. I am quite sure they do. But the people of Missouri are not tired of liberty.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I agree with the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] has the floor.

Mr. WATKINS. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, has the Senator from Utah yielded the floor?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] is recognized.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, which I ask to have stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 2, after the word "declared", it is proposed to insert the words "or the President has proclaimed."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, the five words of the amendment explain themselves. They give to the President the power to proclaim it necessary to supplement the voluntary enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States in order to maintain the strength thereof to the extent appropriated for by the Congress. In other words, whereas the Senator from Utah by his amendment would give the power to both branches of Congress by concurrent resolution to supplement the voluntary enlistments, my amendment would give equal power to the President.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the Armed Forces are not limited with respect to the number that can be inducted into the services by the appropriations made and the provisions for the standing Army provided for by the Congress in the appropriation bills?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I would state that the Senator from Arizona is entirely correct. The authorized strength at present is as follows: The Army 837,000. The Navy, including the Marine Corps, 666,882. The Air Force 502,000. Or a total authorized strength of 2,005,882.

The amount of appropriations for the fiscal year 1951 permitted the Army to have 630,000 men, the Navy to have 449,000 men, and the Air Force to have 357,000 men. So that at the present time the armed services are below authorized strength.

Mr. McFARLAND. Is the President merely given the power to bring the Armed Forces up to these figures in the event the volunteer system does not provide a sufficient number?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That is entirely correct. I should like to call to the attention of the Senator from Arizona that under the present act the President can, first, call only men between the ages of 19 and 26; second, nonveterans; third, men who are unmarried.

Members of the Reserve components are exempt. Boys in high school and college are exempt. Therefore the numbers that can be inducted have very real and practical limits.

Mr. McFARLAND. In other words, the Senate bill would make it unnecessary to use the draft instead of compelling its use?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. We pray so. I certainly pray so.

Mr. McFARLAND. Unless there was an emergency which required Congress to appropriate more money.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation? As I understand the yeas and nays have been ordered on my amendment, and the Senator from Massachusetts has offered an amendment to the amendment I offered. It occurs to me the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment of the amendment is not prevented at this stage; but the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment of the Senator from Utah. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. McFARLAND and Mr. WATKINS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I was going to suggest the absence of a quorum, if the Senator from Utah is about to continue his speech.

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. McFARLAND. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Hendrickson	Martin
Benton	Hickenlooper	Maybank
Brewster	Hill	Millikin
Bricker	Hoey	Mundt
Bridges	Holland	Murray
Butler	Humphrey	Myers

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield to me for a brief statement in connection with a roll call?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I learned after coming into the Chamber a few moments ago that, without my knowing it, there had been a quorum call preceding the last one by a few moments. I want the RECORD to show that I was in attendance on the Judiciary Committee, on the matter of the nomination of Harold I. Baynton, during the quorum call preceding this one. I have answered to this one.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask that the RECORD show that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], and myself have been sitting all morning and afternoon in the subcommittee concerned with the loyalty probe.

But what I asked recognition for was this: The Senator from Utah has offered an amendment, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] has offered a perfecting amendment. If the Saltonstall amendment to the amendment prevails, then I believe that the Committee on Armed Services would be wise to accept the amendment as amended by the Senator from Massachusetts. In that event, the proposition would be as follows: The Selective Service Act would be extended on a stand-by basis; it would not be used; it would be on the books; the machinery would be kept intact; the 10,000,000 registrants would already be in the record; the draft boards would be continued. We would not use the law any more in the future than we have used it in the past, unless the Congress declared that an emergency existed, by reason of which we would have to put it into operation. Of course, the Congress may not be here for 5 months of this year, and it would not be wise to go away and have no one here to put it into operation. So the Saltonstall amendment provides that either the Congress or the President can find the facts which warrant the placing of the Selective Service Act into operation. That is a concession to the varying and conflicting points of view. I do not believe we could surrender any more than we have of our original position without jeopardizing the security and preparedness of the United States.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Maryland whether, under the Saltonstall amendment, the Congress would not be ceding or shifting to the President the right, power, and authority to induct citizens under compulsion?

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not quite understand the question.

Mr. KEM. I am asking whether, in the event the Saltonstall amendment to the Watkins amendment should be adopted, it would not in effect shift from the Congress to the President the right to induct citizens into the Army under compulsion.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not believe it would, and I give the Senator briefly my reasons. If Congress were in session, it is my belief it would be the operating agency to declare that the selective-service law should be employed. If Congress were not in session, there would be no one to make such a declaration unless the Congress were called back and decided to do so.

I understand, rather unofficially, that a target of around the first of August has been tentatively set as the date by which Congress hopes to complete its labors and go home. We must remember that the 435 Members of the House of Representatives are all up for election this year, and a third of the Senate; so that when the Congress recesses or adjourns and goes home, its Members will be busy with matters that concern the election, and there will be no agency in Washington that could employ and put in operation the selective-service law, in the event it became necessary to do so.

My opinion is, therefore, that it would be unwise to go away from the Capital leaving that sort of situation hanging in abeyance. I therefore feel that the Saltonstall amendment is absolutely imperative to the defense of the country, particularly when we are pretty sure that Congress will not be in session for a period of 4 or 5 months; that is, during the months which remain following the recess or adjournment.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Missouri for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I know the Senator from Maryland has no difficulty in finding words to express his ideas. If the Senator from Maryland intends not to give to the President the power to induct citizens into the Army when the Congress is in session, the Senator from Maryland will agree that the Saltonstall amendment does not express that idea, will he not?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. I should like to say to the Senator from Missouri that we are going to have to work out some phases of this in conference. Even if the Saltonstall amendment is adopted, we shall not be on all fours with the proposition as it came from the House. I hope the Senator will not put the conferees on the part of the Senate in a position where we shall have surrendered completely to the House point of view and have nothing at all to discuss. I think we ought to maintain the position of the Armed Services Committee at least in substance, when it is supported by all the military experts who testified before the committee as being essential in the sense that the Senate received the report from the Armed Services Committee of the Senate. I am very hopeful the Senate will not compel us to go to conference with nothing at all in our hands with which to discuss the matter with the Members from the House.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, I should like to say that in my judgment the Saltonstall amendment as now framed is no concession at all. It means utterly nothing. I think the Senator from Maryland must realize that and appreciate it, good lawyer that he is.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I do not want the Saltonstall amendment, and I do not want the Watkins amendment. I want the unanimous position of the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate to prevail. But in order to try to meet the position of those on the other side, after some consultation with most of the members of the Armed Services Committee who were then on the floor—not all of them—I should like to say that I am willing to go a certain way in the interest of having what is being done to conform as far as possible, to the viewpoint of the Senator from Utah and of the Senator from Missouri. But they are asking us to go all the way, and I think that would be a mistake.

Mr. KEM. On the other hand, the Senator from Maryland is asking us to concede fundamental constitutional principles which have served us well for 150 years.

Mr. TYDINGS. No, I am not, because I do not think there are any fundamental constitutional principles surrendered in this proposition at all. If the Senator from Missouri thinks there are, I respect his point of view, but it is not my point of view.

Mr. KEM. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me to ask him two or three questions?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; certainly.

Mr. KEM. The Senator agrees that the right to induct citizens into the Army is placed by the Constitution in the Congress of the United States, does he not?

Mr. TYDINGS. I would not say that. I think Congress can, within certain constitutional limitations, designate how, when, and under what circumstances it shall be done. Congress does not sit as a draft board; it does not sit as a director of selective service; it does not say what all the requirements are. It generally fixes the purview of selective service and designates persons to put it into effect.

Mr. KEM. Article I of the Constitution is the one which defines the powers of the Congress. Section 8 of that article provides that the Congress shall have power "to declare war"; that it shall have the power "to raise and support armies"; that it shall have the power "to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions."

Clearly, that is placing in the hands of the Congress the right to induct citizens into the Army. I do not think there can be any question about that. I have never heard it argued that the Constitution does not place in the Congress this power. The question is whether it is a sound principle for us to shift that responsibility and say that we are not willing to take the responsibility of calling citizens to the colors, and that we want the President to do it for us.

That trend has been going on in this country for 15 or 20 years, or perhaps longer. The question is whether on this important subject we are going to continue the present trend and say that the President knows better than we do, that he is better advised, because he has around him a lot of bureaucrats and military chiefs, and accordingly that he can do it better than can the elected representatives of the people.

The question is presented to us under the guise of saving the peace, but it really involves the question of saving the liberties of the people.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator that the President cannot have selective service without an act of Congress. He cannot simply say, "I want so many men in the Army, in the Navy, and in the Air Force." He cannot do anything about it unless we pass a law providing for it. I agree that the Constitution places the power in the Congress. This is not giving the President the right to do it. It is telling him, under the circumstances fixed by Congress, when he can employ it. But we created it, and we hold the power. We are the genesis of the whole proposition. The President has no authority to do it. All we are dealing with here is the time element.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is a very vital and a very important question involved. Why would it not meet the real situation if the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts should be modified to the extent of providing that if Congress is not in session, an emergency may be declared by the President?

Mr. TYDINGS. I would have no objection to such a modification, but the principle would not be altered.

Mr. GEORGE. If Congress were in session, Congress would have the responsibility and the duty to act.

Mr. TYDINGS. My point is that the need, for the President to declare an emergency, if Congress were in session, would be less; but if we say the President can do it when Congress is not in session, we can, by the same logic, say that the President can do it when Congress is in session, as a matter of legal right, provided the Congress gives him the right.

I am not arguing for a moment that the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia is not a good one, in keeping with democratic processes; and to that extent I agree with the able Senator from Missouri. But the principle of allowing the President to do it is the same.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should dislike to confer that power on the President even with the Congress not in session, but I can see that there are certain practical considerations involved. As practical men, I think that perhaps we should accept the suggestion of the able Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Massachusetts, in the event we can get an agreement—the sands in the hourglass are running out, and this is a very vital matter; we do not want to lose 10,000,000 registrants who possibly may have illegibly registered and will have to be registered all over again—I wonder if the Senator from Massachusetts would not modify his amendment to provide that the President may put into operation the machinery of selective service, provided the Congress is not in session, and that in all other cases Congress shall be the sole agency to put the machinery into operation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair invites the attention of Senators to the fact that the yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, and, therefore, the amendment may not be modified except by unanimous consent.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it seems to me that if we confine the President's right to declare a national emergency to a time when the Congress is not in session, that would be a reasonable distinction. If the fact is merely that there are not enough men coming into the Army, and enlistments are falling off, that is a different matter. I can see some reason for giving the power to the President to declare an emergency if there is a threat of war.

I would suggest that the amendment be modified to provide that if Congress is not in session, if the President shall find a national emergency to exist, he can put the draft law into operation. I do not like the idea, however, of giving him that power simply because not enough men are enlisting. But if he is willing to say, "This is a national emergency; Congress is not here, and I think we should put the law into effect," I would be willing, personally, to agree to that kind of an amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Would the amendment which the Senator is proposing provide that if the President should find an emergency to exist he would have the power to put the selective service law into operation?

Mr. TAFT. Yes; he would have to find an emergency to exist. Then he could put the act into effect if Congress were not in session.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the able Senator from Ohio that I want to try to accede, so far as I can, to any reasonable suggestion in order to have the Selective Service Act extended, providing that we do not get a hollow victory. In all good faith, while I am impressed with what the Senator from Ohio says, I should like to present to him this situation: There is a great number of troops across the water, both in the Atlantic and Pacific areas. The fact is that voluntary enlistments are beginning to drop off. We are now 20,000 below the minimum strength which chiefs of staff have fixed as the limit beyond which we should not go. Their prediction, supported by the testimony of General Hershey, is that that decline in voluntary enlistments is growing at an increasing and accelerated rate. If it continues to grow and the President declares that in itself to be an emergency, it would not be the kind of emergency which I think the Senator from Ohio has in mind when he makes his suggestion. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I think the Senator is right, although it might go to such an extent that it would become a national emergency. If there seemed to be threats, it might go to an extreme case. I do not think merely because Congress cannot be called back for 30 days that a national emergency is created; but it seems to me that there could arise such an extreme case. After all, if we give the President the power to find that a national emergency exists, he can make such a finding, and under those circumstances we cannot stop him. I agree to that. I think by requiring him to do it indicates to him that he is not supposed to do it unless a national emergency does exist.

Mr. TYDINGS. If it is the general understanding—and I think we ought to have a general understanding and ought to act with our eyes open—that if enlistments fall off the President may say it is an emergency, and not only when some war scare exists in some foreign country, that is one thing. However, I do not want the President to have to find that an emergency exists because of some Whitsuntide event in Berlin, or a riot in Tokio. I say that because the emergency I see coming is that there will not be a sufficient number of men in the armed services to give us the kind of security which we must have until the international situation straightens out.

I shall be glad to take such a modification to conference for further consideration, with the distinct understanding that what I have explained in these brief remarks as the thought of the Senate would be the kind of emergency in which the President could act without being charged with breaking faith with Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. There may be something completely different from that suggested in the observation just made by the Senator from Maryland. The point is that the President, if he feels he is justified, may declare an emergency to exist. If he does, there is no question that he would have the right we are talking about.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have taken a good deal of liberty with the amendment of one of the ablest of my helpmates and colleagues, the Senator from Massachusetts. Perhaps I have given hostages to fortune in a rather unappreciative way for the services rendered by him. May I ask the Senator if he would be willing to modify his amendment to meet the point of view which has been expressed here.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I would say to the Senator from Maryland, first, that I believe in the committee's action. I do not believe in the House provision. Secondly, the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah, which was drafted by the Senate counsel, contains the words of the amendment which was drafted for me, with the exception of the words I have added. It will be noted that the amendment of the Senator from Utah strikes from the House bill the words "national emergency." It limits the induction to maintenance, instead of increasing the strength of the Armed Forces, and limits it to the extent appropriated for by Congress. I mention that fact because I believe the amendment of the Senator from Utah is in much superior form to the language used in the House bill. Personally I do not like the words "national emergency," because I think those words create an excitement and a scare feeling which may not really be at all justified.

The whole purpose of the selective-service law, as I have said to the Senator from Missouri, is to keep peace—and for no other purpose—by having a strong, trained force, which would be smaller than would be needed if the act were not in effect. I am agreeable to the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia because it would give us something to discuss with the House. I believe there is merit in what he says, in view of the strong opinion of many people, particularly of Senators on this side of the aisle. I hesitate to add the words "national emergency" for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree thoroughly with the position taken by the Senator from Massachusetts. I doubt whether I have either the right as committee chairman, or the right in the knowledge of the evidence which was given before our committee, to surrender, in the national interest, to any proposal that has been made. Personally I should like to go down the line, fight it out on principle, and have a yea-and-nay vote. However, I can see another tragedy looming, which would affect the 10,000,000 men now registered and those likely to be registered, and the 3,200 draft boards and 23,000 voluntary employees who would go out of business on the 24th of June if the present law were not extended. Therefore, it is not a question of whether we can get what we believe we ought to have as a matter of support for an essential national program, but whether we can get enough of it so as not to leave the country exposed to a danger and expense which would mean the loss of 4 months in our preparedness effort. Therefore, I should like to have a vote on the proposal of the Senator from Massachusetts, as modified by the Senator from Georgia. I do not believe Senators ought to ask us to go any further than that, because we shall probably have to make further concessions in conference. If our hands should be tied any further in conference, the Senate conferees would be practically powerless.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator from Maryland yield so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Maryland yields for that purpose.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is not the very purpose of the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia to the effect that there should be a deterrent upon the power of the President merely to step in and call men to the colors? What we have in mind is that no such action should be taken unless the facts are presented to Congress; but if Congress is not in session the circumstances should be such as to create a national emergency, and that under such circumstances the President could act as the Commander in Chief. Would not the Senator say that was the situation we should consider?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I agree. The only question I had in mind was with respect to the necessity of having the President declare a national emergency. In my opinion, those words constitute strong language. What we are trying to do is not to have an emergency but to keep the peace, and to maintain a sufficient number of men in our Armed Forces so as to avoid an emergency.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does not the Senator believe that if the President did call up the men that such a national emergency would exist, if he were to use it for the purpose of calling men to the colors?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. That might or might not be the result.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, since we are legislating on the floor, and all the implications of what we do may not be visible at the moment, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts has any exploration been made to determine whether, if a requirement is put in the legislation that the President declare a state of national emergency, that would bring into operation many more Executive powers than we would want him to have in peacetime? I should like to see something worked out which would meet the general objections of our friends who have been hesitant on this question.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I will say that the question has not been discussed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to say that I have been trying to find different words than "national emergency." After conferring with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS], in order to try to keep the philosophy of what has been proposed without using the words "national emergency," which may give a connotation that we are threatened with a war, and might give the President powers which we do not want him to have, the following language has been suggested:

If Congress is not in session, and the President of the United States declares that a national necessity exists which requires an increase in the armed strength of the United States—

There we have a point of view upon which we all seem to agree, namely, that the President will act only when Congress is not in session, and we put it on the ground of national necessity rather than national emergency.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. As one member of the Committee on Armed Services—although I was not in the Chamber at the time the debate opened on this particular point—I would say that while the amendment goes further than I would personally prefer to have it go, tying the hands of the President more than I think it is wise to tie them, in the interest of attempting to have the legislation passed through the Congress, I would agree to the language suggested.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to draw to the attention of the Senator from Maryland the fact that in my humble judgment the language which he has just read might be construed, and I believe it would be construed, to allow the President to call men to the colors in excess of the authorized strength of the Armed Forces. I am sure the Senator did not intend to have any such meaning attached to the language.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct. The Senator from Florida has an excellent point, and I think the language should be fitted in.

Mr. TAFT. I think it should go after the words "United States", in line 3, instead of at the end, with the proper commas inserted.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be vacated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is vacated. Does the Senator from Mssachusetts now desire to modify his amendment?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I modify my amendment—which I understand has substantial agreement, and which I believe the chairman of the committee is willing to accept—in accordance with the Watkins amendment, so that it will read as follows:

SEC. 21. No person shall be inducted or ordered to report for induction into the armed forces of the United States under this title (1) unless the Congress after the date of enactment of the act entitled "An act to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 604) for a period of three years and for other purposes," has by concurrent resolution declared that it is necessary to supplement voluntary enlistments in the armed forces of the United States in order to maintain the strength thereof to the extent appropriated for by the Congress, or (2) if the Congress is not in session, unless the President of the United States declares that a national necessity exists, which requires an increase in the armed forces of the United States in order to maintain the strength thereof to the extent appropriated for by the Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. That will take care of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator modifies his amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. If we can get an agreement on this amendment, I should like to say that of course we will give it further scrutiny in the conference, and if there are any legal imperfections in it, or any misconceived words the effect of which would not be what we intend, when we get legal opinions on it, we will feel honor-bound, within the philosophy of the amendment, to make sure that the point of view of the Senate is carried out.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the request for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request is withdrawn.

Mr. WATKINS. I now accept the modification of the amendment proffered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator modifies his own amendment according to the modification of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Selective Service Act of 1948 is hereby amended by inserting after section 20 the following new section:

"SUSPENSION OF AUTHORITY

"SEC. 21. No person shall be inducted or ordered to report for induction into the armed forces of the United States under this title (1) unless the Congress after the date of enactment of the act entitled 'An act to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 604) for a period of 3 years and for other purposes,' has by concurrent resolution declared that it is necessary to supplement voluntary enlistments in the armed forces of the United States in order to maintain the strength thereof to the extent appropriated for by the Congress, or (2) if the Congress is not in session, unless the President of the United States declares that a national necessity exists, which requires an increase in the armed forces of the United States in order to maintain the strength thereof to the extent appropriated for by the Congress."

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. President, I call up an amendment which I have on the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 3. So much of section 10 (b) (4) of the Selective Service Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 604) as precedes the second proviso is hereby amended to read as follows: "(4) to appoint, and to fix, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1949, the compensation of such officers, agents, and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this title: Provided, That the compensation of employees of local boards and appeal boards may be fixed without regard to the Classification Act of 1949."

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. President, I have offered this amendment by direction of the Committee on Armed Services as a committee amendment. It provides that the clerks of local boards and appeal boards shall be excepted from the operation of the Classification Act of 1949.

When the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 was enacted, and when the Selective Service Act of 1948 was enacted, there was such a provision contained in each of the acts. There is no such provision in the pending bill, and the officers of the selective service have requested that this action be taken. It was considered at a meeting of the Committee on Armed Services this morning, and was unanimously endorsed.

The amendment would result in a saving in the operation of the selective service of $480,000 a year, and at the same time it would be a contribution to good morale in various localities throughout the United States.

Mr. President, the selective service boards serve without compensation. There are 3,745 of them in the United States, at least one in every county. They occupy quarters, as a rule, for which no rent is paid, and it has been the custom, under the preceding acts, to have their compensation fixed according to local standards, and not under the Classification Act.

A good deal of difficulty might occur as a result of having the part-time clerks of draft boards working in the same courthouses with clerks in the regular county offices and drawing two and three times as much compensation. In addition to that, the saving to the Government of $40,000 a month in the opinion of the committee, makes the amendment worthy of adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to call up my amendment lettered "D."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the amendment read in full?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not care to have read in full, but I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be printed.

Mr. RUSSELL's amendment was to insert, at the end of the bill, the following new sections:

SEC. 2. The Selective Service Act of 1948 is hereby amended by inserting after section 20 the following new section:

"SEC. 21. (a) Any person who registers as required by the terms of this title, and any person who hereafter voluntarily enlists in the armed forces of the United States, shall be afforded an opportunity to state in writing over his signature whether he has a preference to serve only in a unit all of the enlisted personnel of which are of his own race. Such opportunity shall be afforded at the time of registration in the case of those registering under the requirements of this title, or upon enlistment in the case of those who hereafter enlist in the armed forces of the United States. Any such person who expresses such preference shall thereafter be assigned only to units of a type consistent with his preference. The right to express and the effect of expressing any such preference shall be clearly explaind to each person who hereafter registers under this title, or enlists in the armed forces of the United States. As used in this section the term 'unit' means a group of persons serving in the armed forces who (1) share the same housing, messing, or sanitary facilities, or (2) participate jointly in recreational or social activities. For the purposes of this subsection an individual's race shall be determined in accordance with the more detailed classification as to race used by the Bureau of the Census in connection with the taking and preparation of statistics of the sixteenth census of the United States. Nothing in this subsection shall be deemed to preclude the assignment of any individual who belongs to a race comprising less than 1 percent of the population of the United States to units containing enlisted personnel of the most numerous race in the United States, if the Secretary of the armed force concerned has determined that it is impracticable to organize units all of the enlisted personnel of which are of such individual's race.

"(b) Any commissioned officer of the armed forces who knowingly and willfully denies to any person his right to express a preference upon enlistment as provided by subsection (a) or assigns any person after enlistment or induction to any unit in violation of the provisions of such subsection shall be guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman and shall be subject to trial and punishment under the appropriate article of war, article for the government of the Navy, or article of the Uniform Code of Military Justice."

SEC. 3. (a) The amendment made by section 2 of this act shall take effect only in accordance with the provisions of subsection (b) of this section.

(b) The Secretaries of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force, and the Director of Selective Service are authorized and directed to take such action as may be necessary to provide for the submission of the question, "Do you desire to serve with a unit composed only of persons of your own race?" to each person registered under the Selective Service Act of 1948 or enlisted into any of the armed forces of the United States during the 6-months period beginning with the first day of the first calendar month following the month in which this act is enacted. If a majority of the persons so registered or enlisted from each of 36 States answer such question in the affirmative, section 2 of this act shall become effective on the first day of the seventh calendar month following the month in which this act is enacted; and on and after such day it shall be applicable to persons enlisted or inducted into any of the armed forces of the United States during such 6-months period as well as to persons enlisted or inducted therein after such period. Unless a majority of the persons so registered or enlisted during such 6-months period from each of 36 States answer such question in the affirmative, such section 2 shall not become effective and shall be deemed to be repealed as of the first day of the seventh month following the month in which this act is enacted.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this is a substantial modification of the amendment which the committee approved, and I submit it in all earnestness to the sense of fair play and justice of the Members of the Senate.

The amendment provides that in the registration of those who are compelled to register under the act, and in receiving enlistments into the Army under the law, the question shall be propounded to each person as to whether or not he prefers to serve in a unit that is composed of members of his own race only.

For the first 6 months of the operation of the amendment, it allows no privilege to anyone to have the right, which I have regarded as fundamental, of expressing a choice, or receiving the benefit of a choice, but if after the end of 6 months the total number of men who have registered or who have enlisted from 36 States out of the 48 have expressed any choice, then they are to be assigned by their respective services according to their choice.

Mr. President, there seems to have been a feeling that the amendment which came before the Senate yesterday was seeking some special benefit for young men who happen to register or be inducted or to enlist from the Southern States. Eliminating the 11 Southern States, this amendment would require an affirmative statement by the young men registering from 25 States, the Southern States being eliminated, and if in 13 States less than a majority express a choice, it would not become operative.

I do not see how any Senator, if he was representing the views of the young men in his State in opposing the amendment yesterday, could object to this amendment. It requires the approval of a majority of the registrants in three-fourths of the States of the Union, the highest number known under our law for State approval. I submit in all seriousness, appealing to the sense of fairness and justice of the Senate toward the young men who will be inducted into the Army, if a majority of them in three-fourths of the States desire this privilege, which cannot interfere with military efficiency, which is not contrary to the recommendations of the military leaders of the Nation, they are entitled to have it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GILLETTE (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the able junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote I would vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCFARLAND (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. I am informed that if he were present and voting he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote I would vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. MURRAY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM]. If he were present and voting he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote I would vote "nay." I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. GRAHAM], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LEAHY] are absent on public business.

on official business, attending the sessions of the International Labor Organization at Geneva, Switzerland, as a delegate representing the United States.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]. If present and voting, the Senator from Mississippi would vote "yea," and the Senator from Nevada would vote "nay."

I announce further that if present and voting the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] would vote "nay."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] is absent on official business.

The senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] are absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] would each vote "nay."

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] are detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 45, as follows:

So Mr. RUSSELL'S amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, and for which I ask immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill, it is proposed to add the following section:

SEC. 2. The Selective Service Act of 1948 is hereby amended by inserting after section 20 the following new section:

"SEC. 21. (a) It is hereby declared to be a violation of this act, subject to the penalty provisions of section 12 of this act, without authority of law to: (1) commit or attempt to commit, or instigate, incite, organize, aid or abet the commission of violence upon the person of any member of the armed forces of the United States because of his race, color, national origin, ancestry, language or religion, or (2) exercise or attempt to exercise, by physical violence against the person, any power of correction or punishment over any member of the Armed Forces of the United States in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any criminal offense, with the purpose or consequence of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment by law of such member, or of imposing a punishment not authorized by law."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to make a few remarks in regard to the amendment.

The amendment is offered as an effort on the part of the Congress of the United States to guarantee the rights of personal security to members of the armed services. The amendment is offered in view of the background of the commission of some acts of violence upon persons in the Armed Forces of this country.

I fully recognize that there has been great improvement in the past years in regard to the protection of the civil rights of the members of the armed services; but it appears to me that any person who is brought into the armed services of this great Nation should be assured of equal treatment and should be assured of the full protection of the law.

I say that I recognize that the commission of acts of violence is at a minimum. However, any minimum is, within itself, a violation of honorable treatment.

In World War II there were occasional examples, in all parts of the country, and I emphasize the fact of all parts of the country, of members of the armed services being set upon by acts of violence for their point of view or for an expression of opinion, because of their race or their national origin.

I want it clearly understood that the amendment is not applied to any particular group; it is applied to all, who may in any way suffer ill treatment, illegal treatment, unlawful treatment, at the hands of self-appointed vigilantes who take it upon themselves to determine what should be the ordinary, normal conduct on the part of members of the armed services.

Mr. President, it had not been my intention to offer the amendment; I had hoped that yesterday the bill we are now debating would be passed.

I happen to believe that, for the security of our Nation, the continuation of selective service is a vital part of our national defense program.

However, I find after I had indicated that the amendments I had intended to propose—and I had others—would be withdrawn or withheld, that was not a salutary effort on my part; no other Senator seemed to feel that we should expedite the work on this measure.

Therefore, in view of the amendments which have been presented, I feel that it is my responsibility—in fact, I regard it a moral obligation—to submit the amendment to the Senate.

I want it thoroughly understood that I think the amendment is entirely proper and germane. Just as in 1948 the Senate saw fit to adopt an anti-poll-tax amendment to the Selective Service Act which was passed at that time, so I believe that the members of the Armed Forces should be protected by every law of the land; and I believe that if under any circumstances a member of the Armed Forces, wearing the uniform of the country, should be the victim of violence by any group, the Congress should take steps to see that provision is made for the punishment of such violence, so as to prevent it.

Such incidents did occur in respect to American Indians, Japanese-Americans, Chinese-Americans, and members of the Negro race.

I wish to be perfectly honest and frank, as I have said, in saying that such incidents are at a minimum. I am not saying that they constitute a national emergency. However, I say that when in peacetime we take a step such as the enactment of a selective-service law, and when we call upon the young men of the country to serve in the Armed Forces of the country, it is entirely proper and fitting that every protection of the law be made for their security and their personal well-being.

So, Mr. President, I call for the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish the Senator would state where such incidents have occurred.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am not prepared to present a tabulation of them. However, the National Defense Establishment has such a tabulation, and so does the Department of Justice.

Mr. MAYBANK. Did the Senator from Minnesota mention acts of violence committed upon Negroes in the armed services?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I said to the Senate that there was a very minimum amount of it; but I said that the instances which did occur were abominable; and I say that we should take every possible step to see to it that such things do not happen again.

Mr. MAYBANK. I should like to know where they have happened.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, the records are available.

It is not my desire to debate the amendment at length. Anyone who wishes to study the material can find it at the National Defense Establishment or at the Department of Justice, where the records are available.

As I have said, it was not my intention even to offer the amendment.

The point is this: Regardless of whether there has been even one act of violence, the fact is that this protection should be provided by the law. This protection is deserved by every citizen of the United States, regardless of service in the Armed Forces. It has always been my opinion that the guaranty provided by the amendment is a legal guaranty which certainly is within the proper jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States.

Instead of presenting, case by case, the instances to which I have referred, and which the Senator from South Carolina has asked me to state, let me say that I shall be more than happy to place a full documentation of them in the RECORD.

I repeat that the occurrence of any violence at all is not the issue. The issue is whether we should provide this guaranty. It is my opinion that we should.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAYBANK. If the Senator will permit, I should like to ask unanimous consent that I may make an observation, without causing the Senator from Minnesota to lose the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am more than happy to yield to the Senator under such circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, let me say that I believe in law and order, and I am opposed to violence as much as is the Senator from Minnesota.

However, as a member of the Armed Services Committee for the past several years, and as a member of the Military Affairs Committee all during the war, I wish to say that no such violations ever were called to the attention of our committee. Certainly I do not think we should suppose that there have been such violations in the Army camps or in the Navy bases, or wherever units of the Armed Forces may serve.

I asked the question on the supposition that charges of such violence had been made, and on the supposition that the Senator from Minnesota contended that such an amendment should be adopted because of the occurrence of such incidents; and in that connection I asked the Senator where such incidents occurred. Of course, I do not want a documentation of them, case by case.

However, I wish to point out that during the time in which I was a member of the Armed Services Committee, no such incidents were ever brought to our attention.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I simply wish to say that the President's Commission on Civil Rights recommended the very amendment which the junior Senator from Minnesota has submitted, as well as other amendments which I am not offering. Further than that, the American Civil Liberties Union has documented a full report. That is the commission of inquiry of the American Civil Liberties Union, under the authorship of Arthur Garfield Hayes, documented, with a full and complete tabulation, what it considered to be the abrogation of personal security rights on the part of the members of the armed services.

Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. MAYBANK addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether I was correct in understanding him to declare that such incidents had occurred in all parts of the country?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Indeed, yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And that he was not trying to single out any section of the country, but that he was, in general, trying to approach this matter with a very fair attitude? That was the general impression which I gathered from the statement by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is exactly correct, and I want to say again that I have no desire to precipitate a prolonged discussion. This issue can be voted on, just as was the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Georgia was very gracious and kindly in terms of considering the time of the Senate. He offered his amendment, and it was to be voted up or down. That is exactly what the Senator from Minnesota is here asking. I am not talking about Georgia or Arkansas or South Carolina or Minnesota. I am talking about a national policy, and I submit that that national policy is one which deserves the consideration of the Senate. Without prolonging the debate—because I want to expedite the business of the Senate—I submit that we can vote upon this amendment, and we have already made up our minds on this issue. I ask that the vote be taken, and that we decide this issue, once and for all, at this session of the Congress.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Did not the Senator say on the floor of the Senate yesterday that he would not offer this and other kindred amendments to this particular bill?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from Minnesota said on the floor yesterday that it was his desire to expedite the business of the Senate. The Senator from Minnesota had been informed that the amendment which was in the bill would be stricken by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Pennsylvania. It was my understanding that if that amendment were stricken, we would go on to consider this bill and finally vote upon it expeditiously. In fact, I had been informed earlier that we were going to have a night session in order to get a vote.

The Senator from Minnesota did say yesterday that in order to expedite the business of the Senate he would not offer his amendments. But I came back on the floor of the Senate today to find out that the vote which was taken on another amendment yesterday was to be reopened, literally speaking, and I find that my efforts to try to cooperate by not offering these amendments has not accomplished the purpose of expediting the business of the Senate. I have more amendments. I am not going to offer them unless I am pressed. I surely will, if I am pressed. The Senator from Minnesota offered this amendment simply as a matter, if the Senate please, of fulfilling an obligation he feels he owes to himself.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not true that, just as the Senator from Georgia tried to expedite the business of the Senate by seeking action on his amendment without a long accompanying speech, so the Senator from Minnesota has tried to expedite the business of the Senate by merely stating his amendment without a long accompanying speech, and that there is no purpose on the part of the Senator from Minnesota to stir up any passions on the floor of the Senate or to delay the business of the Senate?

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct. The Senator from Minnesota assured the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, a Senator whom he holds in the highest regard, that he would in no way delay the transaction of the business of the Senate. I assured him I wanted to offer this amendment, and that I would restrict my remarks, if not questioned and interrogated, to a very limited amount of time; and I was prepared to do that.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Has the fact that the Senate has this afternoon passed by unanimous consent and by unanimous vote a resolution extending the present Selective Service Act for 15 days, which measure has already now been adopted by similar action on the part of the House—has that matter affected the decision of the Senator from Minnesota not to offer this particular amendment, so that he has reconsidered and has now offered it here on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I can assure the Senator from Florida that that had no part whatever in the decision which the Senator from Minnesota made, nor do I think it fair and proper even to question the motives of the Senator from Minnesota. The fact is that the Senator from Minnesota said to a number of his colleagues yesterday that if there were no more amendments offered, such as the one offered by the Senator from Georgia, there would be no amendments offered by the Senator from Minnesota. But the fact is that an amendment was offered today, and the further fact is that in view of that I felt a moral obligation to fulfill what I considered to be a commitment to my conscience to offer the amendment which is now before the Senate.

Mr. HOLLAND and Mr. STENNIS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator has described in brief terms to the Senate the first numbered objective of his proposed amendment having to do with the committing, or attempting to commit, of violence, or the instigation, inciting, organizing, aiding, or abetting the commission of violence upon the person of any member of the Armed Forces of the United States, because of his race, color, national origin, ancestry, language, or religion. I think that that element of his amendment is perfectly clear. The Senator from Florida and several other Senators who have just had a bare opportunity to read his objective No. 2 are unable to understand it, and I should like to read it into the RECORD and then ask the Senator from Minnesota to describe it briefly for the RECORD.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HOLLAND. The second objective of the amendment, which is No. 2, reads that—

> It is hereby declared to be a violation of this act, subject to the penalty provisions of section 12 of this act, without authority of law to * * * (2) exercise or attempt to exercise, by physical violence against the person, any power of correction or punishment over any member of the Armed Forces of the United States in the custody of any peace officer or suspected of, charged with, or convicted of the commission of any criminal offense, with the purpose or consequence of preventing the apprehension or trial or punishment by law of such member, or of imposing a punishment not authorized by law.

Frankly, the Senator from Florida has not understood that provision and would appreciate its explanation at this time by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from Minnesota is familiar with that provision and is more than happy to oblige the Senator from Florida. The interpretation or explanation of that provision is simply that when anyone, a member of the armed services, has been duly apprehended by a peace officer, that is, by a lawful officer of the law—in other words an official of a municipality, a county, a State, or of the Federal Government—that particular member of the armed services shall not in any way be set upon by any group of self-appointed guardians of the law, to be wrested from the control of the peace officer; and if such does happen, that those who participate in such activity are subject to the penalties of section 12 of the Selective Service Act. In other words, there shall be no vigilante action anywhere on the part of civilians who are not lawfully clothed with a power to enforce the law, upon any member of the armed services as he is being apprehended by the law.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. In view of the importance of this bill, and the importance of the committee recommendations on the floor to Members who are not on the committee, may I ask the Senator: Did he present this amendment to the Armed Services Committee?

Mr. HUMPHREY. No; the Senator from Minnesota did not.

Mr. STENNIS. The committee has not had a chance to pass on this amendment, has it?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from Mississippi is entirely correct.

Mr. STENNIS. May I ask the Senator whether he is presenting the amendment at the request of any of the Army authorities or the Department of Defense?

Mr. HUMPHREY. No; the Senator is offering this amendment at the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. STENNIS. Did the naval authorities request such an amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I have not discussed it with the authorities of the Navy.

Mr. STENNIS. Did the authorities of the Air Force make any such request?

Mr. HUMPHREY. In order to expedite the business of the Senate, I may say that the Senator from Minnesota did not consult any member of the armed services.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. May I ask whether the Department of Justice has expressed any need for such an amendment, so far as the Senator knows?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from Minnesota will reply that the special board of inquiry established by the President of the United States, known as the President's Civil Rights Committee, did recommend such an amendment; but it has always been the intention of the Senator from Minnesota to offer such amendments as bills within themselves, on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. STENNIS. My question was, Does the Department of Justice recommend or express any desire for the adoption of this amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am sure the Department would, since it is committed to the program of the President of the United States. The program of the President is one which includes fair treatment to members of the armed services and one which supports the recommendations of his own board of inquiry, the Citizens' Committeee on Civil Rights, appointed by the President.

Mr. STENNIS. Does the Senator propose any amendment which would protect civilians from members of the armed services?

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from Minnesota did introduce a bill which is now pending before the Judiciary Committee which would have broad application to all persons. I may say that I believe the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] has a bill on the calendar, which has been approved by the Judiciary Committee, which would have the same sort of application.

Mr. STENNIS. My specific question was, Has the Senator proposed any amendment to the bill which would protect a person in civilian life from members of the armed services?

Mr. HUMPHREY. No; but the Senator from Minnesota would be happy to accept such an amendment on the part of the Senator from Mississippi to this amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Following up the inquiry of the very able Senator from Mississippi, for whom we all have a very high opinion, is it not true that assaults by members of the armed services upon civilians would be subject to military law, subject to court-martial, and that therefore it is not necessary for the Congress of the United States to legislate upon the question? An assault by civilians upon members of the armed services would not be subject to martial law, but would be subject to criminal law, and, therefore, would be a proper subject for the Congress to deal with by appropriate legislation.

Mr. HUMPHREY. As usual, the Senator from Illinois has stated the case very appropriately and with fact, clear observation, and good judgment, and it is exactly as the Senator from Illinois has said, that the rules of martial law give ample protection and provide very severe penalties for any infringement of the rules or regulations.

It is the intention of the Senator from Minnesota only to offer equal protection to the members of the armed services. As I have said, I doubt whether it will be something that will have to be applied in more than a few instances. The fact of the matter is that whether it needs to be applied or not, it is a fair and just rule of law, and it should be incorporated as a part of the basic public law of the Nation.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one short question?

Mr. HUMPHREY. I was about to yield to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], who has always been very courteous, polite, and cooperative with me, and I want to be equally so.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I preface my question by saying that no one is more desirous than I am of seeing equal protection of the law accorded to all persons. I also feel that instinctively the American people will respect the uniform of our defense organization. During a part of World War I, I was at Camp Lee. Labor battalions were stationed there, and there were as many as 10,000 colored soldiers there at one time. There were probably more colored soldiers at Camp Lee than at any other camp in the United States, because it was one of the largest camps in the United States.

During that entire period I did not know of a single instance—and many soldiers certainly went out into the surrounding territory—of any mistreatment of any colored soldier or of any trouble that grew out of the fact that a man was colored. Of course, Mr. President, any soldier or any sailor who fills up with liquor and becomes involved in a brawl with civilians will get himself into trouble, and the civilian will defend himself. But, in all fairness, I ask the distinguished Senator from Minnesota if he does not feel that through the enactment of this kind of an amendment we would be inviting friction and racial trouble where none now exists.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The Senator from Minnesota wants to make it quite clear that he has great respect for the judgment, attitudes, and pronouncements of the Senator from Virginia. I think the Senator knows that from our private conversations. It is my belief that it would not have that result. On March 23, 1949, General Hershey, National Selective Service chief, who surely knew something about the problems of selective service, according to a United Press dispatch made the following recommendation:

To make attacks on or the lynching of a draftee a Federal offense with severe penalties. This provision should apply to local police as well as to civilians.

I want to say that no man I can think of would know better what should be the protections that are needed than would the distinguished General Hershey.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Before the Senator leaves that point I want to ask him another question.

Mr. HUMPHREY. If there has been no violence, as has been pointed out—and there seems to be room for debate on the point—if there is no particular reason for it, what harm can it do to include it? At least, we should take the precautionary measure to see to it that men in the armed services are given every protection which the law of the land can possibly give them. We have been generous with reference to veterans' rights following the war. It seems to me that we should be generous with the rights of the members of the armed services during the period in which they are in the service.

There is no attempt on the part of the Senator from Minnesota to point the finger of scorn or of blame at anyone. There is only an attempt to see to it that the law is as protective as it can possibly be for men who will be called out of their normal peacetime activities and who are denied the right to live a normal peacetime civilian life, and that their rights will in no way be infringed upon in cases which may come up under this act, which may occur in any part of the United States or in any of its possessions or in any area under its jurisdiction.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Let us forget racial differences and apply it to the white soldiers in the Army. Suppose the white soldiers should construe the language to mean that when they leave camp they can do pretty much what they please and that no civilian or peace officer can exercise any powers of correction over them: Have we not then started trouble where no trouble before existed?

Mr. HUMPHREY. As a matter of fact, the Senator from Minnesota never did believe that brawling in the streets was a legal activity. The Senator from Minnesota has believed that if there was any action to be taken it should be taken by properly constituted peace officers. We should not write legislation providing that the way to control the peace of a community is by self-appointed vigilantes. All we ought to do is to see to it that the protections of law are guaranteed. We shall have to apply them very seldom, if ever. It is only a fair and proper effort to strengthen the law.

While I ask the support of every colleague on this issue, we are going to vote our convictions. There are honest differences of opinion, and I respect them. I have a profound and deep respect for the attitudes, the opinions, and the judgments of my colleagues from other parts of the Nation. Rather than to prolong the discussion, I ask that we now vote upon the issue, and the Senator from Minnesota will yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I move that the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota be laid on the table.

Mr. HUMPHREY and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado to lay on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to lay Mr. HUMPHREY'S amendment on the table was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment is open to further amendment.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 6826) was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to extend the Selective Service Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 604) for a period of 3 years, and for other purposes."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BYRD, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. SALTONSTALL conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be printed showing the Senate amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I should like to have a statement pertaining to the selective service bill printed in the RECORD, as a statement, followed by two articles, one entitled "In the Armed Forces," and the other "He Fought for Freedom."

There being no objection, the statement and articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUMPHREY

Mr. President, I rise to set the record straight. On the floor of the Senate yesterday a number of historically inaccurate statements were made in regard to the contributions which the Negroes have made to our American way of life and in our Armed Forces. I was not on the floor of the Senate when those remarks were made or I would have at that time risen from my seat.

It is fortunate that the Senate of the United States yesterday repudiated those who enforce segregation within the Armed Forces. I also say, Mr. President, that it is fortunate that the same undemocratic views which were repudiated yesterday did not prevail in the Continental Congress which guided our new Nation to independence. The historians record that while slavery prevailed in all 13 Colonies, Negroes from the north in the early days of the Revolutionary War fought side by side with their fellow white citizens in the patriotic army. As the war went on and the ranks of the army grew smaller, an increasing number of Negroes took the place of whites. In the army of George Washington there was an average of about 50 Negroes to each battalion. In 1781 Maryland raised 750 Negro soldiers to be incorporated with whites, and Virginia in the same year, to her honor, freed all Negroes who had served honorably in her army. It is interesting to note that every State, with the exception of Georgia and South Carolina, abolished the slave trade during the Revolutionary War. In fact, President Harry Laurens, of the Continental Congress, himself a citizen of South Carolina, founded a great but too little known southern tradition when he declared that he was not "one of those who dare trust in providence for defense and security of their own liberty while they enslaved thousands who are as well entitled to freedom as ourselves."

The record of American history is replete with testimony of the courage and valor on the part of Negro Americans. To distinguish between the races in America in going to war for the building of our great Nation is to provide a disservice to the very democratic institutions which provide the foundation for our existence. To say that any one race or any one people is responsible for the success and the growth of America is to provide the very roots which can ultimately destroy the freedom of which we are so proud and which we so cherish.

The Senate of the United States can be proud of the fact that yesterday it repudiated the racist theory raised in yesterday's debate. We are at a critical stage of the cold war between totalitarianism and democracy. We of the United States who profess the democratic faith seek allies so as to achieve the goal of a free world.

We seek those allies in a world in which two-thirds or more of the population is black or brown or yellow, and in which less than one-third are white. It is a world which looks upon our deeds rather than our words. In fact, they cannot hear our words for the sounds of our practices din loudly in their ears. The importance, therefore, of establishing democratic practices within our institutions and certainly within our Armed Forces cannot be overemphasized. For on these practices depends the future of democracy.

On March 16, 1950, Secretary of State Dean Acheson said:

"We cannot take the attitude that what we do at home has no relation to the rest of the world. Take, for instance, civil rights. There are minorities in our population who do not enjoy all the rights we enjoy. We are inclined to think of that as a domestic problem. I assure you it is not. There are vast populations of the world watching and drawing conclusions about our world attitude from our domestic attitude on civil rights."

To send segregated armies to all parts of the globe would be the most telling propaganda in the interests of totalitarian communism.

I do not raise this issue at this time so as to debate again the merits of an amendment already repudiated by the Senate. I raise it so that the records of the United States Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD can clearly indicate that the Senate of the United States does not accept any doctrines of racial superiority.

The world moves fast. Yet in 2½ years, the Congress of the United States has failed to adopt one single civil-rights measure out of nearly a score of legislative proposals recommended by the President of the United States in 1948. To date, none of the civil-rights measures recommended by the President have been adopted by the Congress. Yet those measures are necesasry to secure to all Americans those rights for which Jefferson believed the Government was established in these United States. In the past 2 years and more, great steps toward reaching the American ideal have been taken by the executive department of the Government, particularly within our Armed Forces. Our courts, the great conservator of our liberties, the cautious and tradition-preserving branch of our Government—the courts have struck resounding blows against discrimination in housing, against inequality of educational opportunity, against discrimination in transportation.

The executive branch of our Government and the judicial branch of our Government can be proud of the steps they have taken toward formulating and preserving the key to our basic democratic unity, strength, and hope.

Only here in the Senate have we been proven powerless to take up a single measure for the advancement of civil rights and for the curbing of acknowledged abuses against those rights so dearly bought by Americans of all kinds and races in the War for Independence and particularly in the most recent World War.

I now want to say a few words about the amendment which I had prepared to bring to the floor yesterday. I first ask that its text be printed at this point in the RECORD. My decision not to bring up that amendment was contingent upon my understanding that no further attempts would be made to interfere with the growing democratic pattern within the armed services. I made that decision because of the urgent need to enact selective-service legislation without further delay. I want to make it clear, however, that if additional efforts will be made to burden this bill with what I consider to be undemocratic objectives, I will with energy and determination bring my amendment to the floor of the Senate, with the full understanding that if we are to draft an army, it had best be a democratic army.

IN THE ARMED FORCES—ARMY AND NAVY EXPERIENCE IN WORLD WAR II AFFORDED CONVINCING LESSONS AS TO THE WASTE AND INEFFICIENCY OF SEGREGATION; HAVE WE LEARNED THEM?

(By Charles Dollard and Donald Young)

Both the Army and Navy during World War II suffered grossly from racialism, and sacrificed military efficiency in the use of Negro personnel through prejudice, stupidity, and indifference. Yet before the end of the war, both services were meeting racial problems at least as rationally as any urban community in the country. Their culpable failure was in not taking full advantage of their wartime opportunities to move faster toward racial democracy.

Segregation in the Armed Forces may not be understood unless it is appreciated that the services are no less a part of the national community than the church industry, the school, and other agencies. The rank and file of military and naval personnel share the attitudes, prejudices, and other qualities of their civilian relatives, friends, and neighbors. Commissioned personnel, however, includes a somewhat higher proportion of individuals with strong racial prejudice than does the civilian population, both because of an overrepresentation of officers of southern extraction and because of the class consciousness fostered by military tradition.

Nevertheless, it was evident during World War II that the War and Navy Departments and most of the top commanders did their utmost to assure subordination of prejudice to the requirements of military objectives in accordance with their judgment of the facts. The basic fact is that the Departments have neither invented the undemocratic notion that Negro and white citizens must be kept apart, nor have they stubbornly clung to it against the national will.

COMMUNITY INFLUENCES

The Army and Navy are not only part of the national community and therefore constrained to operate in reasonable harmony with national custom, tradition, and sense of propriety; it is also true that all their training and other operations on home territory must be conducted in cooperation with some specific town or city. Soldiers and sailors are a part of the civilian community in or near which their camp is located.

During the war, any sharp differences invariably produced unrest and sometimes serious trouble. This was true whether the camp was more or less liberal than the civilian community with regard to segregation.

It also has to be taken into account that a large proportion of white soldiers and sailors, like their civilian counterparts, were by earlier experience accustomed to relatively complete racial segregation. Under military regulations, commanding officers are responsible for the repose of their command and are necessarily given wide latitude in the formulation and enforcement of local regulations designed to insure the required peace and order. One may be as flatly and unalterably opposed to racial segregation as are the authors of this article and still wonder just how he would have accomplished his assignment if he had been given command of one of the mushrooming camps during World War II.

This comment on recent practices of segregation in the armed forces is decidely not an attempt to whitewash the authorities. They did not do all they could and should have done solely in the interests of military efficiency to move from segregation toward a more democratic structure. The point is that an effective program for the elimination of segregation in the armed forces must be based on a realistic understanding of the circumstances which have created and now support such discrimination.

The public, in general, tends to think of the Army and the Navy as autonomous agencies practically independent of the compulsions of tradition, legislation, politics, and public sentiment. Racial liberals, in particular, seem to have difficulty in realizing that the War and Navy Departments are not entirely free to enforce complete racial democracy as called for by the Constitution and the Selective Service Act. They know that the Federal Government has been, on many occasions, an effective spearhead in the battle against segregation. This has helped create an understandable expectation that the Military Establishments could, by mere fiat, operate without regard for color.

The fact is that neither the Army nor the Navy now or in any earlier time in our history has been in position to depart radically, in the treatment of its personnel, from civilian practices openly or tacitly supported by the bulk of the population. The Armed Forces are open to criticism not because they do not defy public opinion, but because of their tendency to lag far behind the possibilities for step-by-step racial integration in advance of ordinary civilian practice.

HOW SEGREGATION CAME

At the time of our American Revolution, there was no fixed policy requiring the segregation of Negro enlisted personnel in either the Army or the Navy. Comparatively few Negroes saw Army service until the Civil War, and up to that time they were rarely assigned to separate units. With the increase in the number of Negro soldiers following the Emancipation Proclamation and in subsequent years, the pattern of practically complete segregation became thoroughly established.

During the Revolution, there were relatively more Negroes in the Navy than in the Army. Negroes also played an important role as seamen in the War of 1812 and for some years thereafter. During the later wars of the nineteenth century, few Negroes served in the Navy, and it was not until World War II that large numbers were accepted for general service.

No clear policy as to segregation has developed in the Navy. This is, perhaps, partly because of the nature of naval operations and organization, as well as the absence of any traditional Negro units in the Navy other than the commissary and stewards groups, and partly because of the political pressure against initiating new patterns of segregation in 1942 when recruitment of Negroes for general service ratings began. The final result is that within the Naval Establishment today there may be found numerous and varied examples of relatively complete segregation and of relatively thorough integration.

Thus, by what might be called a series of historical accidents, segregation is now a well-fixed Army pattern; while in the Navy, popularly considered the more conservative of the two services, there is much greater latitude in the assignment of enlisted personnel.

Since the limitations of space do not permit exhaustive treatment of the problem of segregation in all the armed services, the balance of this article deals only with the Army situation—with which the authors are most familiar. It may be observed, in passing, that whether or not the several services are merged in a single department, future practices regarding segregation by race or color will in all probability tend to follow parallel lines; further, that despite its past record, the advance is apt to be paced by the Army.

WARTIME PATTERNS

World War II inductees allotted to the Army were classified by race, and the Negroes assigned to "special" (a favored Army euphemism) companies at induction centers where they were tested and classified separately, but according to uniform procedures. From the induction centers, they were shipped to replacement training camps or directly to units in training on separate requisitions. Most training camps had accommodations for both Negroes and whites, the normal procedure being to set off a separate area within the camp for Negro trainees who were always organized in segregated units.

The backbone of segregation in the Army is this business of separation by unit. While this practice remained unchanged at VE-day, the years 1941 to 1945 witnessed certain breaks in the general pattern. Of these, the official order banning segregation in theaters, post exchanges, service clubs, and buses operating within Army establishments was the most publicized and perhaps least important.

By the time the order was issued, each camp had its Harlem, complete with recreational facilities and, in the typical case, any Negro who wished to test the policy would have been required to go well out of his way to do so. Camps which had only one theater often solved the problem by designating sections of seats for different units, thus maintaining segregation while still technically conforming to regulations. A decision by the Assistant Secretary of War that the language of the antisegregation order should be construed to include officers' clubs was in practice almost totally disregarded.

On the plus side, the order forced improvement in transportation facilities for Negroes and expanded the provision for all types of recreation. More important, it reflected the honest determination of the War Department not to tolerate segregation beyond the limits of what is conceived to be the needs of military efficiency. But as far as the local pattern was concerned, the net effect in most instances was to change the designation of the service club in the colored area from Negro Service Club to Service Club No. 2.

Two other cracks in the pattern—one a change in War Department policy, the other an experiment sanctioned by a theater commander—while less publicized, were of much greater symbolic importance. The first was a decision to abandon segregation in all officers' candidate schools except those for Air Force flying personnel. At the peak, there were about a score of such integrated camps, each producing specialists for some one branch of the service—artillery, tank corps, infantry, and so on. White and Negro slept, ate, and trained together with a minimum of friction and with no incidents worthy of record.

The importance of this step was two-fold: It indicated that when factors of economy and efficiency were sufficiently obvious and compelling, the War Department was willing to frame and enforce a policy which enfeebled the whole principle of segregation. And it put on the record, for all time, evidence that integration could be accomplished without loss of military efficiency.

The second crack in the pattern resulted from a single experiment. On December 26, 1944, Lieutenant General John C. H. Lee issued an order, permitting Negro enlisted men in service units within his command to volunteer for duty as infantrymen, with the understanding that after the necessary training, they would be committed to front-line service with white companies. In spite of the fact that all volunteers had to sacrifice any ratings they held, about 2,500 took advantage of the opportunity and eventually saw combat duty. For the first time in the recent history of the Army, Negroes and whites operated as members of a single company.

THE ARMY'S CASE

The Army's basic defense of segregation is that it is necessary for efficiency because it is desired by a large majority of the white troops who comprise 90 percent of the personnel; and that abandonment of the policy would, at the least, adversely affect morale and, at the worst, result in riots and bloodshed. It is also argued by many in high places that Negroes prefer segregation as a pattern to which they are already accustomed by civilian experience.

Both these assumptions were subjected to study by the War Department early in 1943 through a sample survey conducted in camps throughout the country. Negro and white troops were asked, "Do you think Negro and white soldiers should be in separate outfits or should they be together in the same outfits?"

About nine-tenths of the white soldiers interviewed expressed preference for separate outfits. Among Negroes, 38 percent favored separation, 36 percent were for mixed outfits, and the balance either had no opinion or expressed no preference. Similar questions regarding separate recreational facilities drew only a slightly more liberal response from whites and not much greater sentiment for common facilities from Negroes.

At their face value, these data confirmed the official view that white sentiment was overwhelmingly in favor of separation and that a large minority of Negroes also preferred it. But two things should be noted.

First, few questions of Army policy are decided primarily on the basis of soldier preference. (The notable exception to this rule was the demobilization plan; the major criteria for priority of release from active duty were determined by a world-wide soldier vote.) In no institution in the world is the infallibility of higher authority more stoutly maintained than in the United States Army.

Second, the extent to which a verbal response predicts how the respondent will behave in the hypothetical situation which he has never experienced is the question which most troubles students of public opinion. Both points may be illustrated by citing another study conducted among white and Negro soldiers by the same research group. Here the attempt was to determine the soldier attitudes toward service in the Army.

The question asked was, If it were up to you to choose, do you think you could do more for your country as a soldier or as a worker in a war job? In their replies, 65 percent of the Negro soldiers and 47 percent of the white expressed a warm confidence that they would be immensely more useful in war jobs than in uniform—a sentiment which the Army wisely and necessarily accepted only as evidence that better orientation was needed. The draftees' preference for tweeds did not move them to revolt nor to mass desertion. Similarly, it is unlikely that their expressed preference for segregated outfits foreshadowed violent resistance to a carefully planned program of integration.

Segregation is an expensive luxury. No exact estimate of what it costs the Army to keep the Negro in his place can be reached. It is possible, however, to suggest some of the items which made up the total bill during the period of armament and war.

WHY SEGREGATION IS A LUXURY

In the first place, consider the cost of maintaining two sets of units in every branch of the service between which no exchange of personnel is permissible. White engineering battalions might be begging for replacements while Negro engineering units were at full strength. The reverse situation was equally possible. To anyone familiar with the personnel problems of large organizations, the arrangement will appear about as efficient as that of a railroad which arbitrarily ruled that its blond engineers could pilot north-bound trains only, while those with dark hair specialized in south-bound traffic.

In addition to under-use of personnel, segregation involved over-building and under-use of facilities. Fort Huachuca, the only large, all-black camp in the country, was used to capacity for only a portion of the war, yet its hospital and other overhead services had to be maintained continuously. In many camps, recreational facilities were duplicated on the separate but equal principle. During the war, it was not uncommon to see a handful of Negro officers monopolizing a regimental officers' mess, while four times as many white officers packed into a building of the same size a mile away—uncomfortable but safe from contamination.

Some of the costs of the system resulted from the Army's pious determination to be scrupulously fair and democratic, short of integration. This determination led it to commission some Negroes who would not have qualified as officers in a free-for-all competition. Many of these men ended up in replacement depots overseas. Too many of them made ineffective company officers and furnished ready ammunition to critics who were anxious to prove that Negroes lack any capacity for leadership. At the same time other Negroes, men qualified in specialties in which no Negro units had been organized, were not used effectively.

But the least measurable and the most serious cost of all was the decreased efficiency of Negro units. The constant reminder of their second-class citizenship which the whole business of segregation involves is deadening to the spirit and to initiative. The full measure of this cost may be found in the unhappy history of the Ninety-second Division.

The Ninety-second Division had a spotty combat record in Italy. A study of its performance and of the underlying reasons for its shortcomings was made by Truman Gibson, able Negro Assistant Secretary of War, who reported that elements in the division had exhibited a tendency on a number of occasions to melt away under fire. Lack of sufficient preparation and of well-trained leadership, the discouragements of Jim Crow in military service and in civilian life were among the causes for poor morale and performance which Mr. Gibson pointed to in his report.

Against these costs, of which the Army is perfectly aware, must be balanced some savings. Like many other Government departments, the Army relies for necessary legislation, including appropriations, on two committees normally dominated in Democratic administrations by southerners and heavily pervaded by southern attitudes on race. Any sudden move away from the principle of segregation probably would bring reprisals from this source and also divert an undue amount of the time of the War Department over this issue. It is difficult to question the Army's estimate of this as a saving, especially during the war years when the harrassed and undermanned Department maintained a daily schedule which few civil servants or officers were asked to match. Also reckoned as a saving, in Army terms, was the avoidance of strongly adverse criticism from the solid South, where a high proportion of the training camps were located.

THE SOLDIER'S BALANCE SHEET

From the standpoint of individual Negroes, segregation involves both profit and loss, although the debit entries far outweigh the credits. On the profit side, reference has already been made to the fact that some of the Negro soldiers selected for officer training were below the relatively rigorous standards set for whites. Their deficiencies were not, of course, inherent. They resulted from inadequate education and very limited opportunity to develop qualities of leadership as civilians.

Segregation also brought about a greater degree of up-grading for some enlisted men than otherwise would have obtained. As a matter of economy, the Army attempted to make maximum use of civilian training and experience in assigning all personnel. If this consideration had governed as completely as it would in a nonsegregated service, there would have been fewer Negroes in the technical services. But since they largely lacked the civilian experience for technical branches, Negroes would undoubtedly have been even more heavily concentrated than they were in quartermaster and transportation units—the labor battalions of earlier wars.

Hence, segregation, plus the Army policy of having at least token representation of Negroes in all branches of service meant that some Negroes were offered valuable training opportunities which otherwise would have been closed to them.

Finally, segregation undoubtedly served to reduce tension and uncertainty for Negroes accustomed to the pattern as civilians. It is this fact that explains why so large a minority of Negroes expressed a preference for separate outfits. Sudden transition from the kitchen to the parlor, whatever its beneficent effects on the ego, raises havoc with the digestive system. In actual fact, this transition might have been much less difficult than was feared, particularly if the Army had prefaced it with a solid educational program for both Negroes and whites. But the 38 percent of the Negroes who said they preferred separate outfits were reacting in terms of their own experience rather than in terms of the ideal situation.

On the debit side, the most important loss to the Negro was the frustration of the first-rate talent in the group. For every Negro officer who won his bars because of segregation, there was at least one whose progress up the ladder of promotion was halted or hindered by the system. Theoretically, promotion procedures were identical with those for whites. In practice, however, comparatively few Negroes rose above the rank of captain.

The very few of field-grade rank at the end of hostilities were for the most part men who had won their rank in a National Guard unit or as Reserve officers. Many Negro enlisted men, too, knew that their abilities were wasted under a scheme where color determined assignment.

Along with this frustration went a deepened sense of inferiority. The Army complained with some truth that Negro soldiers would not follow Negro officers in combat. Yet such a lack of confidence merely reflected the fact that, implicit in the Army's own practices, was the judgment that Negro and white officers are different species. What could be more blind than a policy which expects men to risk death behind an officer who from the start is labeled inferior? How can we ever expect Negroes to recognize leadership in their own ranks so long as that recognition is withheld by the white majority?

LOOKING AHEAD

At the close of World War II, the War Department acknowledged the urgent need to revise its policy regarding Negro troops. The first step was the appointment of a board of officers, with Lt. Gen. Alvin C. Gillem as chairman, to review wartime experience and plan for the efficient postwar utilization of Negro military manpower.

The report of this Board, issued as part of War Department Circular No. 124 on April 27, 1946, gives ground both for dismay and for hope. It recommends continuation of segregation by unit for the present—but for reasons of expediency rather than of racial doctrine. On the other hand, it moves significantly in the direction of integration: First, by providing for the elimination of Negro divisions; and second, by authorizing the organization of Negro units as part of larger, racially mixed units.

The statement in the appendix to this report (which one suspects was added under pressure), that the ultimate objective is for manpower to be utilized, in the event of another major war, in the Army without regard to antecedents or race, is a flat denial of a policy of military segregation.

The real test of the Army's devotion to its assigned tasks, without unnecessary temporizing with the forces of race prejudice, will be the thoroughness and speed with which its policies and operations are brought, into conformity with this announced goal.

IMPERATIVE PROGRAM

For reasons set forth earlier in this discussion, it is not practical to take the stand that all traces of segregation in the Army must immediately be removed. Nevertheless, it is both reasonable and imperative that a program for the swift and orderly elimination of all distinctions between Negro and white soldiers be developed and adopted in the shortest time possible.

The report of the Gillem board is most disappointing in its statement that "the Board cannot, and does not, attempt to visualize at this time, intermediate objectives," and that "between the first and ultimate objective, timely phasing may be interjected and adjustments made in accordance with conditions which may obtain at this undetermined date." Such planning merely for the immediate present is more likely to freeze existing practices than to lead to the achievement of the final objective defined in the report.

The postwar decision of the War Department to discontinue organization of Negro troops in divisions in favor of Negro regiments or groups, separate battalions or squadrons, and separate companies, troops, or batteries is a logical result of World War II experience, and suggests a rational line of future action. Obviously it soon should be followed by the abolition of Negro regiments through the association of Negro and white companies within regiments. The next step would be the abolition of Negro companies and the assignment of Negro and white platoons to the same company. Complete integration could, and probably would, follow almost automatically.

At each of these steps should come increasing restriction on the maximum degree of separate organization permissible, and there should be continuous encouragement of closer forms of integration as local and other conditions permit. Such a program would be entirely in accord with the general findings of the board of officers and also with their specific conclusion that experiment and other experiences of World War II indicate clearly that the most successful employment of Negro units occurred when they were employed as units closely associated with whites on similar tasks, and a greater degree of success was obtained when small Negro organizations were so employed. It may be criticized as a program of compromise or gradualism, but it could be initiated at once, and in all probability could be carried to its conclusion in something less than 15 years.

Those who hold the conviction that racial segregation in the Armed Forces of the United States must be quickly abolished can find encouragement in the fact that not only has the Army publicly taken the position that race is not a sound basis for military organization but that the Navy also has gone on record to the same effect. The Guide to the Command of Negro Naval Personnel, issued by the Bureau of Naval Personnel in 1944, underscores the statement that the Navy accepts no theories of racial differences in inborn ability, but expects that every man wearing its uniform be trained and used in accordance with his maximum individual capacity determined on the basis of individual performance.

It will take time to translate these official declarations into practice, but their very existence provides firm bases for needed corrective measures.

HE FOUGHT FOR FREEDOM—NOW THE NEGRO VETERAN, AFTER SERVICE IN EVERY THEATER, LAYS ASIDE HIS UNIFORM—WHAT ARE HIS POSTWAR EXPERIENCES AS VOTER, JOB SEEKER, STUDENT?

(By Charles G. Bolté)

After VJ-day, 1,200,000 Negro veterans began to come back home. Many of these men had been in far corners of the globe; all had been taken out of their familiar home setting. The elements of space and mobility—those insurmountable handicaps to the underprivilegd in modern industrial society—were no longer the barriers they once had been.

Many of the Negro servicemen had been in countries where no color line is drawn. They had been trained to use modern weapons of war. They had acquired skills as a group in greater abundance than any segment of their race ever had had before. On the statute books was a vital program in which they shared as veterans. It offered them education, vocational training, and a measure of security for a job-seeking period of as much as 52 weeks, through a $20-a-week readjustment allowance.

With these assets, the Negro veteran's integration into the fabric of national life might have been rapid and thorough. But he has encountered the durable prejudices of the color-caste system, more often than he has met the opportunities of democracy.

THE POLITICAL SCENE

On the political front, the 725,000 Negro veterans who returned to homes in the South were unquestionably of greater strategic importance than the similar number who returned to northern homes, where the Negro has long had the vote and played his part in politics. Among these southern Negroes there are thousands who possess maturity, education, and good judgment, who had gained what war and foreign service had to teach them of political understanding.

The so-called hot-headed type is relatively rare among the politically minded southern Negro veterans of this war. Political interest and maturity, as might be expected, seem to be found together.

By one of the ever-present ironies of the race problem, it is the mature, responsible Negro who gives the southern reactionary political machines the greatest concern. This kind of American veteran is the finest citizen, an asset to the life of any community. Yet it is precisely this veteran whom the majority of southern politicians seek to frustrate.

In the recent elections, nowhere was there total disfranchisement of the qualified Negro veteran. In North Carolina and Virginia, Southern States where disfranchisement in recent years has been on the wane, Negro veterans participated with other qualified voters without any important incidents.

In Georgia, the United States Supreme Court's rejection of the white primary law, coupled with Governor Arnall's refusal to circumvent the decision by legal subterfuge, resulted in open elections and the heaviest Negro vote in recent Georgia history. Of the 80,000 Negroes who went to the polls in that State, many thousands were veterans.

Even in Mississippi, where the strongest legal barriers and the most illiberal attitudes persist, though the number voting in November was negligible, Negro veterans have begun to make their influence felt in politics. Approximately 1,500 Negroes went to the polls in Mississippi. Observers of the voting reported that of this number the majority probably were veterans. They cast their ballots despite the effort of Senator Bilbo and his supporters to deny by threat of violence what the democratic process had awarded them by means of a clear-cut decision of the United States Supreme Court. The most important influence of Negro voters in Mississippi was negative, since their presence alone created for the reactionary politicians new difficulties in handling the race problem. Nonetheless, that influence was felt.

In addition to the ballots cast by Negroes, the 1946 campaign in Mississippi and throughout the South was notable for the fact that there were thousands of intelligent and courageous young Negro veterans who day by day were studying ways to make the white primary and the open election a reality in their own communities. In this they were not without allies among white southerners.

White individuals spoke out in their behalf on numerous occasions, and various church and educational groups espoused their cause.

With the Supreme Court ruling that the vote of a Negro henceforth would have as much weight as the vote of a white man, a number of politicians seemed prepared to accept—however reluctantly—the fact that the Negro would soon be a force in southern politics. In all this, the presence of the Negro veteran was perhaps decisive. If his military record had won him the hatred and fear of demagogues and reactionaries, that very record was beginning to win him white allies in the South.

The issue in this region is far from decided, and much of the struggle goes on below the surface. With the rise of such Fascist-minded groups as the Columbians and the Ku Klux Klan, the lines are being drawn, and the day approaches when true friends of the Negro will have to identify themselves openly or retreat into a mist of wordy ineffectiveness and hypocrisy.

In any event, the southern Negro veteran, like his northern comrade-in-arms, is in politics. He has not been offered the attractive political careers which are opening out before many white veterans. In the South he is a realist, and personal political ambitions do not concern him now.

The southern Negro wants a chance to vote no less than pay taxes, and to have his proportionate effect in nominating and electing candidates who will serve his interests as a citizen and as a former serviceman. He does not want special favors; but he does want an end to the whole oligarchic system, operated for the benefit of a small caste of powerful whites—a scheme of State government which has kept him more serf than citizen in the land where he was born, and for which he has fought.

THE RIGHT TO WORK

In the larger sense, of course, the employment outlook of the veteran, white or Negro, northern or southern, is determined by the economy as a whole. Many returned servicemen have a sobering realization that if this country's tremendous potential of production and prosperity is left to the mercy of profiteers, speculators, and the unregulated operation of the business cycle, their hopes for secure postwar jobs at fair wages are doomed to defeat. The veteran's loan from the Government, the home he bought, the business he established would be wiped out by a runaway inflation. And to many veterans, this seems to be the disturbing trend of the day.

In the narrower sense, the Negro does not share the common lot. The first concern of the serviceman when he puts aside his uniform is a job. And in the whole employment field, the Negro is the victim of discrimination, based solely on the color of his skin.

In the North the discrimination takes the familiar pattern of the job ceiling, which places a severe limit on all Negroes irrespective of personal qualifications, holding them to recognized types of Negroes' jobs in specific physical areas in the city's economic life. The northern Negro veteran, on the whole, cannot expect to get a job nearly as well paid as the one he might have secured had he possessed the same qualifications along with a white skin.

Except for civil-service work, race relations work, and a limited number of fields marginal to the main business currents—and not always wholly reputable—the Negro GI looks in vain for a clean, well-paid job in an attractive office downtown. The chances are, even in the North, that he has to accept less agreeable work under the job ceiling which white custom established long ago for the Negro.

Here and there a few talented and fortunate Negroes are breaking through the ceiling; but the the average Negro GI, like his white brother, is neither scholar nor artist but a plain American, limited in education and not very articulate. His only great good fortune is the fact that the country still maintains a high level of employment. If for any reason production lags—and many conservative economists are taking this prospect as a matter of course—the Negro will find that, veteran or not, he is still the last hired and first fired, and that the war really has made little difference in this respect.

In the South the Negro faces a situation even more serious than the job ceiling—the high walls of segregation and much definite hostility toward his progress. The situation inevitably makes many an individual dole minded.

JOBS

A typical report from Georgia (written by George S. Mitchell, of the Southern Regional Council) tells part of the story:

Jobs are aplenty, but at low pay and in unattractive work. In town after town Negro veterans are being offered old-line Negro jobs at twelve-, fifteen-, eighteen-, or twenty-odd dollars a week. A large proportion of the men can show prewar or Army experience at work better than common labor, and they are therefore entitled to draw the readjustment allowances. This is "rocking chair" money.

In Arkansas, 95 percent of the placements of Negroes made by the USES are in service and unskilled occupations.

The only Negro veterans who have come out of the rocking chair in large numbers are those who have found jobs in small service and repair businesses. Mr. Mitchell writes:

Once employed, they (Negro veterans) are usually liked and they usually stay. In my observation, the gain that is significant here is in comparatively new lines of work where patterns are not set. Small shops with one, two, or three employees are frequently better about using Negro veterans than big industries where racial lines are settled.

Weary of the old role of field hand and sharecropper, Negro veterans in large numbers are seeking vocational training chiefly in the radio, electrical, machine shop, and mechanics, carpentry, and woodworking trades. But in almost all communities they find doors to such training barred, by segregated schools for whites only, by the inadequacy of the on-the-job training available, or by discrimination by unions and employers in the apprentice-training program.

The record of job-training programs for Negro veterans is a record of failure. In a special survey, National Urban League representatives were unable to find any well-organized effort to secure on-the-job training or apprenticeship training for Negro veterans in any city. This survey included both the South and the North. The league estimated that in the South, out of 102,200 veterans receiving on-the-job training benefits, only 7,700 are Negroes. Although Negro veterans constitute about one-third of all southern veterans, only one-twelfth of them have a job-trainee position.

Apprentice training presents an even gloomier picture. Whereas on-the-job training is a new program which may be modified and improved, apprenticeship has been established for generations, and race lines are fixed, in the North as well as in the South. There is virtually no opportunity for Negro veterans in the electrical trades. Even in the carpenters, plasterers, and brickmasons trades, traditionally the most hospitable to Negro apprentices, the lowest ratio to be found is fifty white veterans to one Negro veteran. It is clear why Negroes in general have little faith in the trade-union movement.

HOUSING

All veterans agree that there is no place like home—if you have one. The situation is acute for white ex-servicemen and their families. It is worse for Negroes. In the South, for every four units being constructed for white veterans, only one is being built for Negro veterans—with the ratio of white to Negro veterans only 2 to 1.

Few Negro veterans have enough economic security to contemplate buying a house; most of them want to rent. Here, too, they are at a disadvantage. The average veteran can afford to pay $48 a month rental; the average Negro veteran cannot pay more than $25.

A survey recently made by the Bureau of the Census in Macon, Ga., underscores the plight of Negro veterans in securing decent housing. Whereas 33 percent of the white veterans in Macon are doubled up or inadequately housed, 44 percent of the Negro veterans are living with in-laws or in hovels. There are half again as many vacancies in white neighborhoods as in Negro.

The average Macon home sells for over $4,000, which many white veterans are able to pay. The average Negro veteran can afford to pay $2,100 for a new home. Obviously the average Negro veteran in Macon cannot buy a new house.

Over 30 percent of all Negro veterans are living in substandard, unhealthy rooms, as compared with 11 percent of the white veterans. Over 50 percent of all Negro veterans' dwellings lack one or more of the standard facilities—bath, toilet, running water, electric light. An army barracks, no matter how segregated, was never like this. But this is home for over 1,000 Negro veterans in Macon. And the situation in Harlem (in New York City), or in Roxbury, Mass., where similar studies were made, is not much better.

In education, one of the great fields of postwar opportunity for veterans, the Negro has considerably less chance than his white comrade in arms. Many of the technical trade schools of the North are neither equipped nor staffed to meet the needs of the former servicemen for specific job training. The segregated schools of the South are few in number and meager in equipment.

College openings for qualified Negro veterans are equally limited. The Southern Regional Council estimates that only 28,000 Negro veterans are receiving institutional training (secondary, vocational, college, and postgraduate) in the South, as compared with 129,000 white veterans.

EDUCATIONAL SURVEY

A significant survey of educational facilities available to Negro veterans in the South under the GI bill of rights was conducted last winter by a group of Methodist women leaders in Mississippi, in cooperation with George S. Mitchell of the Southern Regional Council. This group held a symposium at the Galloway Memorial Church in Jackson, Miss., at which educators (white and Negro), State officials, representatives of veterans' organizations, and of official veterans' agencies, discussed the provisions of GI legislation as these might be realistically applied in Mississippi.

One after another, the heads of the various small, segregated Negro colleges and trade schools told the same pathetic story of inability to provide the educational opportunities offered veterans in the Federal act. The heads of these institutions gave facts and figures showing the lack of physical equipment, teaching staff, financial support, and of capacity to expand to meet the need.

What their reports really told, indirectly, was the dismal failure of segregated education in Mississippi. The GI bill of rights, along with thousands of young veterans seeking a promised opportunity which cannot be fulfilled, only serves to point out a situation which has existed for generations.

The white officials of the State board of education and of the veterans' groups, chiefly the American Legion, which were given official advisory capacity by the Mississippi legislature, claim without exception a record of good faith and adequate assistance to the State's Negro veterans of this and of past wars. But against these claims are arrayed the facts not only pertaining to education, but to all the long list of public functions in which Mississippi and the other poorer Southern States trail far behind the Nation. Against the claims of diligent service by veterans' organizations, stand, too, the stories of many individual veterans who testify to the inaccuracy of such claims.

What exists in Mississippi exists to a large extent throughout the Southern States. For wherever the Negro veteran is condemned to second-class citizenship by the force of State laws, these statutes are in clear opposition to the benevolent intentions of the GI bill of rights, and to honest and fair administration of that act at the State level.

Transcending the traditional caste barriers of the South are Federal laws which give blanket benefits to all veterans in every part of the USA. But for the Negro veteran, particularly in the South, the laws are virtually nonexistent. With the sole exception of the National Housing Agency, the Federal agencies which administer these benefits have consistently ignored the needs of Negroes.

In a survey of Veterans' Administration offices in a group of southern cities, not one Negro was found on the staff, except in the scattered Negro colleges which have been selected as rehabilitation and counseling centers. How can the Negro veteran obtain a sympathetic hearing at a Veterans' Administration office when the staff that is serving him is Jim Crow?

In Tennessee and Louisiana where the United States Employment Service maintains separate offices for Negroes, there is not one Negro on the staff. Yet in these States 50 percent of the United States Employment Service job applicants are Negroes.

A Southern Regional Council report shows that "no Negroes are employed as contact representatives by the Veterans Employment Service in the Southern States, and very few are so employed in other sections of the country." In only one city are Negroes represented on the rating boards. Even New York City's 15 boards have not 1 Negro member.

WARTIME GAINS

In every major war the American Negro's cause has moved ahead. Yet each war has been followed by a reaction which, on some levels, wiped out all gains. The American Revolution saw the rise of a brisk, mercantile society and of a Jeffersonian outlook in the North. The combination removed the last vestiges of slavery in the Northern States. It was not long, however, before a booming cotton market brought the rapid growth of the plantation system, and rooted slavery in the South for another century.

Out of the Civil War the Negro gained emancipation, the dignity of military service, and—for a time—universal political suffrage. Yet the war was not over many years before the "new birth of freedom" gave way to a newer birth of discrimination and disfranchisement.

World War I gave the Negro his first real opportunity as a worker in northern industry. More than a million migrated to northern centers. The way of life there, though largely limited to the confines of racial slums, gave them greater stimulation and satisfaction than they had known in the peonage and cotton tenancy of the South. Yet the great wartime migration sharply increased the animosity of northern white workers; and the postwar years saw a number of serious riots, and the extension of the ghetto pattern in the North.

POSTWAR SETBACKS

The Negro veteran of World War II finds himself facing similar retrogressive forces. He is no longer strategic in the military balance. The end of the war has weakened the bargaining power of the Negro population as a whole. The groups who desire to restore wholesale segregation and prejudice are less hampered now than they were during the war.

Many a Negro veteran has found this peacetime America "too tough to take." For all the humiliations of segregated army service, many remembered that it was only in uniform that they ever knew anything approaching a decent standard of living—shelter, warm clothing, and decent food; Army medical service, insurance, and jobs, whatever the details, were better than the dirty, listless tasks offered most of them as civilians.

Despite the justified wartime outcry of the Negro community and of Negro servicemen, themselves, against the indignity of segregated Army life, Negro veterans poured back into the service in the first year after the war while the attractive reenlistment program was still open to them. Although they had constituted approximately 10 percent of the wartime Army, they accounted for 25 percent of the reenlistments in the first year after the war. (Reenlistments in the Navy were also high.) When this process began to change the traditional proportions in the Army, the War Department ended Negro reenlistment until such time as an acceptable white majority is restored.

The obvious interpretation of the high rate of Negro reenlistment is not that the individual soldier loves Jim Crow military life more, but Jim Crow civilian America less. Properly understood, these reenlistment figures are a penetrating comment on America's homecoming welcome to the Negro serviceman.

While many Americans are aware of this fact and eager to speed the integration of the Negro into the Nation's life, the Negro veteran soon learned, ironically enough, that these individuals are apt to be found among teachers, intellectuals, writers, and progressive political groups, rather than among former servicemen like himself in the old-line veterans' organizations. Though he may be well aware that he cannot buck postwar race reaction singlehandedly, and though instinctively he may seek to join forces with the men who have served in uniform, as he has, he faces the hard fact that the older and politically powerful veterans' organizations are not interested in his case.

The general practices of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans—the big three—run to segregated posts for Negroes and to a second-rate type of membership for them which is a rough parallel of the Negro's second-rate citizenship.

Undoubtedly, there are veterans of the more recent wars in these older organizations who oppose such practices. But they are a minority and generally without power in the policy-making councils. Leadership still rests with the older, prosperous, established, and often reactionary, veterans of earlier wars. Numerous public statements made by these leaders to justify their Jim Crow practices expose their basic lack of sympathy with the cause of Negro integration.

In general the Jim Crow posts are justified on the dubious grounds that Negro veterans want things that way. To the Negro veteran, such statements spell only hostility and the desire to perpetuate the very segregation patterns which are the basis of his insecure position in all fields.

The alternatives to Jim Crow membership are not numerous. Negro veterans in remote sections in the South organized local groups, but through lack of national contacts and political status in the community, the effectiveness of their organizations is very limited. On a national scale the United Negro and Allied Veterans got underway, affirming a biracial make-up, but actually nearly all Negro.

The American Veterans Committee welcomes Negro veterans to full and unqualified membership and seeks at every opportunity to represent their interests within the larger framework of the organization's policy: Citizens first, veterans second. Negro membership constitutes a sizable proportion of the AVC.

There are two general conclusions, it seems to me, that can be drawn from the experiences of America's Negro veterans in the first year and a half following the end of hostilities. The first is that these Negroes on the whole represented a class of men who by virtue of the training, discipline, sacrifices, and maturing experiences of Army life, had been prepared for integration into the Nation's life. The second is that the Nation has largely failed to grasp this opportunity and in too many instances has regarded it rather as a threat.

The Negro has shared appreciably in the GI bill of rights and in the specific Federal legislation which could not possibly have been written to embrace color-caste segregation. But membership in the "52–20 club" (52 weeks on the $20 allowance) is not primarily what the Negro asks of America, any more than it is what the white veterans ask. He wants to be a man, a citizen, a human being, an equal.

In order to channel this eagerness, which certainly could be made the basis for useful and creative citizenship and for the growth of well-rounded individuals, America must find a way to accept the entire Negro minority into its life. Segregation cannot be compartmentalized.

In any discussion of race relations one hears the statement of certain confused and timid people that "the Negro should be patient," and "the Negro only hurts his cause by agitation." This is precisely the way to turn hope into hatred, and a dark-complexioned veteran-citizen into a malcontent. The inevitable human response to hypocrisy is disgust.

A century ago a former slave, Frederick Douglass, speaking on Independence Day, voiced this response in unforgettable words:

What to the American Negro is your Fourth of July? I answer: A day that reveals to him more than all other days in the year, the gross injustice and cruelty of which he is the constant victim. To him your celebration is a sham; your boasted liberty an unholy license; your national greatness, swelling vanity; your sounds of rejoicing are empty and heartless; your denunciation of tyrants, brass-fronted impudence; your shouts of liberty and equality, hollow mockery; your prayers and hymns, your sermons and thanksgiving with all your religious parade and solemnity are to him mere bombast, grand deception, impiety and hypocrisy—a thin veil to cover up crimes which would disgrace a nation of savages.

America cannot afford to impose such despair upon its Negro veterans. But when the lynching of a Negro ex-sailor in Louisiana or the wanton blinding of an ex-soldier in South Carolina go so callously unpunished, the bitterness of Frederick Douglass seethes in the heart of every Negro veteran who can think and feel.

Something of the same reaction darkens the spirit of the northern veteran who finds he must confine his work and life to the deary opportunities of a ghetto world. The Nation cannot afford to lose these men.

Segregation is nowhere more costly to democracy than among the segregated veterans who fought for freedom.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190) extending the period of effectiveness of the Selective Service Act of 1948, 15 days.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5943) to provide for the erection of a monument at the grave of Constantino Brumidi.

EXTENSION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA EMERGENCY RENT CONTROL ACT

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider calendar 1857, Senate bill 3776, to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia emergency rent act, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, an amendment has been proposed to the bill by the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN].

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield so that I may address an inquiry to the acting majority leader?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Nebraska may proceed.

Mr. WHERRY. May I ask the acting majority leader if it is his intention to try to finish consideration of the District of Columbia rent bill ths evening?

Mr. MYERS. There is little, if any, objection to the bill, as I understand, and it will take only a short time to finish its consideration.

Mr. WHERRY. In the event that consideration of the bill is completed this evening, does the acting majority leader wish to state now what the Senate will next take up?

Mr. MYERS. The next legislation to be considered by the Senate will be calendar No. 1856, S. 3809, to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I note that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr ELLENDER] is present, and I merely wish to inform the minority leader that I understand the Senator from Louisiana expects to bring up the conference report on the so-called Commodity Credit Corporation bill. I understand he desires to bring it up tomorrow.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If that is correct, its consideration will take some time, particularly on my amendment, which was emasculated in conference.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from Washington for the observation. If we were to consider the military aid bill tomorrow, I should like to have a conference with my colleagues, so as to be prepared to consider it. However, if there is to be debate on a privileged matter tomorrow, we shall proceed along that line and see about it later.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] has submitted an amendment which is accepted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been offered yet.

Mr. NEELY. It is my hope that the Senator will offer it at once.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are two amendments at the desk sent forward by the Senator from Washington. One is printed, and the other is typewritten.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I ask to call up the amendment which was printed as of yesterday in an effort to clear the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, it is proposed to strike out lines 3 to 8, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That section 1 (b) of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended (D. C. Code, 1940 edition, sec. 45–1601 (b)), is hereby amended (a) by striking out "June 30, 1950" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1950, unless the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, prior to December 31, 1950, shall declare by resolution that a shortage continues in one or more classes of housing accommodations which requires the continuance of the provisions of this act with respect to such class or classes of housing accommodations, in which event the provisions of this act and all regulations, orders, and requirements thereunder shall continue in force and effect with respect to such class or classes of housing accommodations until June 30, 1951," and (b) by adding at the end thereof, the following sentence: "The term 'classes of housing accommodations' as used in this section shall be deemed to be without limitation and may include categories of housing accommodations by location or geographical area, by monetary rental, or by types."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is this the amendment which is agreeable to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. NEELY. Yes, that is the one that is acceptable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in my opinion, the pending bill is now in every important particular identical with the general control extension bill just passed by the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I ask to have called up an amendment which the junior Senator from Washington sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 1, beginning with line 9, it is proposed to strike out through line 14, page 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 2 of such act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) After June 30, 1950, the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceilings or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for any furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations which are rented as rooms without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms nor rooms in hotels used for occupancy by persons other than transients, that is as living quarters for residents on a permanent basis), and when and for such period as all of the housing accommodations in any building consists of rooms rented as furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms) the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceilings or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for, any such building."

And to insert:

SEC. 2. Section 2 of such act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs and subsections:

"(5) (a) After June 30, 1950, the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceiling or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for any furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations which are rented as rooms without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms), and when and for such period as all of the housing accommodations in any building consists of rooms rented as furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms) the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceilings or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for any such building.

"(b) After June 30, 1950, self-contained family units (as defined by regulations issued by the Administrator) located in hotels shall continue to be housing accommodations subject to maximum rent ceiling and minimum service standards unless the Administrator issues an order decontrolling them, or any of them, which he shall issue if he finds that such hotel is primarily engaged in furnishing accommodations for transients."

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington would like to say to the Senator from West Virginia, and to other Senators, that this amendment has two purposes. Its first purpose is to decontrol nonhousekeeping rooms in hotels. Its second purpose would be to give to the District Rent Administrator the authority, after June 30, 1950, to decontrol multiple nonhousekeeping rooms, if that is his desire. Such an authority the present law does not give to him.

Mr. President, I think that within several minutes the junior Senator from Washington can rationalize, if that is the proper word, his reasons for offering this amendment, in the hope that it will be accepted.

Under date of April 18, 1950, Mr. Robert F. Cogswell, the local Rent Administrator, the one man above all others to whom we look for advice concerning rent control, and elimination of those controls, wrote to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and in part said:

I stated that when I thought the necessity for rent control no longer existed I would not hesitate to say so. This being the case, I have reached the conclusion that the supply and demand of furnished nonhousekeeping rooms rented by the month or by the week has reached a point where normal supply and demand is almost in balance. They should therefore—be freed from control after June 30, 1950.

Said Mr. Cogswell in April—

The Senate bill has attached to it a committee report. That report, which is presently on the desk of every Senator, says this, referring to the pending business:

The bill makes two changes in the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act. The first removes controls from furnished nonhousekeeping rooms.

That is a clear declaration, within the report submitted to the Senate of the United States by the Committee on the District of Columbia, that nonhousekeeping rooms have been, under the terms of the legislation, decontrolled.

I suggest, without criticism implied or direct, that the bill which the committee has reported continues controls over nonhousekeeping rooms within the District of Columbia.

It seems obvious, therefore, first, that it was the intention of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia to decontrol nonhousekeeping rooms, and I presume completely unintentionally, as provided within the recommended law, the extension of controls over nonhousekeeping rooms.

In order to check the present status of Mr. Cogswell's thinking on this question, I had him called last night. He said that a nonhousekeeping room may be in a private dwelling, it may be in a boarding house, it may be in a hotel, and it was Mr. Cogswell's recommendation to the Commissioners of the District in April, and it continues to be his intention and recommendation this afternoon, that such controls over nonhousekeeping rooms within the District of Columbia should be eliminated in their entirety.

The Senator from Washington, therefore, on the basis of the contradiction confronting us in the Senate as between the committee report, which says we have decontrolled such rooms, and the committee bill, which says we are continuing to control nonhousekeeping rooms, has done the one and only obvious and reasonable and fair thing, he has sent to the desk an amendment, which, if agreed to by the Senate, will carry out the wish of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, and remove controls from nonhousekeeping rooms within the District.

Mr. President, with this explanation, I would ask the distinguished Senator from West Virginia whether he believes, as the Senator from Washington believes, that the latter is on sound ground, and that the amendment should be agreed to without further discussion. May I inquire of the Senator from West Virginia his wishes in this matter?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I cannot accept that amendment.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington would be extremely pleased were the Senator from West Virginia to explain to the Senate why he wants to retain a restriction over private property in the District of Columbia when his own committee's report said, "We have decontrolled such property"?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia does not want the bill to differ from the report in the slightest degree. The latter says:

> The bill makes two changes in the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act. The first removes controls from furnished nonhousekeeping rooms.

That is precisely what the bill proposes. But the Senator's amendment provides for decontrol of apartments and apparently that is the consummation which the Senator seeks to achieve.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from Washington, sir, is doing no such thing. The Senator is arguing for the decontrol of a furnished nonhousekeeping room, which may be such a facility in a private home, in a boarding house, or in a hotel. The Committee on the District of Columbia has eliminated such controls from boarding houses and private homes, and is encouraging the retention of such controls over furnished nonhousekeeping rooms in hotels.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, last Tuesday, the Committee on the District of Columbia considered, at length, this amendment, which was offered by the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. FREAR]. It was voted down by an overwhelming majority. In fact, the Senator from Delaware, to the best of my recollection, was the only member of the committee who voted for it. The committee, almost unanimously rejected the very proposal for which the Senator is contending. It is my hope that the Senate will confirm the committee's action.

Mr. CAIN. Will the Senator from West Virgina agree with the Senator from Washington that the committee report submitted by his committee says one thing and the bill submitted and offered by his committee says another thing? If he will make such an agreement, how are we to reconcile that very grievous contradiction?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in my opinion there is absolute harmony between the report and the bill.

Mr. CAIN. The Senator from West Virgina would not resist a determination on the part of the Senator from Washington to probe this matter a little further, would he?

Mr. NEELY. Certainly not.

Mr. CAIN. I want to say, Mr. President, to every Senator in this body that the committee report makes a statement which ought to be restated a thousand times. We have got to reconcile an obvious discrepancy and contradiction. The report says:

> The bill makes two changes in the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act. The first removes controls from furnished nonhousekeeping rooms.

Mr. President and Members of the Senate, the bill continues controls over furnished nonhousekeeping rooms. I ask, in heaven's name, what do we expect the average citizen living in the District of Columbia to believe? It is a common practice, is it not, a custom followed by almost everyone, not to read a bill, but to read a report, which is construed to be an explanation of a bill. There is no citizen within the District of Columbia who can read the District of Columbia Committee's report without being absolutely satisfied that after June 30, 1950, furnished nonhousekeeping rooms will no longer be imposed upon by a rent-control law.

The Senator from Washington has had no desire to obstruct the passage of and continuing of the rent law for the District of Columbia. During the debate on the national question the Senator from Washington said he would vote against it, and would speak 30 minutes or less in opposition to it. But the Senator from Washington has the same eyes as every other Senator. The Senator from Washington can understand the English language, as can every other Senator. When the Senator from Washington reads a committee's report which says that something has been done which a bill reported by the same committee says is not to be done, somebody, before action is taken on the bill, must either admit that a serious, if unintentional, mistake was made by whoever wrote the report, or must say the report meant what it said, and therefore an amendment to the bill is properly and justifiably in order.

Mr. President, I do not know how we are to reconcile this difference, but I think at the moment I shall exercise my privilege under the agreement which was reached during discussion of the national rent-control bill, between the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Washington. That agreement was that if the bill to be recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia of either House or Senate was very comparable or identical to the national bill which was approved by Congress, the Senator from Washington would speak not to exceed 30 minutes in opposition to the extension of rent controls in the District. In a minute the Senator from Washington will exercise that 30 minutes right under the agreement, and then he will be willing to continue to fight on the merits of what no one yet has told him is not what it seems to be—an obvious contradiction in terms and purposes as between a committee report and a bill.

Before the Senator from Washington begins to speak in his own right for 30 minutes he wants to call to the attention of the Senator that there is no city today in the United States, no single city in the United States, large or small, with the exception on the one hand of New York City, and on the other hand of Chicago, that continues controls on furnished nonhousekeeping rooms. The only reason that New York continues to have such controls is that New York, by an act of its legislature, I think in the early part of May, designed and approved a State rent-control law. That was New York State's business. The only reason the city of Chicago, in what was once the sovereign State of Illinois, continues to have controls over furnished nonhousekeeping rooms, is that a year ago the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] prevailed upon the Senate to accept an amendment which would continue such controls on furnished nonhousekeeping rooms in American cities having a population of two and a half million or more.

Every other city in the United States has had its furnished nonhousekeeping rooms in hotels decontrolled by an act of our American Congress. Now we are confronted with a committee report which says that here in the District we are going to decontrol furnished nonhousekeeping rooms, and joined with it is a bill which says, "We are going to continue such controls."

The Senator from West Virginia a few minutes ago said that this matter had been before his committee, and that the committee turned it down; that the committee thought it would be best for the people in the District to continue such controls. If that is so, why does not the report say so, and what consideration are we going to give to it, if we are serious in our joint desires, as often expressed, to rid this country and Washington, D. C., of rent controls, be they either local, State or Federal? Are we in the District willing to give no consideration to Mr. Robert Cogswell, whose sole and prime function at the present time, and for recent years, has been to administer the rent control within the District of Columbia, and to make recommendations for the release of controls? Robert Cogswell in April wrote seriously, over his signature, to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and said, "I recommend that from the 30th day of June there shall no longer be a single furnished nonhousekeeping room under rent controls in the District of Columbia."

The first point which can be established is that Mr. Cogswell in this instance is a pure figurehead. Someone pays him money to make his recommendations. Since I have been in the Congress, the Congress has said that every time it has a chance and an opportunity to decontrol property belonging to human beings, it will do so.

Now Mr. Cogswell, who is paid to make such recommendations, recommends to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the decontrol of such rental facilities in the city of Washington, D. C.; but no one has said as yet that anyone in authority has paid any attention to him.

Small wonder it is, Mr. President, that there are some Senators, I hope, aside from myself, who will not permit a vote on this issue until we get a reconcilement between a report from a committee which says one thing and a bill on the same subject, from the same committee, which says quite another thing.

Perhaps again this is an instance in which we are going to give as little consideration to the needs and wishes of the local citizens of this great capital of the world as we have given in the past.

Talk sometimes serves a very legitimate purpose, Mr. President. There are a number of Senators who neither have had a chance to read the District of Columbia's committee's bill nor have had a chance to read its report. I am suggesting for the RECORD, in order that every Senator can read it, that if Senators believe the committee report, they will accept an amendment to correct a mistake which has been made in the committee bill.

If some Senators wish to think that rent controls on furnished, nonhousekeeping rooms should be continued in the District of Columbia, despite the fact that Robert Cogswell, the District of Columbia Rent Administrator, has recommended that they be abolished, then such Senators must agree with me that some reconcilement must be made between the committee report and the committee bill.

Let us have some Senators from the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate rise and admit that whoever wrote the committee report either did not understand the question or had no appreciation of the English language or did not have the foggiest idea of what he was doing.

Mr. President, I will keep a cautious and careful and accurate eye on the clock, and will consume the 30 minutes which I had intended to take in speaking in opposition to continuation of rent controls in the District of Columbia, on the assumption that that would have been my only contribution, and no other.

After this declaration of faith and logic, at least, it is logic from my point of view, has been given, I will again raise the question of how to reconcile a committee report and a committee bill which manifest within themselves all the difference that exists between day and night.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington wishes to provide, as best he can, for his colleagues, and in only a very few minutes, some factual material relative to the rental housing situation in our Nation's Capital, Washington, D. C., and its metropolitan area. The bill before us, S. 3776, proposes a further extension of a wartime emergency system of rent controls imposed on this community almost 10 long years ago. The bill before us comes to the Senate from the District Committee without benefit of committee hearings. The accompanying report is very meager; and not one of the bill's proponents, either on or off the committee, is prepared to offer any serious factual justification for its passage.

Mr. President, if the administration leadership feels that this legislation is sufficiently important—and the majority leadership obviously believes it is—to provide the bill time for debate on the floor in its own right, rather than leave the bill on the Consent Calendar, then surely there should be among us those—and I hope there will be more than just one Senator—who should seriously provide solid facts, figures, and logic in support of, or in opposition to, the proposed legislation extending rent controls within the District of Columbia.

The junior Senator from Washington is seriously of the belief that the decontrol of rents in Washington, D. C., would bring to this community every beneficial result that has been manifested in the many American cities throughout the Nation already decontrolled. What are those benefits? They are as follows:

An accelerated production of housing, both sale and rental.

An immediate offering of housing for rent, previously held for sale only.

An immediate return to the market of locked-up rental units, units whose owners refused to continue to rent for as long a time as those units were subjected to controls.

A redistribution of the available inventory of rental shelter, too large a proportion of which is presently being overbought because of its frozen, low rental price.

A tremendous volume of redecorating, remodeling, repair, and refurnishing. Deferred maintenance caused by insufficient rental income will produce employment in every segment of the building trades and allied service industries.

An immediate reduction in the number of eviction actions.

A reestablishment of free and fair bargaining between tenant and owner.

These, Mr. President, are but a few of the healthy, immediate results obtained in every large metropolitan community following the decontrol of rents. These economic realities occurred in Miami, Salt Lake City, Dallas, Spokane, and Milwaukee, to name but a few.

Will these same desirable aids to a greater availability of shelter be attained in Washington, D. C.? Is there any demonstrable condition here in the District that would prevent the attainment of results similar to those which have been obtained in every other American city now decontrolled? I think not. On the contrary, there prevail here in the District conditions which will guarantee and will make all the more certain that the above enumerated good results will come to pass in the District of Columbia if controls are removed in the District.

Mr. President, I wish to say here that as a result of my opposition of the national rent-control law, it could be construed that I am an owner of property in which tenants live. That is quite true; I own a home on the shores of what is known as American Lake, 3,000 miles away, and I have rented it on a long-term lease. Like many a man in this body, I am not able to support a home in Washington, D. C., and a home in my own State—in my case, a home outside of Tacoma, Wash. However, in speaking against the District of Columbia rent-control bill, I speak as a renter, I speak as a tenant, I speak as an American citizen who thinks that the owner of the facility in which I so happily live in our Nation's Capital has some rights which I shall help to protect as best I can.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. WHERRY. Let me ask whether the distinguished Senator from Washington has been informed that the chairman of the committee will be agreeable to taking the Senator's amendment to conference.

Mr. CAIN. I must say that I have not been so informed. Is the Senator from Nebraska in an official sense so informing me?

Mr. WHERRY. I am asking whether the Senator from Washington has been so informed. I ask that question because I understood that was a possibility, and I wonder whether the Senator from Washington has received that information.

Mr. CAIN. Of course I have been busy with this problem; at any rate, I have not received such information.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, to permit me to reply to the inquiry of the distinguished minority leader?

Mr. CAIN. Yes; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if it will assure a vote on the bill this evening, I shall unwillingly accept the amendment in the hope that it will eventually be rejected by the House, or the conferees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As many as favor the amendment——

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Chair permit me—and, I think, encourage me—to respond to the Senator from West Virginia?

I am not much concerned with the fact that the Senator from West Virginia says he is willing to take the amendment to conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair might suggest to both Senators that the bill is a Senate bill. If the House agrees to the bill in the form in which it is passed by the Senate, there will not be a conference. If the House disagrees, there will be a conference.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I only wish to establish this as being so, in order that we may anticipate the requirements of the future: On the basis only of what I have pointed out to the Senate of the United States—namely, a discrepancy, a contradiction, a serious mistake, Mr. President, as between a committee bill, on the one hand, and a committee report, on the other hand—if by way of argument the amendment was accepted and the bill, as thus amended, went to conference, and if the House conferees permitted themselves to accept such carelessness—and I speak respectfully—and rejected the amendment, then I would have no reasonable, logical, decent, or American course of action to pursue other than to be as strongly against acceptance of the conference report as I am willing to be in trying to resolve the merits of this question on their own feet, standing here tonight, tomorrow, or some other time.

If the Senator from West Virginia wishes to get a vote on this amendment, and if the amendment is adopted, and if the Senator from West Virginia finds it necessary to take the bill to conference, then I merely wanted to know that when the conference report comes back, if it disregards the advice of Mr. Cogswell and continues the premise that something is done in the Senate bill which the Senate committee report says is not done, I would do everything I could to get Senators to agree that we had better reconcile what obviously is a mistake—I have never said it was an intentional mistake—before we take any positive action. Whatever the Senator from West Virginia wishes to do will be I think acceptable to the junior Senator from Washington.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, if it is necessary for me to sell my parliamentary soul in order to prevail upon the Senator from Washington to permit us to vote on the bill tonight—the price is much higher than I am willing to pay. If my only choice is between the sacrifice of what I conceive to be proper protection for the people of the District of Columbia and a prolonged filibuster by the Senator from Washington, I shall unhesitatingly choose the latter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of my statement be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the remainder of the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Prior to 1940, there were available for occupancy in metropolitan Washington 253,000 units of living space. Since 1940, through 1949, there have been added 169,000 units of additional shelter. These additional units created since 1940 are sufficient to house in excess of 500,000 persons. Breaking down these additional 169,000 units of space, we find in Fairfax County, Va., 17,000 new units of space; Arlington County, 25,000 new units; in Alexandria, 10,000 new units; in Montgomery County, Md., 24,000 additional units; Prince George County, 32,000 new units; and in Washington, D. C., 61,000 new units. These figures just given you are to December 31, 1949. They do not reflect some 7,000 or 8,000 housing units that have been started and now under construction since January 1, 1950, and which will soon be ready for occupancy. No other city or metropolitan area in the United States has had such a relative increase of new units constructed to units available prior to the war.

Census figures and BLS figures prove conclusively, and none to my knowledge has satisfactorily contradicted the plain fact that rent control produces shortages. Any commodity or service which can be purchased at far less than such commodity or service would bring in the free market will be purchased in a quantity or amount in excess of the actual need for such commodity or service. This has been clearly illustrated and defined in city after city throughout the country as it relates to housing and shelter. The prewar rate of housing consumption in Washington, D. C., was 3.8 persons per unit. The postwar housing consumption rate is down to 3.5 persons per unit. Nevertheless and despite the fact that the consumption rate per unit is down to 3.5, there has been built and there is now building, an amount of housing which will exceed the estimated population of Washington, D. C., by approximately 100,000 people. It is for this reason and for this known fact that the District of Columbia office of the Federal Housing Administration announced on May 13, 1950, that, and I quote:

"Neither sites would be approved nor applications for mortgage insurance accepted for rental-housing projects under section 207 in the Washington metropolitan area for either elevator or garden-type apartments in the high and medium-rent range until satisfactory market absorption of the large number of rental units (existing, under construction, and proposed) is observed and a demand for additional units is clearly evidenced."

Provable figures indicate that Washington, D. C. has outbuilt every other city in the Nation in relation to new rental units started in proportion to the size of the city—its population. In the 4-year period, 1946-49, Boston has started 37 rental units for each 10,000 of its population; San Francisco, 67 new rental units per 10,000 population; New York City, 111 per 10,000; Los Angeles, 167 per 10,000; Washington, D. C., 319 rental units per 10,000. The average for the United States is 40 rental units per 10,000. Washington, therefore, has so far outbuilt the rest of the Nation that there is no large city in the country where decontrol of rents could be more justified. There is no large metropolitan area anywhere in the country except Washington, D. C., where rental housing built has approached the increase in population since the beginning of the war through December 31, 1949. The population gain in Washington, D. C. has been 41 percent since 1940. The increase in the number of standing units of rental housing has been 39 percent since 1940. This is rental housing only. It does not include the tens of thousands of houses built to sell. It does not include the very substantial number of houses that were converted into apartments.

In the early part of the war there was established a central-listing bureau, the D. C. housing center, at which bureau, owners of rental property were requested to list their rental offerings and with which those in need of housing would file their applications. Figures showing the applications received have steadily declined since 1946, at which time applications ran approximately 4,000 per year, down to the present indicated rate in the spring of 1950 of approximately 1,700 applications per year. Through the same period of time, figures obtained from the central-listing bureau indicate that rental units available have steadily increased so that in the spring of 1950 placement of applicants far exceeded applications for accommodations, and these figures and this comparison do not include single rooms in rooming houses or boarding houses.

There is no better barometer to check market conditions than advertising. In a seller's market, the buyer advertises for goods—in a buyer's market, the seller advertises for buyers. In the first case, the buyer seeks the seller, in the second the seller seeks the buyer. The state of the rental market is truly reflected by advertising, particularly the classified lineage of houses and apartments for rent and houses and apartments wanted to rent.

Beginning with the fall of 1944, and continuing to about the end of 1947, there was an obvious shortage of family housing. Housing could be obtained all through the war if a person or family were willing to live in rented rooms. During the 42-month period referred to, the advertising lineage of housing seekers was about four times as much as the lineage used for advertising houses and apartments for rent.

Then what happened? From the end of 1947, the lineage used to offer apartments and houses, again no rooms, has been on the continual climb until today it exceeds what it was in the fall of 1941. At the same time, advertising by those seeking housing has dropped to about one-third of what it was at its peak in early 1947. The amount of lineage used to advertise places for rent has increased from its low in 1945 about seven times.

This one set of facts proves that the housing shortage in Washington is a thing of the past.

With further reference to the use of advertising as a barometer of market conditions, and in addition to the above facts just given, which were related to classified advertising, we find for the first time in 8 or 9 years the reappearance of display advertising in every week-end edition of the local press, offering available apartments in all sizes, one-, two-, and three-bedrooms, ranging from $66 up, including utilities, in most of them. These two-, three-, and four-column display ads offer apartments both in and out of the District and in every community within the metropolitan area. Not so long ago, one rental project used an entire double-page spread to offer its facilities, soon to come onto the market.

And now some facts on family income for residents of the District. Those who favor a continuation of rent control in the District state that rental housing being built rents for more than the vast majority of the people of Washington can afford to pay. Figures recently made available disprove that statement. The greater portion of the people of Washington and its immediate vicinity have the highest incomes of probably any city in the United States and can pay, and in actual fact are paying, the going rentals in new buildings. It has long been a rule of thumb in the rental business that a tenant is justified in paying between 20 and 25 percent of his income for rent. The median rent for Washington, D. C., is $83 per unit. Twenty-five percent of the median take-home pay after allowance for income-tax deductions is $84. This would indicate that more than half the population can afford to pay 25 percent of their income as rent.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington has been endeavoring as best he could to bring to the attention of his colleagues facts and figures on housing in the metropolitan area of Washington, and now, before concluding his remarks, may he reflect on the disastrous effect of rent control in another capital city of a great country—Paris, France. Many, if not all of my colleagues, have at one time or another visited this city and I need not tell them of the squalid, unhealthy rental facilities in that great city, but perhaps I might for a few minutes reflect on what has caused this physical deterioration of their existing rental housing, and the almost total nonproduction of new rental shelter.

I now desire to read briefly from a pamphlet entitled "No Vacancies," written by Bertrand de Jouvenel, as follows:

"The story starts with World War No. 1. It then seemed both humane and reasonable to preserve the interests of the families while the boys were in the Army or working for victory. So existing situations were frozen. It was also reasonable to avoid disturbances at the end of the war. The veterans' homecoming should not be spoiled by evictions and rent increases. Thus prewar situations were hardened into rights. The owner lost, temporarily, of course, the disposition of his property, and the stipulations of law superseded agreement between the parties. This was only for a time.

"But by the time the situation was reviewed in 1922, retail prices had trebled with rents still at their prewar level. It was then plain that a return to liberty would imply huge increases, an index to them being provided by rents in the smallish free sector, which hovered around two and a half times the 1914 rents. The legislator shrank from this crisis. Wages were by then three and a half times what they had been in 1914, and the expenditure for rent in the worker's budget had shrunk from something like 16 percent before the war to around 5 percent. In our times habits grow up rapidly: Instead of regarding rent as constituting normally one-sixth of one's expenditures, one took it now as being normally one-twentieth. Also, a "right" had developed, the "right" to dig in. Always very sedentary, the French now had stuck roots in their rented lodgings.

"The legislator decided to deal with this matter in a prudent, statesmanlike manner. So the tenant's right to stay in possession was confirmed but the rent was slightly raised. Successive increases were granted in further laws, all warmly debated. A new owner-tenant relationship thus took shape. The owner was powerless either to evict the tenant or debate the price of rent with him, the state took care of that price. The price rose but slowly, while in the meantime the field of regulation was successively enlarged to bring in such flats as had not been previously regulated. New buildings put up since 1915 were alone left unregulated to stimulate construction. This exception was not to endure for long.

"THE FEAR OF LIBERTY

"No systematic view inspired this policy. It just grew from the fear of a sudden return to liberty which seemed ever more dangerous as prices stepped up. And, of course, if one must control the price of rent, one could not allow the owner to dismiss tenants, because in that case he might so easily have stipulated secretly with the new tenant; so rent control implied necessarily the denial of the owner's right to dismiss.

"What then happened to rents under this regime? In 1929, with retail prices more than six times what they had been in 1914, rents had not yet doubled, the real rents, the rents in terms of buying power, were less than a third of what they had been before the war.

"Lawmaking went on; no single subject has taken up so much of the time and energy of Parliament. But the improvement in the condition of the owners, when it occurred, was not the work of the lawmakers. It was brought about by the economic crisis which lowered retail prices. Thus by 1935, rents then being up to almost three times their prewar level, retail prices were down and the owners obtained almost two-thirds of their prewar real income. Or they would have obtained it had not the Laval government then decided on a cut of 10 percent in rents as one of the measures designed to bring down the cost of living and implement a policy of deflation.

"When the Popular Front came in in 1936, the process of devaluations started again, retail prices soared, and the real income from buildings crumbled from year to year.

"Then came World War II. The return to liberty which had been devised for 1943 was, of course, dismissed, and all rents were frozen, including this time those of recent building which had till then escaped.

"THE BUSY LAWMAKERS

"Since the liberation, an order in council of 1945 and two laws in 1947 have intervened, bringing up to 119 the number of laws or quasi-laws on the subject since 1918. The new laws have provided for increases jacking up rents. The lodgings built before 1914 can now be rented at prices 70 percent above the 1939 price. But while rents increased 1.7 times, retail prices increased more than 14 times. In other terms, the buying power of rents was set at 12 percent of its 1939 level, already greatly depressed as we have seen. The buildings put up since 1914 were more severely treated on the assumption that the ruling rents in 1939 had been more adequate. The permissible increase was set at 30 percent as against 1939, thus keeping the buying power of rents at 9 percent of what it was before World War II. It was further specified for the buildings dating back to 1941 or earlier, which comprise, as we have noted, 9 out of 10 buildings, that their rent should in no case be more than 6.8 times the 1914 rent. This, in spite of the fact that retail prices were then 99.8 times as high as in 1914.

"In short, owners of new buildings have been allowed to get in terms of real income less than a tenth of what they got before World War II.

"Owners of old buildings, that is, nine-tenths of all buildings, have been allowed to get in terms of real income either 12 percent of what they got in 1939 or a little less than 7 percent of what they got in 1914—whichever is least, the law took care to specify.

"Possibly the French example may prove of some interest. It goes to show that rent control is self-perpetuating and culminates in both the physical ruin of housing and the legal dispossession of the owners. It is enough to visit the houses in Paris to reach conclusions. The havoc wrought here is not the work of the enemy but of our own measures."

And so, Mr. President, let us not through misinformation or selfish partisanship subject our own national capital to these same insidious conditions which have made housing in Paris so unattractive to its tenants and have made paupers of most of its owners.

Therefore, Mr. President, it is my solid conviction that there is no economic justification for any further extension of rent control within the District of Columbia, and as Washington, D. C., was the first American city to be placed under rent control by action of its Congress, so let it be the first American city to be removed from rent control by direct action of its Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1856, the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 2335. An act to make certain revisions in titles I and III of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended; and

S. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution extending the period of effectiveness of the Selective Service Act of 1948 for 15 days.

BENEFITS TO ANNUITANTS WHO RETIRED PRIOR TO APRIL 1, 1948—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the bill (H. R. 4295) to provide certain benefits for annuitants who retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, prior to April 1, 1948, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4295) to provide certain benefits for annuitants who retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, prior to April 1, 1948, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
J. ALLEN FREAR, Jr.,
WILLIAM LANGER,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

TOM MURRAY,
HOMER THORNBERRY,
EDWARD H. REES,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, will the Senator state what this bill is?

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Missouri that this bill pertains to retirement benefits. It was passed unanimously by the House and was passed, with an amendment, by the Senate. The amendment which was adopted by the Senate would have adversely affected retirement benefits for employees receiving less than $3,000-a-year income. Those receiving above $3,000 a year it would have benefited. That is how the Senate amendment would have worked in that particular situation. The Senate conferees, after extensive conference with the House conferees, receded from the Senate amendments Nos. 1 and 2, and concurred in the House bill unanimously.

Mr. DONNELL. I understand the Senator to mean that the Senate conferees unanimously concurred with the House conferees.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate, June 22 (legislative day of June 7), 1950:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Kenneth W. Spencer, to be a member of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia for a term of 3 years from July 1, 1950.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Frank Dent, formerly pastor of the First Methodist Church of Galveston, now pastor of Oak Lawn Methodist Church, of Dallas, Tex., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God of our fathers, Thou hast said, "When thou prayest go into thy secret place and thy Father who seest in secret will reward thee openly."

These are days when our American people, our American officials, and leaders need the power of the secret place. Each of us has prayed before we came here this day, so we desire to fill the glory of the public with the beauty of the private devotion. We are not the first to seek to harmonize the beauty of the private and the glory of the public. Men of old have sought to bring into harmony the ideals which they feel within their hearts, with their desire to serve the public interests. One has expressed it in this way:

"The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

"For He hath founded it upon the seas and established it upon the floods.

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in His holy place?

"He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity nor sworn deceitfully.

"He shall receive the blessing from the Lord and righteousness from the God of his salvation."

So, our Father, today, that we may bring the beauty of the private into the glory of the public, we pray that we may have clean hands and a pure heart.

It is easy for us to see impure hands. We can look across the sea and say, "Your hands are stained. They are dirty. They are filled with the blood of men." We can even look at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue and say something about hands, or we might even look across the aisle and accuse our colleagues. Yet, even as we say this, our Father, we know that the only hands we are responsible for are the two that hang from our own shoulders, and the only heart that we are responsible for is the one that really and truly beats underneath our own shoulder.

So, give unto us this purity and cleanliness within our own private life that we may bring out that beauty, that hope, that harmony in the glory of our public living and service.

Bless these men who represent their people and the people whom they represent. Lead us through these days through which we go, that we may climb this hill and bring peace, and may others desire to follow with us.

So fill our public service with the power and strength that comes from the secret place.

In Jesus' name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TRANSFER OF CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY BY THE DEFENSE ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5368) to authorize the Department of the Army, Navy, and the Air Force to participate in the transfer of certain real property and/or interest therein, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. VINSON, BROOKS, KILDAY, SHORT, and ARENDS.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

[Mr. FLOOD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

SEX CRIMINALS

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, on April 4 of this year I introduced a bill, H. R. 7994, whose purpose was to make available to local police authorities the past records of sex criminals who had traveled in interstate commerce. In this way, local police officials will be able to maintain adequate surveillance over known criminals within their jurisdiction. In addition, H. R. 7994 makes it necessary for sex criminals who move from one State to another to register with the United States attorney's office and brings the full force of Federal law to bear on those who repeat their sex crimes in other States.

While I believe that H. R. 7994 is an absolute necessity today because of the growing tendency of sex criminals to move among the various States in order to avoid detection, I believe that a full-scale investigation of the entire problem of sex crimes is in order.

FBI tally sheets show that this type of crime is becoming a greater menace yearly. It must be stopped before it assumes terrible proportions. American mothers and our children are too dear to us to permit the continuation of the current depravities. These heinous crimes must be reduced as far as is humanly possible if our womenfolk and our children are to walk through our parks and our streets in safety.

I have, therefore, introduced a House resolution today to create a select committee of five Members of the House of Representatives to conduct a full investigation and study of the cause of sex crimes and to make such recommendations to Congress as it deems advisable. This committee will hold hearings throughout the country, covering as many localities as it can where such atrocities are a public menace. It will cooperate with the police officials and the political authorities in the various States in order to amass as complete a body of information as it can. And when it makes its report to Congress, we will have available a realistic over-all program to cope with this problem. We have no time to lose. We must act now.

There was no objection.

Mr. MACK of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am honored today by having as my guests in Washington 100 of the most deserving young men and women from the Twenty-first Congressional District of Illinois. These young people were recommended by their teachers, principals, and county superintendents of schools and were selected by nonpartisan committees who feel that these children are the most deserving children in the various counties of my district to make this educational tour to Washington. I am proud of the children they have selected and I am proud to have these children as my guests in Washington. They are today the youth of our Nation, but tomorrow they will be the ones who are called upon to guide the destiny of our country. The names of these outstanding Americans follow:

OIL IMPORT PROGRAM

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, over a period of many months the question of imported petroleum has been studied by committees in both branches of Congress. The inquiries have been exhaustive and they have served to develop all the facts needed to establish a policy on which the petroleum industry of the United States could depend.

My concern is that something be done. We need no more studies as a basis for action. I have watched the development of the greatest oil importing program in history with apprehension. No one who remembers the great and successful effort made by the petroleum industry to supply the oil needs during the war can fail to appreciate the vital necessity of maintaining the oil industry of the United States at top efficiency. The Nation's security is one issue that we cannot afford to ignore. Imports of petroleum are a threat to security.

Hearings have been held by three committees and subcommittees in this branch of Congress this year. The record that was developed was clear and conclusive. The independent oil producers and refiners have been hurt. Their markets have been narrowed by imports. Producers have produced and sold less oil in our own markets. Refiners have shut down in many instances and they have curtailed their runs of crude oil. The ability of the industry to explore for and develop new fields has been shrinking. State governments are losing tax revenues. Employment has decreased. Several thousand field and refinery workers have been made idle.

Independents in the oil industry three or more years ago tried to get executive or legislative action to prevent the injury that has come to pass. The coal and railroad industries have in recent weeks been before committees to tell of their unemployment due to foreign oil. Others will inevitably follow unless action is taken.

A remedy is in the hands of the executive branch of the Government. It has repeatedly been importuned by Members of Congress as well as by the independent petroleum industry and others to make use of the authority which it reserved in the trade agreements with countries where oil is produced. The executive branch has made no move to curb the increasing imports of oil. In fact, the principal spokesmen on the subject in the State Department and the Department of Commerce have been loud in their assertions that no action should be taken by the executive department and they have used every opportunity to engage in propaganda against action by Congress. The great corporations which produce and import the oil from Venezuela and the Middle East have no more devoted allies than those in the two departments mentioned. Those who are styled petroleum specialists in those agencies adopt fully and give expression to all the arguments which the oil importers themselves advance.

Long ago—in 1932—Congress expressed its preference for the oil industry of the United States as against that of foreign countries. It did this in the form of an excise tax on imported crude petroleum and refined products. In 1939 the executive department began to whittle away at the tax schedule. Under various trade agreements it has cut the schedule in half. The rate is now one-fourth of a cent per gallon on crude oil and fuel oil, which are today the principal forms of petroleum imports. Such a rate constitutes no barrier whatever to the importing program.

The volume of imports has risen steadily. In the year 1946, the first full year after the end of the war, the daily average of imports was 377,000 barrels. In 1947 it was 436,000 barrels. In 1948 it was 514,000 barrels. In 1949 it was 641,000 and in the first quarter of this year the average was 820,000 barrels a day. Thus, the present rate is more than double the 1946 daily average.

The figures on the volume do not alone tell the story, for we had a substantial gain in consumption since the close of the war. But in percentage of total supply imports of oil have consistently occupied a larger place. In 1946 imports were 6.9 percent of the total supply in the United States. In the first quarter of this year they absorbed 13.1 percent of the supply.

The export market for our petroleum is fading fast. In 1946 it required 419,000 barrels daily. In the first quarter of 1950 the exports of crude oil and products were 265,000 barrels daily. Foreign markets are being filled with foreign production by substantially the same group of large corporations which are bringing the oil into the United States.

Are we to stand by and see the home markets as well as the export increasingly taken up by foreign oil?

The record is clear and unmistakable. The American consumer's greatest assurance of abundant supply lies in the maintenance of a vigorous, competitive industry. To continue with its historical effectiveness, the domestic industry must have a market for the oil it finds and develops. It must rely for the preservation of its home market on either the National Government or the importing companies. The record shows that voluntary restraint has not been practiced and their announced programs call for a much higher rate of imports for 1950 than in 1949, and announced programs can be changed without notice or consent.

There are bills in both branches of Congress to provide workable and dependable restraints on the imports of petroleum. It is my concern that we do something in this session. If we do not, we will find the trouble has increased and the present storm which petroleum imports have raised will have become a tornado.

FORMOSA

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, if we can believe the press reports of yesterday the defense arms of Government are now coming to the conclusion at a very late hour that Formosa is an extremely important piece of land in the world insofar as the defense of the United States is concerned. In my opinion the State Department, the Army, and the Navy had sufficient information as early as last October to know exactly what General MacArthur and his staff thought about that proposition, and at that time we should have taken all steps to protect Formosa the same as any section of the United States. As a matter of fact, and for our defense, we should not have surrendered control over Formosa until the Japanese peace treaty was signed. Certainly this is no time to turn Japan over to the Russian bear, unless we wish to commit suicide.

MILK

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. HESELTON. Mr. Speaker, 1,150,175,142 quarts of fluid milk could have been made from the dried milk held by the Federal Government in storage April 30, 1950.

More than 67 percent of that was purchased last year.

It cost the taxpayers $3,717,096.60 up to April 30 just to keep these more than 157,000 tons of a wholesome food commodity in storage.

It costs eighty-seven one-thousandths of a cent to transport 1 pound of dried milk from Manawa, Wis., to New York City.

The Federal Government could have used this wasted storage money to pay the freight on all this milk to places where people would drink it. Beyond that, more than $800,000 would still have been saved.

It is obvious now that those who have the power to bring about an immediate end to this insane situation have no intention of doing so. But they cannot escape the responsibility for their inexcusable and defiant continuing waste of the taxpayers' money. From July 1, 1949, to April 30, 1950, on dried milk alone the daily waste was $12,227.32. On April 30, 1950, the Government had firm contracts to purchase an additional 27,656,941 pounds. Therefore the daily waste for storage alone must be over $13,000 a day now.

It is equally obvious that, unless something is done promptly, this food will spoil. Apparently those who have the clear power to prevent this hold in utter contempt the reaction of the American public to such wanton destruction of wholesome food. But, if the truth can be made clear to the public, I am convinced that its indignation will be swift and certain.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Ways and Means may have until midnight of Friday, June 23, to file its report on H. R. 8920, the tax bill, and that anyone desiring to file minority views may have the same time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ANNUITANTS RETIRED UNDER CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 4295) to provide certain benefits for annuitants who retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, prior to April 1, 1948.

MEAT INSPECTION

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to another one of the very harmful effects of the so-called Taber amendment to the appropriation bill. This situation has been well described by an article by Alfred D. Stedman, the agricultural editor of the St. Paul Pioneer Press. He says that the biggest set-back in 46 years of fighting for pure food and public health is threatened by this House slash. Some 346 meat inspectors throughout the country will have to be dismissed as a result of this curtailment in the appropriation bill.

I think the contradiction is apparent when just this week we authorized the appointment of a committee to investigate chemical poisons or potential poisons in food, but at the same time are cutting appropriations to eliminate meat inspectors who are looking for causes of diseases which we know to exist.

I hope that the Senate will reconsider this arbitrary, unsound House action and provide adequate funds for the support of the meat-inspection program. I have included the full text of the Stedman article in the Appendix of the RECORD.

CLAIM OF AUF DER HEIDE-ARAGONA, INC.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 1606) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Auf der Heide-Aragona, Inc., and certain of its subcontractors against the United States, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out all after "Maryland" over to and including "expense" in line 19, page 2, and insert ": Provided, however, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed as an inference of liability on the part of the United States Government."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNUAL REPORT, OFFICE OF ALIEN PROPERTY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the Annual Report of the Office of Alien Property, Department of Justice, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1949.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH and Mr. BROWN of Ohio) there were—ayes 87, noes 29.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent

Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 209, nays 91, not voting 130, as follows:

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 8567. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. GURNEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENLISTMENT OF ALIENS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 649 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2269) to provide for the enlistment of aliens in the Regular Army. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution would make in order the consideration of S. 2269, a bill which has been requested by those in charge of the Armed Forces of this country, to permit certain aliens to be enlisted in our Armed Forces.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 12 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Armed Services, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], who will explain the purposes of the bill.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I will try to explain this new program which is to be inaugurated in the Army with respect to enlistments. The bill, which the pending resolution makes in order to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, authorizes 2,500 aliens to be enlisted in the Army of the United States. Before these aliens can be enlisted in the Army they must first be screened by the Department of the Army and the program must have the approval of the Office of the Secretary of State. Every effort will be made in the screening process to have it so thorough that no one who should not serve in our Armed Forces will be permitted to enter. We prescribe that they not have dependents and they must be between the ages of 18 and 35.

I may say that this is a Senate bill. It was introduced and passed in the other body, the author of it being the distinguished junior Senator from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The reason why the Army feels it is necessary to have these aliens is based on several factors. In modern warfare it is necessary to have technicians of the highest character, people who can handle modern weapons, people who are familiar with the language spoken in foreign countries, people who are familiar with the terrain, and people who know something about areas which are somewhat foreign to us. That is the reason why General Collins appeared before the committee in executive session as well as in public session and considered this new step highly important in the management of the Army. He feels it is necessary that there be a small number admitted into the Army.

What do we offer these people in return for enlisting? We say they must enlist for a period of 5 years. If at the end of that period they obtain an honorable discharge and have been ordered to the United States and have been brought to this country by that means, then they will be eligible for citizenship. That is all the bill does.

Mr. Speaker, I propose to offer an amendment to the committee amendment to strike out on page 3 the words "or earlier." The committee language was this: "pursuant to military orders shall, if otherwise qualified for citizenship, and after completion of 5 or more years of military service, or earlier if honorably discharged therefrom."

The reason that prompted us to put the words "or earlier" in was that after the person enlists and serves a year or so he might be found to have some physical disabilities and therefore we would not want to hold him to the 5-year requirement. But the more we thought about it, we thought we were on sounder ground if we struck out the words "or earlier" so that the person would have to be in the Army for at least 5 years.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. What is the real purpose of taking a foreigner and putting him into our army when you can get men who have been naturalized who know all of these countries? We have people from all of these countries who already have become naturalized citizens of the United States.

Mr. VINSON. That is a very important question. General Collins feels, and the Army feels, that it is highly desirable at this time to have a small number of highly trained technicians, people who are familiar with every phase of life in other countries, so they can contribute their knowledge to the proper performance of military duty.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If you want those men, do you know who they are?

Mr. VINSON. No. I do not know who they are. Probably the services do not yet know; but they know one thing, that there are types of people abroad who would like to get into the Army, who can contribute certain important knowledge to our Army, and by doing so, if honorably discharged and brought to this country—remember that—brought to this country, they will get citizenship. As a matter of fact, they may never come to this country. The Army may not order them here. The Army may keep them abroad. If so, they do not get citizenship.

Mr. RICH. If he is a citizen of some foreign country, the Army cannot give him any orders at all that he will obey. He will obey the laws of his own country.

Mr. VINSON. But he cannot get into this country unless the Army orders him here.

Mr. RICH. We have 13,000 aliens in the State Department, and if you can tell me where they are doing a good job for this country, then I do not know anything about it.

Mr. VINSON. Well, we have all been considerably disturbed about various recent charges, but I am utterly confident that General Collins and the men who run the Army are not going to bring any Communists into the United States Army. I will speak without any reservation as far as the Army is concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is my understanding that the Army needs these people to perform certain specialized duties, such as interpreters, and so forth. In the light of that, is there any reason why those people could not be employed in a civilian capacity, rather than to take them into the Army?

Mr. VINSON. Well, you would not have sufficient control over them. You must have people that you can direct and order in military matters.

Now, I repeat that we asked General Collins to come into executive session on this. I said, "Tell us how you are going to use these men," and he told us. I cannot divulge those things in public debate, but you can rest assured that the Army is not going to put any Communists in it knowingly, and these aliens are going to be in our service only after they have been most carefully screened.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HOEVEN. Why is it necessary to have the approval of the Secretary of State?

Mr. VINSON. As far as I am concerned, I would just as soon have the approval of the Army. I will go further and say that I am perfectly willing to have the scrutinizing done by committees of Congress. We have plenty of precedent for that. I am perfectly willing to have the list of these men submitted to our Judiciary Committee for consultation with the Department of the Army before they are admitted to the service. But these men should be in the Army because they can render great service to the Army. Only 2,500 are involved.

Mr. HOEVEN. That is not the question; I want to know why we need the approval of the State Department?

Mr. VINSON. I do not need the approval of the Secretary of State as far as I am concerned. That can be stricken out.

Mr. HOEVEN. Why is it in the bill?

Mr. VINSON. Because Senator LODGE put it in the bill. So far as I am concerned it can be stricken out.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. What effect will the enactment of this legislation have on immigration quotas?

Mr. VINSON. This is outside of immigration quotas.

I will be perfectly willing to accept an amendment—now listen, because you will want to know what I am talking about—that before any of these aliens are accepted by the Army consultation must be had with the Judiciary Committees of the House and the Senate; because we all have the same objective, we do not want anybody in our Army who should not be in that service. I am willing to accept any safeguard to see that we get the right recruits, recruits who can be of service and benefit to carry out any Army mission that General Collins feels is absolutely necessary.

Mr. WALTER. I call attention to the picture at the left of the Speaker, the portrait of Lafayette; I remind the gentleman of Pulaski, Von Steuben, and others, men who took an illustrious part in our fight for independence.

Mr. VINSON. That is quite different; they did not enlist in the Army of the United States; they were allies. These men, however, are going to enlist.

Mr. WALTER. A moment ago the question was raised as to the reason for the inclusion of the Secretary of State. That is absolutely essential, as I see it, because the State Department occupies the position of screening all aliens that come to the United States. By including the authorization from the Secretary of State it is certain there is no question but what the proper visa would be issued.

Mr. VINSON. I hope the committee will give us a full opportunity to vote on the bill, so I trust the rule will be adopted; but I felt it necessary in advance of general debate to make some explanation of the reasons behind the bill.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. The gentleman emphasized the point about Communists; will the gentleman emphasize equally the fact that those with a Nazi or Fascist background are equally undesirable as far as our Army is concerned?

Mr. VINSON. They will be screened; we will not have anybody but whose heart beats in harmony with ours.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the committee will adopt the resolution, will debate the bill for an hour and will let the House vote on it.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill, because in times like these when we hear about all our other departments of the Government having Reds and Communists and subversives in them, above all, I want to see that the United States Army is 100 percent American. That is the reason why I am opposing this measure. I know that for many years there were certain individuals in our Government who have been attempting to get these foreigners into it. First they wanted a foreign legion, then they wanted 25,000, but they found so much opposition among the membership of both bodies of Congress that they abandoned that and now they have finally got it down to 2,500.

I think there is a statement in the report that is nothing less than an insult to the American soldier. It states that these foreigners, "the citizen candidate on his part gives us a rare human talent in highly specialized fields and will certainly be of substantial value to our country."

Mr. Speaker, can you conceive that this bill provides for boys of 18 years of age coming in and joining the Army and being classified as specialists? As specialists they will naturally obtain the rank of master or technical sergeant. It would be an insult to these men whom the Armed Services Committee is calling into the service and who may be specialists if you do not give them the rank of master sergeant or technical sergeant. This putting of foreign boys 18 years of age over American boys who have been in the Army for many years is not fair.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman is in error in the line of argument he is making because this covers original enlistments. When they originally enlist they go in at the lowest grade, so, therefore, could not come in as a technical sergeant.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I am saying that this bill provides that these foreigners who come in are specialists at 18 years of age. The bill itself stipulates they must be specialists and, consequently, if they are specialists they would be entitled soon to become master or technical sergeants and our own American boys who have served for many years would be under the orders of these foreigners.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. It is nothing unusual for an alien who is a resident of the United States to enlist in our armed services. If the gentleman will go back through military history he will find resident aliens held responsible positions in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps and American boys submitted to their commands.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. As far as I am concerned if I were in the Army I would not want some 18-year-old boy to come in and be my master sergeant or technical sergeant.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Where are these foreigners coming from?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I do not know what countries they are coming from.

Mr. GROSS. Is there a lack of men wanting to enlist in the Army at the present time?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. At the present time I believe they have more who desire to enlist—more American boys—than they will take.

Mr. GROSS. Can the gentleman tell me what effect this sort of thing will have upon the 4,000,000 unemployed and on a lot of boys who have just come out of the high schools and colleges?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Inasmuch as there are thousands of young boys—tens of thousands of them—coming out of the colleges with no work, who have engineering and other specialist learning, perhaps it would be well to regard them as specialists. They are the ones who have lived in America. We should give them the master sergeant's position.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is my impression that the age limit set out in this bill is between 18 and 35.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is correct, 18 to 35. In other words, this bill provides that a young foreigner 18 can be regarded as a specialist. They would come into the Army as specialists and consequently they would eventually receive a specialist's rank as technical or master sergeant.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I want to express the thought that if anybody enlisted at 18 comes in as an original enlistment and got any such rank there might be room for criticism.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The bill provides he must be a specialist. I will ask the gentleman how the average foreigner could be a specialist at that age?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It is not limited to those who are 18. The age is up to 35 and they have that long to qualify as a specialist.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. A great many boys enlist who want to become specialists and they enlist at 18. They have to work up through the ranks before they can attain the rank of technical sergeant. None of these boys will go in as sergeants; also, I want to point out to the gentleman that probably the vast majority of them will be over 21 years of age because very few minors come to America before they are 21.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. It is the practice of the Army if a specialist comes in for him to soon reach a sergeantcy. This bill provides that they must be specialists in order to qualify.

Mr. JOHNSON. The bill does not provide that at all.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. It provides that they must be a specialist.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is not in the bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. What does this language in the report mean, then? What is the purpose of writing it in the report?

Mr. JOHNSON. The purpose is to provide that they may become specialists.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The purpose is stated. That is why they are brought in, because they are specialists.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I am afraid the gentleman from Illinois does not understand the real job to be assigned these individuals. They must have certain qualifications which security reasons will not permit me to mention at this time. But, I can assure the gentleman the specialized ability of these individuals does not apply to the term "specialists" as the gentleman understands it.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. In that same connection I suggest to the gentleman that among the specialists, of course, would be those who had linguistic ability which some of our own people might not have, and that might enter into this picture; also I make the observation that in World War II there were a great many aliens who served in our Army and who served with great distinction and courage, and in recognition of that we passed a measure here to assist in their efforts to become American citizens.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, again I say that I personally would like to keep at least one department of this Government 100-percent American.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in relation to the pending bill, I think my distinguished and valued friend from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] is unnecessarily alarmed. If I had any objection to the bill it would be the fact that it is confined to 2,500 only. But, that is satisfactory to me, because I recognize that committees have their problems, and I go along as far as I possibly can with committee reports. The committee has done an unusually fine job by the first amendment on page 2 which eliminates the possibility of any American foreign legion. I think the committee acted wisely in that respect, because in referring to the foreign legion of any country, without mentioning any one country in particular, and I do not like to, sometimes it brings about repercussions abroad that may be misunderstood when there is no offense intended, but, the first committee amendment on page 2 takes care of that and precludes, if it remains in the bill, which I assume it will, and becomes law, the possibility of any organization such as an American foreign legion being established.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. Regarding the number, the gentleman will note that Senator LODGE had 10,000 in it, and our committee, after considering it very carefully, determined it was sort of an experiment, pioneering, and that we would sooner have a small number, and if proved to be successful that we could enlarge it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I had that in mind. I recognize that when the committee reports out a bill, that it is the collective judgment of the committee, and while I might have some views in some respects to the contrary, I hesitate to go against a committee, even in part, when I am in agreement with the objective sought. I am supporting the bill. My remarks are not to be taken as criticism of any member of the committee reporting out this fine bill, and the two amendments adopted by the committee are excellent amendments. They are not merely perfecting, but strengthening amendments.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I was hoping that the gentleman would oppose the amendment and let it stay at 10,000, because it seems to me the bill has merits on its face. If we cannot integrate 10,000 troops in the total Army, it would be surprising.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, this bill will go to conference, and what will be in disagreement will be 10,000 in one branch and 2,500 in the other.

What I wanted to talk about was a matter that I consider of historic importance today taking place in Paris. Delegates from France, western Germany, Belgium, Italy, the Netherlands, and Luxemburg met last Tuesday in Paris, France, in what may be a historic conference aimed at pooling their coal and steel production and to see if they can resolve the recent suggestions of Robert Schuman, Foreign Minister of France, and his French associates, into a practical and effective plan.

What a great ideal to try to bring into agreement, operation, and effect by these six countries.

As stated in part by Foreign Minister Schuman:

> It is our desire to associate in a common and permanent work of peacetime nations which for centuries have fought one another in bloody conflicts.

He was referring, of course, to France and Germany.

Through the successful welding of France and Germany together in this common effort there would be assured, as he said, the "certainty thus to banish from our European community a latent cause of trouble, suspicion, and anguish," and this would be a basis to erect "a solid, European edifice accessible to all nations of good will."

What noble thoughts when he further said:

> We feel we are not permitted to fail, nor to quit without finishing the job. But no one has ever tried such a system as we have outlined. Never have the states conferred, nor even thought of delegating as a group a fraction of their sovereignty to an independent supranational organization.

He called for "a pioneering boldness which is too often absent from our international institutions."

I hope the representatives of the six countries attending this conference will do so with an understanding mind, not impugning the motives of anyone or any of the countries. If this is the animating spirit of the conference, and I am sure it is, no matter how far apart they may be during their deliberations they will be able to come to an agreement of historic importance.

We of America will watch the deliberations, and hope and pray they will come to a successful conclusion.

There is a great ideal that has been brought into this conference and which has brought the conference into being. It has as its objective the removal of some important economic factors that have caused Germany and France in the past to be suspicious of each other for centuries, all due to human weaknesses, and which have created fear, hostility, enmity, and war, instead of understanding and confidence in each other, and friendship and peace. For if any decided step forward in understanding and trust and real friendship can be and is taken by France and Germany and the other four participating nations, a historic step has been taken toward European unity and permanent peace throughout the world.

In connection with this conference a significant event happened in the elections a few days ago in a part of Germany, where the Communist Party candidates, who received 16 percent of the votes cast in the last election, received only about 5 percent of the votes cast a few days ago.

Over 150 years ago the fathers of our country met in a Constitutional Convention to establish a new government for the Thirteen Colonies who had successfully won their independence from Great Britain. The delegates to that convention met under most trying conditions. We know from history that they had a great and historic ideal in mind, the result of which is our country today, which we enjoy and possess. We know from history the opposition they met, of their uncertainties, their despair many times of success, but they persevered and finally were successful. We know the great difficulty they had in having three-fourths of the Original Thirteen States ratify the Constitution.

But conditions existed that required solution, and men with great ideals and courage lived then, and difficulties that appeared insurmountable were overcome.

Uncertainty and confusion vanished and a new notion was established, which is ours today.

The delegates to the convention were men with ideals. They were men with understanding minds. They were determined to succeed, and they did succeed. The framers of the Constitution and the founders of our Government had to meet honest misunderstanding on the part of some; jealousy and prejudice on the part of others; they had to meet the doubting Thomases also. They always exist. They had to contend with the blind and deliberate opponents to any form of government other than a monarchy. They had to contend with those who, in their day, sought only personal or political advantage even against the best interests of the 13 floundering States operating under the Articles of Confederation.

While the conference now going on in Paris is not for the purpose of establishing a new nation, it is a conference of historic importance. Its ideals are high and noble. Its purpose is to chart a new journey in Europe. However, there is a basic resemblance between this conference and our Constitutional Convention of over 150 years ago. The delegates to the Paris Conference, I think it might also be called a convention, can learn much to guide and direct them in their deliberations and efforts from the deliberations of the Constitutional Convention which brought the United States of America into existence. The free world and countless of millions of persons in Communist-controlled countries are watching and will watch with hope and prayers the outcome of this conference. A successful outcome will be one of the outstanding constructive events in the history of the world. The delegates of the six countries have grave responsibilities resting upon them, for the benefit or disappointment of not only this generation, but of many generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, I consider this conference to be of such importance and the results which may flow from it to be of such historic importance to you and me and others of this generation as well as those of future generations to come, that notice should be taken of it in this body. I felt it was my duty to do so and to convey to the delegates to that conference representing the six participating countries the fact that we are watching it—not only countless of millions of Americans, but countless of millions of people everywhere, recognizing that if they can make a decided step forward, they will be overcoming human weaknesses that have brought about wars in the past and they will be thereby strengthening the will of God, which is everlastingly present, and that they will be accomplishing something of benefit to the entire world for many generations to come.

A successful outcome will be a decided step toward permanent peace.

Mr. Speaker, the entire text of Mr. Schuman's statement on the steel- and coal-pool plan is as follows:

TEXT OF SCHUMAN STATEMENT ON POOL PLAN

Six weeks to the very day have barely elapsed since in this very room with historic memories the French Government made known its plan. Six weeks—a very short interval for such a new and vast objective as pooling the coal and steel production of our countries; very short when one thinks of the customary slowness of international transactions.

France has been blamed for acting precipitately. There has been talk of rapid and brutal tactics. But experience has shown us that the best initiatives are frittered away when, after their birth, they are delayed in preliminary consultations.

In a world anguished by so many set-backs and by impotence, I think we had the right—in fact, the duty—to count on the strength of the idea, to take advantage of the impetus given by the hope it has aroused and the instinctive support of our peoples.

We are now here at the beginning of our task. It is to you, gentlemen, that our six governments have confided the task of justifying this hope. Your task is to express in elastic and clear language, with a view to preparing definite commitments, the principles that have determined the choice of our objectives and that constitute the basis of our deliberations.

We are agreed on the orientation of our work, on the goal we wish to reach. Our governments have agreed to seek in common, by a free confrontation of views and special situations, the best means of applying the principles that we have accepted by creation of new institutions without precedent in the present-day world.

DECLARES TASK IS GREAT

It is a great task, gentlemen, that the confidence of our governments has conferred upon us. We undertake it with pride and conscious of our responsibilities, we feel that we are not permitted to fail or to give up without result. Moreover, our conclusions, as you know, will be submitted for the approval of our governments and the sovereign decision of our parliaments.

No one among us is unaware of the exceptional difficulties of our undertaking. Admittedly, we all have voluminous statistics at our disposal. We shall make good use of the impartial studies made previously on a national scale, as well as those made by international bodies.

But never has a system resembling that which we have in view actually been attempted. Never have States entrusted nor even considered jointly delegating a fraction of their sovereignty to an independent supranational organization.

We shall have to set up a draft treaty that will define in broad outline the attributions of this joint authority, the way it will function, the means of appeal against its decisions and of making its responsibilities effective. We shall have to examine without, however, writing them into the treaty, the technical details that will be the objective of agreements to be concluded subsequently after ratification of the treaty. These conventions will have to be easy to revise so that they may be adapted to the lessons of experience.

We wish to substitute for the ancient practices of dumping and discrimination an enlightened cooperation. That is essential. But what is equally important, and what from the very beginning has been inscribed in the forefront of the plan, is our determination to associate in a joint and permanent task of peace two nations that for centuries have been opposed in bloody competition. It is the certainty of thus eradicating from our European community a latent cause of trouble, of mistrust, and anguish; it is the hope of erecting on this peaceful cooperation a solid European structure, accessible to all nations of good will.

We earnestly would have liked Great Britain to be present at our discussions. We cannot conceive of Europe without her. We know, and are reassured by this, that the British Government desires the success of our labors.

Certain difficulties that have prevented her participating, actively, at least, at the present stage, appeared in the course of discussions that were both frank and friendly. We preserve the hope that the doubts and scruples that a somewhat doctrinal reasoning has failed to overcome will finally yield to more concrete demonstrations.

The French Government certainly will act in conformity with the desires of all the participating governments when it keeps the British Government informed of the development of our deliberations, and thus will insure it the possibility, if not of coming and joining us—which we persist in hoping—at least of sending us all its useful observations, and thus prepare the way for future cooperation.

The conclusions we shall reach will be the fruit of our discussions. Each one of you will contribute your suggestions and criticisms. We shall have a joint determination to succeed, to do something constructive, on the basis of the principles already defined. We shall be inspired by a youthful rashness that is too frequently absent from our international institutions.

Without losing sight of the individual needs of our countries we must be aware that national interests in these times consist in finding beyond our national boundaries the means of achieving a more rational economic structure, more economical and more intensive production, and a greater and more readily accessible market.

Our initiative in no way is meant to ignore or misunderstand the attempts made elsewhere to give Europe a healthy economy. Mr. Stikker recently made an important and fruitful contribution to it. It is situated in a different sphere from our own. There is neither duplication nor contradiction between our two objectives.

The chief characteristic of the French proposal is that, aside from its economic importance, which is susceptible to developments that at the present moment cannot be guessed at, it has had and preserves a political value that from the very first moment struck opinion in different countries more than anything else.

For our part, we shall begin the work thus assigned to us. We shall first of all have to adopt a method of working. It will be work in teams instead of a conference with meticulous and rigid rules. We shall all of us wish above all to be efficient. Brilliant eloquence will not tempt us.

An informative meeting tomorrow will enable us to fix our ideas in this respect. They will be defined during personal contacts that we shall be anxious to establish and maintain.

The fundamentals of our problems will be taken up at the same time. The two cannot be separated. We shall pool our ideas, we shall put them up against each other and choose between them. The French Government will make known its ideas to you in the next few days. The draft text it will submit will form the basis for work it hopes will be useful and fruitful.

For today, I shall limit myself to welcoming you in my Government's name, and expressing ardent hopes that we shall not disappoint the expectations of the peoples who place their hope and confidence in you.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed on the same subject that the distinguished majority leader just discussed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

THE FREE STATES OF EUROPE

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I am not authorized to speak for the minority on this matter, but it happens that during the Eightieth Congress in the fall of 1947 I was chairman of a subcommittee for Germany and Austria of the so-called Herter committee, the Select Committee on Foreign Aid, and spent 6 weeks in Germany and Austria with a subcommittee of five members. The problem which the gentleman from Massachusetts has discussed was the basic problem with which we were concerned during the entire time that we were there, and that was the economic rehabiiltation of western Europe and the part that western Germany might play in it.

In that capacity we conferred not only with the German leaders but the French leaders in the French zone of western Germany and with British leaders in the English zone. When we returned we made a report, which included this recommendation:

That the states of Germany which are free to do so be encouraged to form a constitutional government at the earliest possible date; a government with powers derived from the member states, a government which other German states could join when free to do so, and free itself to join any federation of free states looking toward the economic stability of Europe and world peace.

In concluding our report covering this and other recommendations, we said:

The committee believes that carrying out these recommendations will go far in putting Germany on her feet, relieve the United States taxpayer of immense occupation costs, bring to the cause of world stability and European recovery the great capacities of the German people and aid much in developing the free states of Europe as a bulwark of world peace and free institutions.

The report was signed:

The subcommittee for Germany: FRANCIS CASE, South Dakota, chairman; JOHN M. VORYS, Ohio; CHARLES W. VURSELL, Illinois; EUGENE E. COX, Georgia; OVERTON BROOKS, Louisiana.

So it is my sincere conviction, Mr. Speaker, that what is happening in Paris today is probably as important for the future of the world as anything can be. I would heartily endorse all that the distinguished majority leader has said as to the importance of what is going on there to all our deliberations here. All of these things that we talk about here—peace and the cost of Government—are definitely hitched up to what may come out of the Paris conference.

As a member of the minority I want to join in what the distinguished majority leader has said about the importance of what they are trying to do at the conference. So, for myself, and I am sure for those who were on that committee, I wish for Premier Schuman and his associates the greatest possible success in what they are seeking to do at this conference in Paris.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I hold in highest regard the members of the Military Affairs Committee on both sides of the aisle, but I am greatly surprised at their bringing in a bill such as we have to consider today. They want to admit 2,500 more aliens, if necessary, into this country above the quota. That is the first objection I have to the bill.

The second objection I have to the bill is because they want the Secretary of State to pass on the men they are going to allow to come into the Army of the United States, and go into foreign countries where they learn everything about our own Army, and then, if they do not want to join up as an American citizen, they are free to tell everything they have learned about the American Army. If that is good policy and good business, then I do not know what I am talking about. It is silly to me.

Then I want to say further that I have the highest regard for the Military Affairs Committee, but I do not want to see them taken over like most of the members of our Foreign Affairs Committee is being taken over by foreign countries. We are getting so imbued with the ideology of these foreign countries that I wonder where our Americanism is going. I just cannot see it like they do. It is too much for me. It seems to me that these foreigners are pulling the wool over our eyes and we do not know it. This is poor judgment on the part of everybody who has any part in trying to pass this legislation. When you have 13,000 aliens in the State Department passing out the hard-earned dollars of our American taxpayers it is about time that the American people woke up and realized what is going on. I just cannot understand what you are trying to do, putting 2,500 aliens in the Army. It is just too terrible to contemplate the ultimate results if they turn against America.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia, chairman of the committee, a man who I have the greatest respect for.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman said he was surprised that the Armed Services Committee reported such a bill. Does the gentleman know who the author of this bill is—the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]?

Mr. RICH. I do not care who the author of it is. I do not care whether he is a Republican or a Democrat, or what he is. All I want him to be is a good, sound American, and if he is a good, sound American, he will think deeper. These fellows who brought up this bill here have not been thinking deep enough, hard enough, sound enough for me.

Mr. VINSON. Does the gentleman know that the Chief of Staff, General Collins, personally is appealing for this legislation? What comment has the gentleman about the Chief of Staff? He has already made his comments about the committee and about the author of the bill. What is his comment about the Chief of Staff?

Mr. RICH. I want the Chief of Staff of the American Army to get Americans. We do not have to get a lot of foreigners to run our Army, it is a sad commentary. I want the Chief of Staff of the American Army to see that we educate our own American boys to be in our Army. We have a lot of our American boys who are right here in America who want to go into the Army, men who know all about those countries, men whom you can trust, men who are good American citizens, born in America or naturalized American citizens, men that we are going to pay with American dollars, men that are Americans from the top of their head to the soles of their feet. That is what I want. I do not want any foreigners.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I yield to my colleague who was kind enough to give me this time.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I asked the gentleman to yield in order that I might ask a question of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

Does this deny the American boy, if we reach a certain quota in our own Army, where there may be thousands of American boys trying to get into our own Army—will this bill, according to its language, deny 2,500 American boys the right to serve the flag which they admire so much?

Mr. VINSON. I would say it probably would not, because you will hardly ever be up to within 2,500 of our enlisted strength. It will not interfere with any enlistment in the Army.

Mr. RICH. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia this question: There being a quota on the number of men in the Army, and we take in these 2,500 foreigners, will not that necessarily deny such positions to 2,500 American boys?

Mr. VINSON. Yes; it would, if you had only 611,000, and that is all the money you appropriated for. You might not have any money to pay for 2,500, so the 2,500 would not come in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes; and I will ask the able chairman of the Defense Committee this question: I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania made a very thought-provoking observation when he said that the State Department approves of these individuals coming into the Army. What will prevent left-wingers from coming over here, getting information from our Army in these enlistments and peddling it to their advantage to some other country in the event some crisis confronts us?

Mr. VINSON. If the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that General Collins and the men who run the Army will permit aliens who are communistic in thought to enter into the armed services, then they should vote against this bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Well, I think it.

Mr. VINSON. And I want to say this in view of the way the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania has been criticizing the committee, criticizing the officers——

Mr. RICH. No; I said that the State Department was pulling the wool over the committee's eyes. I think you good men are being fooled terribly in this legislation.

Mr. VINSON. The gentleman was criticizing the committee; he was criticizing the author of the bill; he was criticizing General Collins.

Mr. RICH. No, no, no; first, I am criticizing the Foreign Affairs Committee—and I love every one of the members of that committee and the members of the Armed Services Committee—but you have just been hoodwinked. I want you to get your glasses on and see what is happening. That is the point I am trying to make here. Only sound Americans should be in the American Army.

Mr. VINSON. My glasses are on, and I am looking over them listening to the fallacy of the gentleman's argument; but at the same time I am trusting General Collins. Strike out the State Department if that disturbs you.

Mr. RICH. Well, you ought to do that; you should do it, and only let good Americans in our armed services.

Mr. VINSON. All right. I am going along with the bill. I have confidence in General Collins, and the American people have confidence in him. When General Collins comes behind closed doors after we had held this bill in committee for over a year and stated his reasons for wanting it, charged with the responsibility he is charged with, saying that we must have this small group, I am willing to trust him.

Mr. RICH. We have the gentleman's own statement now that he held this bill up 1 year. You just did not hold it up 1,000 years long enough; yes, better still, forever.

Mr. VINSON. That may be true. We would not have brought it out if General Collins, charged with this great responsibility, had not urged it.

Mr. RICH. Let me ask the chairman of the Armed Services Committee this question: Why in the world does General Collins, head of our Army, want to go out and get 2,500 foreigners instead of getting 2,500 equally well-trained and competent Americans? That is what I want to know.

Mr. VINSON. For the simple reason that he wants people in the Army who know the terrain, the language, the customs, the philosophy, and the psychology of the people in countries that probably he may have to deal with.

Mr. RICH. For years we have been taking men from every country in the world into this country; they have become American citizens—good American citizens, naturalized. To say that we do not have qualified Americans to fill this need is ridiculous. It is a poor admission by anybody in the Army or out of the Army.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield four additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The chairman of the Armed Services Committee does not for one minute imagine that General Collins, great man that he is, but busy man that he is, could personally supervise these enlistments and check against left wingers getting into the armed services.

Mr. VINSON. I will say this, that these men will be hand-picked and they will be combed and the authorities will know exactly what they are before they are taken in the Army. That is the reason we have limited it to 2,500 men.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I have heard that expression before, especially in connection with the State Department and the Secretary saying how clean his Department was, yet other officials of the State Department came here at one time and stated that they knew there were two or three hundred homosexuals who should be fired.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. No; I asked for this time to put across an idea, but I have not had much of the time to myself. The idea is Americanism is and should be the best citizenship in all the world.

The head of the Army, great general that he may be, ought to realize that he should be able to get better results from American citizens than from any foreigner who was ever born. That is the point I make. If we here in the Congress are American citizens we ought to insist on having an army of American citizens. We should not hire other citizens to betray their own country. The Good Book says, "Lead us not into temptation." We do not want an army of foreigners.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I want to answer three questions that have been raised here. First, the Army is 25,000 under quota at the present time and this will not displace any persons in the Army; second, we were able to get many scientists to help us with our experiments in New Mexico which we could not have gotten if we had not used a method like this and, third, the 13,000 the gentleman is speaking about in the State Department are clerks and assistant clerks and if we went ahead and sent Americans over there to those places our cost of government would go up tremendously.

Mr. RICH. What does the gentleman care about the cost of government? He has been voting for everything. That does not seem to mean anything to a lot of Members over on that side.

I want soldiers who are Americans first and, second, I want fellows in the Army from the top to the bottom who are going to see that we have Americans to look after America. It is about time that we stop trying to meddle in all the affairs of every nation in the world. It is time that we look after the citizens of this country and do it through and by citizens of this country.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Armed Services another question. In the event these people go in the Army do they have all of the benefits that the American soldiers have for their service or do they get more benefits?

Mr. VINSON. They will be enlisted with the same rights, the same privileges and be dispersed through the Army like any other enlistee in the Army.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. They will not get more than the American soldier in benefits?

Mr. VINSON. Every benefit that the American soldier is entitled to he gets.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TACKETT. With all the talk that has been going on I have not been able to ascertain yet, I have heard no one say yet, what the purpose of this bill is. Why do we need 2,500 aliens in the Army?

Mr. RICH. I say we do not need them. We have Americans enough, we have Americans who are sound men who are naturalized American citizens, who will fight for the country like our own boys have in all the wars that they have been in. I do not believe in taking a lot of aliens and putting them in our Army regardless of where they come from or what their nationality is or anything else. I think it is wrong. That is the matter I am talking about.

Mr. TACKETT. Does the gentleman understand this is a swap whereby we guarantee some person on foreign soil American citizenship if he will spy on his own country or some other country?

Mr. RICH. Yes; and when the 5 years are up he goes back to his own country and tells them all the secrets he learned while a member of the armed services of our country. It is wrong. I hope the committee will take this bill back and keep it for just 1,000 years longer in committee. America for Americans forever. Once an American always an American. An America that is worth citizenship is worth fighting for. Love of country is our greatest heritage.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TACKETT].

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not purport to know anything about this bill. For that reason I am not going to argue for it or against it. But I would like to have some facts in order that I may know whether or not it is the type of legislation I suspect it to be.

It is my opinion that this proposal enlists 2,500 aliens into our armed services for the purpose of obtaining information from foreign countries by giving some on foreign soil something they otherwise would not have less they be spies. We passed a bill of this sort last year. It was so secretive we did not even open our mouths about it. They said, "Do not talk about it at all. It is too secret." You were then authorizing the armed forces to enlist some 50 or 100 spies a year, as I remember it. Now you get into an argument as to whether 10,000 or 2,500 should be enlisted by virtue of this legislation. I have an idea you just want 2,500 because you just want 2,500 spies. I guess that is what it is all about. This is another matter that is so secret we are not supposed to talk about it. You know, when things get that secret they do not usually amount to a hoot, anyway.

I want to know if there is any person within the United States or elsewhere who is worth a tinker's hoot to this country or any other country who would take the citizenship of some other country in order to sell out the people of his own country? If he has a certain philosophy in life and has a definite belief, and if he will swap that information that might be detrimental to his own people to some other nation because they will give him citizenship and a few more dollars than he could get by serving his own people, then I guarantee you that that information is not worth a hoot, anyway.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TACKETT. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I do not know of anything that is dearer to the American people than their citizenship.

Mr. TACKETT. But we are selling it mighty cheap now.

Mr. ABERNETHY. American citizenship is something which is coveted around the world. Does not the gentleman think that we are lowering it to a very ordinary category when we use it as a lure to get spies into the Army of the United States?

Mr. TACKETT. I cannot imagine anything that we could do that would so lower respect of those things that our people have so prized in life as to offer American citizenship to somebody that will come here and give us some information about some other people—even his own people; in other words, we will give the sorriest man in the world citizenship if he will be a dirty spy.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TACKETT. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. To show you how easy it is for one of these spies to cover up, 135 years after the close of the Revolutionary War the British Government published a record that showed that Bancroft, Benjamin Franklin's secretary, while he was in France, was a British spy, and when Franklin would send him over to England to get information, instead of getting information, he would give information to the enemy.

It would be very easy for these spies who would come in under this kind of a provision to undermine this country and to take back the secrets that we are trying to protect.

Mr. TACKETT. I want to ask someone, if it is not too big a secret to tell, do we need 2,500 men who happen to live in Europe or on some other portion of this globe outside this country? Do we need them, have we run out of people to serve in our Army, is it necessary for us to have a hired army, or is it the fact that you are just trying to get some information by luring someone into believing that they should tell on their own people in turn for American citizenship?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TACKETT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does not the gentleman realize that in America there are a great many refugees from countries behind the iron curtain? There are thousands of them that have left their country because the government has changed and the entire life of the country has changed. They have ideas like we have, and it is those people that we would like to have in our Army, people who are thoroughly screened and who understand the situation in parts of the world where we have very meagre knowledge.

Mr. TACKETT. Why does not this bill say that?

Mr. JOHNSON. The bill could not spell all those things out, in the very nature of things, but that is what the situation is. I want to point out one thing, if I may. Some people seem to be so jittery about foreigners. Sitting right in this Congress, one out of every six men and women in this House of Representatives is the son or the daughter of an immigrant. Their parents were good American citizens. We think the screening process provided by our bill will guarantee beyond any question that these soldiers will be 100 percent American.

Mr. TACKETT. Well, I do not know that that is anything to be all elated over. The fact is, though I do not know but maybe we have two or three people here who are descendants from American Indians. I guess the rest of us come from somewhere; I do not know where. That is not the argument. My goodness alive, 150 years ago a lot of your people did some things that maybe you would not be proud of or I would not be proud of, I do not know, but that is the poorest argument I ever heard of.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from California to the fact that we had some of these refugees from behind the iron curtain, especially a couple of Eislers. When we turned the spotlight onto them we found that they were Communists, traitors to this country. Gerhardt Eisler is over there now leading a Communist drive in Germany.

Mr. TACKETT. I know if these 2,500 people are all perfect, and if General whoever he is is going to personally look after them, and he can keep his hands right on them and not make one mistake, it will be a wonderful idea, because we can get some good information from some other countries from some fellow that is willing to sell his own people down the river. At the same time, if you make one mistake, it will cost you a lot more than you will gain by taking in these 2,500 people.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I can recognize and appreciate the differences of opinion that arise about this proposed legislation. I especially appreciate the fact that so much of the opposition to this proposed legislation that has been expressed today, openly and privately, comes from my section of the country. I have always prided myself and my section, justly or unjustly, and that is neither here nor there, on the fact that when it came to real patriotism in this country my section had no superior. Therefore, I can understand the alarm and the concern of my friends and colleagues, as I say, particularly from my section. But now let us see where we are on this proposed legislation.

This is nothing new, to begin with, about having aliens in our armed forces. Why, in the very birth of this country, who contributed more, aside from George Washington, than the gentleman from France, Mr. Lafayette? Who contributed more in taking our green enlistees and turning them into trained soldiers than Von Steuben, of Germany? Who contributed more than Pulaski, of Poland, to whom monuments have been erected in this country?

Aside from that, modern warfare is conducted in modern times on a different basis, when every resource, when every technique has to be resorted to in order to win that war. We live in a small world, a world that has shrunk to a very small sphere compared with what it was a few years ago. We live in one world, whether we like it or do not like it. As far as I am personally concerned, and I have often said this, I should like to follow the admonition of the great father of this country to beware of these foreign alliances and entanglements and live within ourselves. If it were not for the smallness of this world today, I would be the rankest isolationist in this body. I should like to get away from all of that. But we have to face conditions as they are.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I appreciate the courtesy of my friend.

The chairman of the Committee on Armed Services says he would be glad to take the State Department out of this. I, too, have criticized the State Department, but the State Department, is put into this picture because it is the one agency that is best set up and qualified to screen these people who are going to be taken into the armed forces. If there is a better agency that can be set up, then substitute that when you have the bill on the floor.

Modern warfare, as I started to say, has changed. Conditions have changed over there. We have to have confidence in somebody. My first impression, when this legislation was brought up before the Committee on Rules, was to oppose it. As a layman, as a civilian, as a Member of Congress, I cannot say what we should have or should not have in our armed services. But when the Chief of Staff of the Army of the United States says that this is what we need, and that they want it, so that they can guard them and watch them and screen them, and if they commit sabotage against this country or prove unfaithful, they will be subject to court martial, I cannot argue against it.

Let us not get unduly excited about this. If, after giving mature judgment and consideration to this, you do not believe that it is a wise, patriotic thing to do for our country, then vote against it. But let us not get into hysteria on the question.

Mr. RICH. Can you place more confidence in a foreigner than you can in an American citizen?

Mr. COLMER. Of course not, my friend, of course not. That is not the issue here. The issue is simply whether we have enough confidence in those in charge of our armed services and the national defense to give them the weapons to properly defend this country. They say that they can best do that job by having these trained aliens, familiar with certain countries of Europe, the habits and secrets of the people and the governments of those countries, in our armed service.

The Chief of Staff and his fellow officers are trained in warfare. I am a layman. I am forced to rely on their judgment.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I did not think I was going to ask for a roll-call vote on the rule or on the bill itself, but after listening to the debate here and not hearing one reason why we should have this measure passed, I certainly am going to ask for a roll call on both the rule and the bill.

One thing has come out here. While General Collins, I believe, did come up and request this bill, there is nothing in the record where the Department of Defense or where Mr. Johnson or any of them came up and requested such a thing as this. I do not think anyone can dispute that some of these foreign boys would like to come into this country and get benefits forever under such a law as this. They would be happy to join the colors in order to receive these benefits as technical master sergeants and as specialists—benefits which they would get for the rest of their lives. Naturally they will join the American flag and perhaps it may be that some of them may turn over the information they receive as a result of holding these technical positions to the enemy.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Illinois pays so much attention to Mr. Johnson, I want to call his attention to what Mr. Johnson said:

As indicated the Department of the Army testifies in support of the proposed legislation. In so testifying, the Army is representing the views of the Department as a whole.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes; that is right; that is the department as a whole.

With regard to the quota of enlistments, there are now many American boys who want to join the American Army. If you add these 2,500 that will be denying 2,500 American boys the right to serve under the American flag, boys who will probably do a much better job than some of these foreigners. I appreciate that under the bill that anyone opposing this bill will not have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMAS). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALLEN of Illinois and Mr. RICH) there were—ayes 73, noes 17.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and I make the point of order that a quorum is not preesnt.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 232, nays 61, not voting 137, as follows:

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION ACT, 1950

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 8567) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause]. The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. CANNON, MAHON, THOMAS, WHITTEN, TABER, and WIGGLESWORTH.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the bill H. R. 8567 have until 12 o'clock tonight to submit a conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

ENLISTMENT OF ALIENS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2269) to provide for the enlistment of aliens in the Regular Army.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2269, with Mr. CARROLL in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] raised the question that the bill did not have the approval of the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Johnson. I desire to call to the attention of the committee the fact that in a letter dated January 25, 1950, written to me by the Secretary of the Army, the Secretary had this to say:

> The Secretary of Defense has delegated to this department the responsibility of expressing the views of the Department of Defense. The Department of the Army favors the enactment of H. R. 5140 subject to the amendments hereinafter recommended.

So the committee can understand this is a departmental bill recommended by the Department of Defense and the responsibility for its consideration was given to the Department of the Army.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the chairman please advise the committee whether the vote on the bill in committee was unanimous?

Mr. VINSON. I point out to the Committee that after two or three hearings, after Senator LODGE, the author of the bill, appeared in person, after General Collins had testified in open hearings as well as in executive session, after thorough debate in committee, the Committee on Armed Services made a unanimous recommendation in support of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, in view of what has been said, I propose to offer an amendment to strike out the wording with reference to the Secretary of State. I am not sharing, by offering that amendment, in some of the criticisms that have been made of the Secretary of State or his department, but I am eliminating the opportunity that the retention of those words in the bill might give to some as a ground for objection.

So the bill will read, if that amendment is agreed to, "With the approval of the Secretary of the Army."

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Did the Committee on Armed Services unanimously agree to the State Department doing the screening of everyone? Is it my understanding that the Armed Services Committee wanted the State Department to do all the screening and the final approval?

Mr. VINSON. If the gentleman from Illinois has the idea that the State Department does any screening, he is in error.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Did your committee unanimously approve doing the screening as the gentleman from California mentioned, when he said you had unanimously reported the bill?

Mr. VINSON. The whole theory of the bill is that all the screening and the selection and the enlisting shall be done by the Department of the Army. So I will offer an amendment at the proper time to strike from this bill "the Secretary of State," giving complete control of this legislation to the Department of the Army. That will eliminate the objection that some have made to the bill.

Then, I will also offer an amendment on page 3 of the bill to strike out the words "or earlier." The effect of that is this: Under the committee amendment, before anyone could get citizenship, he must be ordered to this country and must have served honorably for 5 years or have received an honorable discharge at the end of the enlistment or at an earlier date. So we will offer an amendment to strike out "or earlier." The effect of that is that he must serve not less than 5 years, must be honorably discharged, and he must be ordered to the United States. If he is not ordered to the United States, it makes no difference how long he serves, he never can become a citizen of the United States.

Now, let us be realistic about this. Suppose a certain alien is recruited in the Army from a country in Europe. He never comes to this country. He never becomes a citizen of the United States. If he is never ordered here, he does not become a citizen of the United States. If he is ordered here, and if he is otherwise qualified and has served 5 years honorably, then he is eligible for citizenship.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. After 5 years can he take out his first papers, or does he automatically become a citizen?

Mr. VINSON. He must qualify after that, just like everyone else.

Mr. STEFAN. In other words, he will have to wait 5 years more before becoming a citizen?

Mr. VINSON. No.

Mr. STEFAN. Then, he automatically becomes a citizen. I am afraid the gentleman did not clarify that. After 5 years he takes out his first papers, does he? Under the regular immigration laws an alien takes out his first papers.

Mr. VINSON. He gets the same benefits automatically that the wartime alien received.

Mr. STEFAN. That would be 1 year, then.

Mr. VINSON. Yes. That is all the benefit he gets.

Mr. STEFAN. Then, after 5 years, the 1-year provision applies?

Mr. VINSON. Yes. Now, all this bill does is to permit the Department of the Army to recruit 2,500 people, to recruit them for a period of 3 years. They must be between the ages of 18 and 35.

Let me call your attention to this: The demands of modern war and of modern military machines for highly technical, scientific, professional, and specially trained individuals are insatiable. The time has passed when a general practitioner in the art of warfare will suffice. The military now is a grouping of vast numbers of specially trained technicians in every field of human endeavor.

This high degree of specialization and our world-wide interests, risks, and obligations have produced this program. It will open to our Army opportunities for obtaining exceptionally well qualified persons in fields which cannot be fully satisfied through our own manpower resources. Persons such as skilled linguists, persons who comprehend foreign customs, temperament, and psychology, who are intimately familiar with the terrain and local geographic features of various areas in the world, will be of extreme value to our Army and yet very difficult to obtain solely from among American citizens. It is such people that this bill contemplates will be admitted into our Army.

That is the whole purpose of the legislation, and it is also safeguarded as to citizenship.

With the number admissible so limited—only 2,500—there can be no doubt that those admitted will be of the very highest caliber and of the finest abilities. Because of these considerations the Army Chief of Staff, who appeared before our committee both in open and in executive session on this bill, is very eager for the early enactment of this measure in order to get this important program promptly under way.

Now, there is another important provision in this bill. It is section 4, appearing on page 3 of the bill.

This section will qualify for American citizenship, within certain limitations, the persons who enter the Army under this program.

In order to qualify, these persons must first enter the United States pursuant to military orders. In other words, the Army must order them into the United States before they may qualify for citizenship.

So, here is the situation on that: The alien enlists overseas if acceptable in all respects to the Army. He cannot get to the United States unless the Army orders him here. If the Army does not order him here, he can never become an American citizen in this program. He will remain an alien in our service abroad until and unless the Army terminates his service or he refuses to reenlist.

So you see when he enlists abroad he must be ordered by the Army to come here before the benefit of citizenship can be given to him. The Army can keep him 5 years in his Army enlistment abroad, and he gets no benefit as far as citizenship is concerned, but if the Army orders him here, he qualifies for citizenship and needs only to file a petition of naturalization, or if he and his witnesses are examined by a representative of the Army they may be naturalized immediately. Even then he must have completed 5 years of service before he can qualify.

I think that gives the committee all the information. There is nothing in this bill to get excited about. The Department of the Army sponsors it; General Collins is asking for it; and I think it is a bill that will strengthen the Army. It is a bill that will not permit the Army to have saddled upon it some 2,500 Communists enlisting in the services.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has consumed 12 minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Chairman, when this legislation was first proposed to our committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] and myself both hit the ceiling. To say that we were surprised is putting it very mildly. Naturally, one would think of foreign legions, of hired Hessians, and wonder if we have reached such a low level in this country that red-blooded Americans are not any longer willing to face danger and, if necessary, die for their country but would have to depend on foreign mercenaries. That was one of the things that caused us some apprehension in the beginning.

Another was the thought if we would bring in the original number asked for, 25,000, we might get enough rotten apples in the barrel of our own Army to contaminate our patriotic American soldier. That danger still exists to some extent because if we are frank and honest with you we will have to admit that this measure carries some calculated risk.

We run a risk when we bring aliens into our Army. They, I think, run an even greater risk because they give notice to their native countries as well as to America that their head is in a noose and they will have to exercise not only extreme caution but prove through trial under close surveillance, after being carefully screened, and combed with a fine-tooth comb, that they are loyal and patriotic to the Army in which they have entered.

We all know of the deplorable state of affairs in Europe following the last global conflict, the complete destruction and utter devastation, the hopelessness and despair existing among the masses of the people. We know there are many people who because their forms of government have been changed, who because they suffered such political upheaval, social chaos and economic dislocation who now live in slavery and fear, would welcome the opportunity of entering the service of the United States Army in the hope of some day receiving citizenship, perhaps the greatest prize that could be offered to a distressed people in any section of this world.

Modern mechanized warfare is no longer a simple matter. It is highly complex and technical. Some of us here who visited the great underground factory at Nordhausen in Germany 3 or 4 weeks before the surrender of the Reich went through 33 miles of subterranean passages where the V-1 and V-2 bombs were being manufactured. We had witnessed the appalling destruction in both London and Antwerp that was done by these missiles of death. We will have to frankly admit that in many respects the Germans were scientifically ahead of us, not only when it came to making up these bombs of destruction but also in the development of submarines of the snorkel type.

If we can get some good German scientists, Czech engineers, and Balt brains, if we can get some men of high technical skill—men who love freedom as most of the Polish loved it—we might use them to advantage, and do not forget the magnificent contribution that the Polish volunteers in the last war made to the winning of our victory, particularly in Italy. Do not forget even what the Japanese out in Hawaii contributed in the same country—in Italy—in bringing victory to the American forces.

Look at the two portraits before you. George Washington, a British subject, led our American Revolution and Lafayette, a citizen of France, helped him win our independence. We do not have to question the patriotism of any of these foreigners or aliens who are willing to join us because of their comparable political background, because of their love of freedom, because of their devotion to liberty, because of their similar philosophy of life. Many of them are without a home or country and would not have to betray their native land.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the gentleman kindly add the Italians who joined the Fifth Army to help us fight in Italy and Germany?

Mr. SHORT. Not only the Italians who joined the Fifth Army but the underground in France and every other country invaded. Now, I think we learned, particularly you men here who were in active combat—certainly the author of this bill as an officer in the United States Army in Sicily, in north Africa, and in Italy—he learned through his own experience, as has, I am sure, our friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT], out in the Pacific war—we learned the lesson in Africa, in Europe, in the Pacific, wherever men fought that if we had had the advantage and the benefit of certain skills, knowledge of the language, knowledge of the topography, the geography, the terrain, the conditions in a particular area to be invaded, we would have saved many, many American lives. It is all a question of intelligence and it is all a question of knowing not only how strong you are but how strong or weak your enemy is; and if we take 2,500 men, which are not many when they are dispersed, but integrated among over 600,000, I think perhaps they will be able to give their commanders certain knowledge in the event of conflict and before invasion that will save many, many American lives.

Let us be honest. This is a dirty business, but war is dirty. It is dangerous business, but war is dangerous. So while I was inclined at the beginning to vigorously oppose this bill, and while there are aspects to it that are repugnant to the conscience of any decent human being, I am convinced, after we sat on the bill and after we heard the representatives of both the State and Defense Departments, the bill should be passed. Because we do have to have a State Department—I hope—that Members will not allow any preconceived notions or prejudices to have too much weight as they consider this particular measure. We have our foreign embassies in all countries. We have our military and naval attachés. I think that today the Department of Defense and the Department of State must work more closely in unison and integration and cohesion than ever before. This last war taught us that lesson. But, whether you leave the State Department in the bill or take it out, I think that on the whole the measure is meritorious and should be passed in the interest of the security and the defense of the United States.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Are we taking a new step today or is there any precedent in American history for an act of this kind?

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer that question.

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GAVIN. I might call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that during the war years of 1941 to 1945 we had 117,000 aliens in the service of the Armed Forces, so there is nothing new in this legislation before us today. We have already established the precedent of enlisting aliens into the Armed Forces.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. It is a well-known fact that after World War I and World War II we granted citizenship to aliens who aided us to win both World Wars.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. While that statement is true, the fact should be pointed out that these so-called aliens, I prefer to use the term foreign born, who were residing in the United States and were called into the Army did not set up the fact that they were not citizens, but went in and served and served honorably and well for our country, and that is why they became citizens of the United States later. But this is a different situation. These are people who are living abroad and are not living in the United States and will become merely paid hirelings, present-day Hessians.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that this involves the same principle and is the same thing seamen had. There are laws on the statute books today that an alien seaman can get citizenship after 5 years of service on a ship. The identical thing is in this bill.

Mr. SHORT. May I also call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the language on page 2, lines 5 to 8:

Persons enlisted under the provisions of this act shall be integrated into established units with citizen soldiers and not segregated into separate organizations for aliens.

So they are no more citizens than the people who resided for a brief period in the United States before they went into the armed services. A few months of residence makes little difference.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I will tell the gentleman what makes the big difference. It is the fact that a person has migrated to the United States, together with the fact that he has chosen our country as the land in which he wants to live. That man has the right to fight for the United States and should be given citizenship. But there is certainly a big difference between that situation and the situation where you take a hireling abroad and confer citizenship upon him, for what?

Mr. SHORT. I may say to the gentleman, and the gentleman well knows it, and knows it as well or better perhaps than most of us, that there are hundreds of thousands of aliens and foreigners in other countries who have been more eager but less fortunate in getting to the United States than those who are already here.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAVIN. I should like to call to attention of the gentleman my remarks made when this proposal was before the House in June 1948 about people who have no country to turn to. They are stateless people. They cannot go back to their own countries as they have no country to go to. I said at that time:

Now as far as availability of aliens is concerned for enlistment, it might be said there are a considerable number of Polish ex-servicemen; and in Britain alone it is estimated there are about 110,000 of these men. How many are in the United States and British zones of Germany who could be enlisted in our Armed Forces, I am unable to say. But I understand there are thousands of these stateless men and that a great many are being used by our forces for civilian guard duty.

There are also a great number of males from the Baltic States—Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania—and some from Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, who are most reliable and are potential soldiers. Many of these men have basic military training and are well qualified to serve in our Army.

So it is not a question of taking them into this country, they have no country to go to.

Here we have a group of men who are stateless, who would be anxious to enlist in the services of the United States; who understand the characteristics and language of the country in which they would serve; who would be good soldiers and do a fine job for us. In fact, we have used them in a civilian status. I think this legislation is of great importance and will give us an opportunity to tap this reservoir of manpower desirous of enlisting in our services.

This would give these soldiers and prospective citizens something to work for, and during the 5-year period we could indoctrinate them with the fundamentals of Americanism and good citizenship. If after rendering honorable service and found qualified, they would be in excellent condition to make good sound American citizens. I think this is a great opportunity and this bill should pass overwhelmingly.

Mr. SHORT. God forbid that there should be another conflict, but if we are forced into it, I hope that when we invade certain sections of the world we will have some people, a few, just a few, from those regions who do speak the language, who do know the country, and who know conditions, and can advise our commanders intelligently as to the problems they are going to face when they go in there and take over. That is the purpose of this bill.

There is little that anyone else, I think, could add to what our chairman has already given you. It is something that we cannot tell you everything about. We would like to talk about it, but, as I said once in connection with the consideration of similar legislation, perhaps the least we said about this in public the better off we all would be.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The gentleman is familiar with General MacArthur's island-hopping program in the Pacific?

Mr. SHORT. Very.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Were it not for the fact he had aliens who knew the terrain, location of bridges, and so forth, on the islands under attack, he would have lost thousands upon thousands of lives.

Mr. SHORT. There is no doubt about that. I think it is an accurate historical and military fact that has been established.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. REES. The thing that disturbs me is that you have to put them in the United States Army to get the information you are talking about. Can you not secure the information without having to take these people and putting them in the United States Army to get that information which we are discussing now and which was mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania? These people who gave us the information that he talks about were not in our armed forces, were they?

Mr. SHORT. No; but if they fought side by side with us and were a part of us, we would perhaps receive even greater help. If the thing does not become too top-heavy it would work out, there is your danger.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. In other words, this bill is intended really to make a contribution to our national defense.

Mr. VINSON. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. That is what I gather from the gentleman's speech.

Mr. SHORT. Absolutely. That is the reason we reduced the number to 2,500 because it is more or less a new project. It is going to be a matter of trial and error. If it proves successful then we can expand it and enlarge it. If it does not, we can get rid of it.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. SCRIVNER. What other benefits will these men receive, besides the oportunity to take out American citizenship if they are ordered to this country? I am referring definitely and particularly to veterans' benefits. What will they get?

Mr. SHORT. They will be entitled to the same rights, benefits, privileges, prerogatives and pay as any other enlistee in the United States Army and no more.

Mr. SCRIVNER. That is whether they come over here and take out American citizenship or not?

Mr. SHORT. No; they have to become American citizens and they will not become American citizens unless they are brought to this country.

Mr. SCRIVNER. The bill does not say that.

Mr. SHORT. Yes it does but I dare say that not very many of them will become citizens of the United States.

Mr. VINSON. The bill does say positively that they get no benefits until they become citizens of the United States. When the person becomes a citizen of the United States, he will enjoy every benefit that every other citizen enjoys.

Mr. SHORT. He gets no more and no less.

Mr. SCRIVNER. That still does not answer the question as to what veterans' benefits these men will get whether they become citizens or not.

Mr. VINSON. He gets no benefits until he becomes a citizen. He must become a citizen.

Mr. SCRIVNER. I think the committee should make that exceptionally clear in the bill.

Mr. VINSON. He is an alien until he becomes a citizen, so that he can enjoy any benefits under any of our laws.

Mr. SCRIVNER. He would be a veteran as soon as he is discharged.

Mr. VINSON. He will not be a citizen. He is an alien in every sense of the word until citizenship is conferred upon him.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Then I take it on the word of the chairman that he would not receive any veterans' benefit unless he becomes a citizen?

Mr. VINSON. That is correct.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Now the statement has just been made here that very few of them are going to take out citizenship papers—then where is the great reward that you are talking about in this bill?

Mr. SHORT. They will get the pay of a United States soldier while they are serving for five long years. Some will become citizens but by no means all.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true they will be on probation for about 5 years before being granted citizenship?

Mr. SHORT. Absolutely. And they are watched and checked continually and carefully.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Also they will be under the strict observation of their commanding officer who will have to recommend whether or not they shall be granted citizenship?

Mr. SHORT. They will be combed when they are brought in by the Army and they will be combed by the Department of State as well before they have the rights of citizenship bestowed upon them.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The statement has been made that about 115,000 or 116,000 aliens were in the Army in the last war which just closed, and they were not citizens of the United States, as I understand it. Do they get benefits under the GI bill of rights, the same as men who are citizens of the United States?

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEARNEY], who is a member of the Committee on Veterans Affairs, to answer that question.

Mr. KEARNEY. If they are honorably discharged members of the armed services, they are entitled to the benefits of veterans legislation.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. But under this bill unless they become citizens of the United States they are not entitled to any of the benefits of the GI bill of rights?

Mr. SHORT. That is right.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. What would be the position of the individual soldier in the event that the United States went to war against his country? Does he have to give up any allegiance to his own country while serving under the Stars and Stripes?

Mr. SHORT. Why, certainly, absolutely. If he does not, he would in all probability lose his head if he went back to his own country.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. What does he have to do with regard to serving his allegiance to his own country?

Mr. SHORT. When he goes into the United States Army he pledges allegiance and swears loyalty and fealty to the flag, Constitution, and institutions of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. He takes the oath?

Mr. SHORT. Yes. If he is caught reneging or cheating, of course, it is his neck through court martial in our own forces; or, if he tries to go back to his own country, they would put him before the firing squad the following morning.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Is it not true veterans of World Wars I and II were granted a short cut to citizenship as a result of their honorable service during the wars?

Mr. SHORT. Yes; that is true.

Mr. VELDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. VELDE. Certain mention has been made of possibilities of war. I presume you include in the realm of possibilities a war with Russia. In what way would this help to get information from Russia about various facilities in Russia?

Mr. SHORT. I am hopeful, myself, that several of the Slavic countries behind the iron curtain can furnish us with a few of this quota, because they possess a great deal of knowledge, not only about their own countries behind the iron curtain, but they possess considerable knowledge about Russia itself.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for one further qeustion?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Was there any testimony that this was the beginning of a one-world army?

Mr. SHORT. No. None whatever.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. It is not the forerunner to bring us under one general army?

Mr. SHORT. No, no. I think I can allay the gentleman's fears and apprehensions on that score.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. ELSTON. As a matter of fact, there are three safeguards. First, they must serve 5 years in the Armed Forces of the United States.

Mr. SHORT. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. And, in the second place, they must be sent to this country on orders of military authorities?

Mr. SHORT. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELSTON. And, in the third place, which has not been mentioned, they must otherwise possess all other qualifications of a citizen.

Mr. SHORT. Oh, yes. Yes. Absolutely.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. It is presumed that these men are going to win stripes soon after they get into the American Army? Is that not right?

Mr. SHORT. Yes. I hope so; they will be no good if they do not.

Mr. GROSS. What effect will that have upon the morale of the American Army?

Mr. SHORT. I think the American is willing to compete with anybody at any time, and if he is not willing to do it, then he should be ashamed to call himself an American.

Mr. GROSS. But you are going to bring those men in here and almost automatically bestow stripes on them.

Mr. SHORT. Oh, no. Not at all. They come in as enlisted men, and they serve through the grades. However, I dare say the men who are chosen will be men who possess many skills and specialized knowledge and are much smarter in some ways even than many Americans. I know they are much smarter than I am.

Mr. GROSS. Of course I would not admit that.

Mr. SHORT. And we need that scientific training and technological development. Americans should not think that we have a monopoly on all the wisdom and virtue there is in this world.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. I think the gentleman should make it clear, and the committee should understand, that anyone enlisting now will get no benefits of the GI bill of rights, because they all had to serve during the other war. They apply only during that time, and they get no rights that the GI obtains on account of his service during the war. He would get all benefits of an enlisted man, clothes, rations, pay, and then he cannot get anything until he becomes an American citizen.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Not even peacetime disability pensions?

Mr. VINSON. We have no peacetime disability pensions.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Oh, we most certainly do.

Mr. SHORT. Yes; we have peacetime disability pensions.

Mr. SCRIVNER. The question I want to ask is this: As I read this bill, when these men enlist they are to be unmarried aliens, men without dependents.

Mr. SHORT. Men without dependents; so it will be cheaper.

Mr. SCRIVNER. How long will they have to remain unmarried and without dependents? There is nothing in the bill which says how long they shall remain so.

Mr. SHORT. During his term of enlistment, I should think.

Mr. VINSON. No. You cannot enlist anyone unless he is a single man.

Mr. SCRIVNER. But he can enlist today and get married the next day and develop a line of dependents, and in 5 years he could have at least three.

Mr. VINSON. They could not do that without permission of the service.

Mr. SCRIVNER. There is nothing in the bill that says so.

Mr. VINSON. He cannot do it, because that is during the term of his enlistment.

Mr. SHORT. That is my understanding.

Mr. SCRIVNER. There is not any bar on it.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes to clear up this matter.

Anyone serving outside of the United States cannot get married without the permission of the commanding officer under whom he serves. That applies to citizens, and it will apply in cases of this kind.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Let us follow that a little. Here, for instance, the enlistee could be the elder son or any son of the family; the parent dies; he has four or five brothers and sisters dependent upon him. If they are actual dependents he is entitled to benefits for them under the pay bill, just the same as our men are.

Mr. VINSON. He would be entitled as an enlisted man to any benefits other enlisted men in the Army are entitled to.

Mr. SCRIVNER. That is just exactly what I figured.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. GROSS. The gentleman predicates his answer on overseas service. There is nothing in this bill that states that the man will be in overseas service or any part of it.

Mr. VINSON. He has to enlist from overseas, and he is kept overseas until the Army orders him here.

Mr. GROSS. The bill does not say so.

Mr. VINSON. Then if he is ordered here, after serving 5 years honorably, he is eligible for citizenship. That is all the bill does.

Mr. GROSS. But this bill makes no such provision.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT].

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the committee said this was not a bill to get excited about, and I am not going to get excited about it; but I am opposed to the bill, and I want to explain briefly the reasons for my opposition.

Last year, if you will recall, out of this same committee we passed a bill to permit the CIC—I believe that is right, anyway the intelligence forces—to bring in 100 persons; they could bring in anyone they wanted to. It was thought at that time and it was argued at that time that such would take care of the emergency cases of persons furnishing information to the armed services. Recently, in this session of Congress—and I want the gentleman to follow me here—recently, in this session of Congress we passed the Walter bill for selective immigration, and we provided that a board should be set up composed of a representative from each of Commerce, State, Justice, Labor, and the armed services—five on this board—to pick 2,500 per year. They could just give an immigration visa to any person they wanted, regardless of who he was or his place in line. That would take care of persons of peculiar skills or those whom we thought might be of service to this country.

My opposition to this bill is that it is a new gadget, of which we have too many already, for obtaining American citizenship. My guess is that if this bill should become law probably a million aliens would like to enlist, because it certainly would be a bonanza for them; the emoluments and privileges of service in the American Army certainly exceed those of most jobs and professions abroad. I am just a little tired of passing legislation year in and year out, multitudinous legislation, because some general in the armed services, or some secretary comes in and says, "We need it; we want it." I do not know the parentage of this particular bill, but I fear it is ill-conceived.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSSETT. I yield.

Mr. VINSON. I certainly trust the gentleman will not try to convey the thought to this committee that we 35 men are pushed around by generals because they just want this or just want that done. If there is any committee of Congress that is independent and that is independent in its thinking, it is the Armed Services Committee.

Mr. GOSSETT. I concede to my good friend that he has a very distinguished committee; but, unfortunately, the committees of this Congress—and that applies to all of us—generally tend to lean too heavily upon the bureaus and agencies whose business they handle.

Mr. VINSON. This committee does not do it; this committee does its own thinking. That is the reason why we are oftentimes in controversy with the departments.

Mr. GOSSETT. And there are some members of the gentleman's committee who are not very well sold on this bill, I might say, notwithstanding the atmosphere of unanimity the gentleman seeks to throw around it.

What I am trying to say is that we have already taken care of this situation in the bill passed last year and in the bill now pending in the other body.

And let me make this point: The distinguished Member of the other body who authored this bill, after his return from Europe, recommended the discharge of all aliens in the State Department. Now he wants to employ aliens abroad in the American Army.

Reference has been made here to the citizenship provisions that we extended to aliens serving in wartime. Those were aliens resident in this country.

This bill sets up a complete new departure from any policy that has ever heretofore been followed in this country, and I submit it is a dangerous policy, a needless policy, an unnecessary policy, and that we should not pass this type of legislation.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSSETT. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. There is another thing that disturbs me. Under this bill, we are holding out to a foreigner, a man who lives in a foreign country, the promise that, if he will relinquish his citizenship, his allegiance to his own country, then he can join the American Army and have the benefits same as our armed forces. It seems to me it is a rather strange situation when we have to go through this process to protect ourselves and our country against a potential enemy or an enemy we think we may have later on. We tell a fellow in some foreign country who joins our forces that, in the event we have to go to war with his country or any country, "You must give up all of your rights and relinquish your citizenship and join the American Army."

Mr. GOSSETT. We are asking the man to forswear his allegiance, assuming thereby we will make him a better servant of our own.

Mr. REES. Which to me is a rather strange situation, especially considering this is a peacetime measure.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSSETT. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. In answer to the gentleman from Kansas, my viewpoint would be that a great many people are in countries that are dominated by outside countries, and therefore this gives an opportunity to serve where he feels he can be of some benefit.

Mr. GOSSETT. We are not setting up the American Army as an escape avenue for people who may want to run away from their own country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas this question: Is it not a fact that a similar kind of provision exists in reference to serving by aliens under the seamen's law?

Mr. GOSSETT. That is true, and I think that act ought to be repealed. It is bad legislation.

Mr. VINSON. I have a copy of it before me. We are doing no more by this bill than is already on the statute books in reference to serving on ships as seamen, is that not correct?

Mr. GOSSETT. That is correct, but one bad law does not justify another bad law. These persons who are going to foreswear and repudiate allegiance to their own country would not be the sort of individual we would want to make an American citizen. That is the sort of person you are inviting by this legislation. If he is not a good citizen of the country for which he refuses to fight and the country that he deserts, he is not going to be a very good citizen of this country.

Let me remind the committee that this bill obligates us, as a matter of fact, to give the enlisted alien citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the committee's attention to the fact that for 10 years there has been on the statute books an act providing that aliens who volunteer, and serve honorably for a period of 3 years on our ships at sea, automatically get citizenship if their service has been satisfactory. So what is the use of getting disturbed about this legislation?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does not the statute provide that these seamen must have been lawfully admitted?

Mr. VINSON. No; it does not provide that at all. He is not even admitted. He enlists when the ship goes abroad and he makes a contract and serves for 3 years. We already have a law like this, and everybody is getting excited about extending almost the same provisions to the Army.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. The big point is that the people we propose to enlist are without a country. They are all over there in the occupied areas.

Mr. VINSON. That is it exactly.

Mr. JOHNSON. They cannot go back to the Baltics and the other countries.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, if there are no further requests for time, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, with the approval of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Army, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Army may prescribe, is authorized until June 30, 1951, to accept original enlistments in the Regular Army for periods of not less than 5 years of not to exceed 10,000 qualified unmarried aliens (without dependents as defined in sec. 4 of the act of June 16, 1942 (56 Stat. 361), as amended), who are not less than 18 years of age or more than 35 years of age; and, with the approval of the Secretary of State, to accept reenlistment of any such alien upon the expiration of his original term of enlistment for such period or periods as the Secretary of the Army may determine.

SEC. 2. Provisions of law prohibiting the payment of any person not a citizen of the United States shall neither apply to aliens who enlist in the Regular Army under the provisions of section 1 of this act nor to their dependents and beneficiaries.

SEC. 3. So much of section 2 of the act approved August 1, 1894 (28 Stat., chs. 179, 216; 10 U. S. C. 625), as amended, as reads "; and in time of peace no person (except an Indian) who is not a citizen of the United States or who has not made legal declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, shall be enlisted for the first enlistment in the Army" is hereby suspended until June 30, 1951, with respect to enlistments made under section 1 of this act.

SEC. 4. Notwithstanding the periods set forth therein, the provisions of section 324A of the Nationality Act of 1940, as added by the act of June 1, 1948 (Public Law 567, 80th Cong.), are applicable to aliens enlisted or reenlisted pursuant to the provisions of this act. Any alien enlisted or reenlisted pursuant to the provisions of this act who subsequently enters the United States or an outlying possession thereof (including the Panama Canal Zone, but excluding the Philippine Islands) pursuant to military orders shall be deemed to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence within the meaning of such section 324A.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "enlistments", insert "or reenlistments."

Page 1, line 8, strike out "ten thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred."

Page 2, line 5, after the colon, insert "Provided, That persons enlisted under the provisions of this act shall be integrated into, established units with citizen soldiers and not segregated into separate organizations for aliens."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 10, after the word "shall", insert the following: "if otherwise, qualified for citizenship, and after completion of five or more years of military service, or earlier if honorably discharged therefrom."

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON to the committee amendment:

Page 3, line 11, strike out the words "or earlier."

The amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINSON:

On page 1, strike out lines 3 and 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the Secretary of the Army, under such regulations as the Secretary of."

And on page 2, strike out lines 1 and 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "35 years of age, and to accept reenlistment of any such alien upon."

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that this is the language that I offered to strike out, so that no one has any authority over this except the Secretary of the Army.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully to the debate on this particular phase of this bill, that is, that part of it which relates to the Department of State. I hope the gentleman will withdraw this amendment, and I will tell you why. The United States has about 300 missions scattered over the world today. They are expected to be our first line of defense. In each of these missions we have the chief. He is the sole representative of the United States in that part of the world. Under him we have various employees who are the eyes and ears of our Government. In some of these missions we have military, naval, and air attachés. All foreign affairs and contacts with foreign governments must be cleared through these missions and eventually through the Department of State at home. These missions handle all of our foreign problems including the questions of immigration. This bill is in part a problem of immigration but mainly it is part of the stockpiling against a probable future emergency. It stockpiles men into our service. The Chief of National Defense and the Chief of our Army say it is necessary. That is a must in the plans for future defense. But the plans for future defense is an all-inclusive one. It brings together not only the armed services but our Foreign Service and the State Department are on this defense team. Each is part of the defense wheel and the Foreign Service and the State Department are most important spokes in this wheel. The amendment of the chairman of the Armed Services Committee is dangerous because it tears out two important spokes and entirely bypasses the State Department which now deals with these problems of aliens in foreign lands who want to come to our country. No matter what any of you think personally about the Secretary of State or the State Department I urge you to vote against this amendment. This country must have a good Department of State and a good Foreign Service and neither should be bypassed in legislation dealing with our serious defense problems. If we want teamwork do not start breaking up the team with amendments such as this one.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON. I would say in response to the gentleman's observation that the State Department further than being mentioned in this bill is bound to be in the picture. The State Department under the National Security Act is in all phases of the Army, Navy, and Air defenses. Under that act they are conversant with each other. Even though you leave out the Secretary of State, no man, I am satisfied, would be enlisted unless the Secretary of State was cognizant of the importance of these various enlistments. So I do not think it would hurt to leave out that phrase. The reason the gentleman has just advanced was the reason we put it in, but the gentleman heard the debate.

Mr. STEFAN. I have heard the debate, and I think it is a dangerous precedent you are setting by your amendment.

Mr. VINSON. It might be. So let us do this. The committee heard the debate. If the committee want to leave it out, let them leave it out. If they want to keep it in, let them keep it in. It is immaterial to me. The committee wanted it in, but to meet certain objections that were being raised to this bill I offer this amendment to give the committee an opportunity to decide on it. Now, if they want to vote it out, let them vote it out, but let us vote on it.

Mr. STEFAN. In spite of my admiration for the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, I must oppose his amendment. It shows lack of confidence of a very important part of our national defense team.

I urge the Committee to vote against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALLEN of Illinos) there were—ayes 14, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOSSETT: On page 1, line 9, after the word "unmarried", insert "male."

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Chairman, we accept the amendment. It was never intended that anyone except male aliens would be enlisted in the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARROLL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2269) to provide for the enlistment of aliens in the Regular Army, pursuant to House Resolution 649, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ALLEN of Illinois) there were—ayes 80, noes 21.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 201, nays 84, not voting 145, as follows:

STILL FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A still further message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution extending the period of effectiveness of the Selective Service Act of 1948 15 days.

EXTENDING SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution

190, extending the period of effectiveness of the Selective Service Act of 1948 15 days.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I realize if I objected to the present consideration of the resolution, a rule would be obtained and it would be called up tomorrow. That would only inconvenience the membership so that they would have to come back here tomorrow when I understand it is intended that we adjourn over until Monday.

Therefore, nothing would be accomplished by objecting at this time except to delay the matter 24 hours.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. In order that the RECORD might show that the assumption of the gentleman from New York is correct, I will state that that is correct.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I thank the gentleman. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the present consideration of the resolution. However, I want the RECORD to show my consistent and conscientious opposition to any form of selective-service legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 190), as follows:

Resolved, etc., That subsection (b) of section 17 of the Selective Service Act of 1948 as amended by striking out "the second anniversary of the date of enactment of this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "July 9, 1950."

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

SIGNING OF ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House it may be in order for the Clerk to receive any messages from the Senate, and the Speaker be authorized to sign any enrolled bills and joint resolutions duly passed by both Houses and found truly enrolled.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATTERSON (at the request of Mr. MICHENER) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. PETERSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a citation issued to his colleague, Mr. BENNETT of Florida.

Mr. TEAGUE (at the request of Mr. PRIEST) was given permission to extend his remarks in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. WICKERSHAM (at the request of Mr. PRIEST) was given permission to extend his remarks.

Mr. DAVENPORT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

Mr. DONOHUE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.

PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. I would like to inquire of the majority leader if he can advise as to the program for next week.

Mr. McCORMACK. I should be very glad to do so.

Monday is District Day. There are seven bills on the District Committee agenda. I am not sure if they will be called up in this order, but I am stating them in the following order for the information of the House.

H. R. 2887, known as the architect's registration bill.

H. R. 6669, the rent control bill.

H. R. 7881, known as the dead human bodies bill.

H. R. 8055, relating to banks, demand items.

H. R. 8709, relating to the health officer and assistant.

H. R. 8710, relating to the Eastern High School Stadium.

H. R. 8782, relating to nurseries and nursery schools.

On Monday we are hopeful that the Rules Committee will report out a rule making in order consideration of the tax bill. I have no knowledge now what period of time the rule will provide for, but upon the assumption that there will be 2 days' debate, then the tax bill will be taken up Tuesday and Wednesday. Of course, Wednesday is primary day in Georgia, and in accordance with the policy of respecting that in the case of all States, if the program is carried out, the roll call will take place on Thursday. If we are not fortunate enough to have the Rules Committee report out a rule on Monday—and I hope it will—and they report it out later in the week, of course the tax bill will come up next week.

Any conference reports, of course, are always in order for consideration. That is subject to giving the membership proper notice, if they are important ones.

Any further program I will announce later on, if there is any for next week.

I would like to get in as much as I can next week because, while I cannot make any definite commitment now, I am hopeful that the week of July 4 will be a very light one. The only difficulty may be the conference report on the selective-service legislation. We have extended it until July 9, which is on a Sunday, as the Senate passed the resolution. I am hopeful that if there is any requirement for a conference that the conferees may be able to iron out their differences next week.

Mr HALLECK. Of course since the 9th of July does come on Sunday and would be the expiration date of the 15-day extension just passed, might it not be possible that another temporary extension could be had, that would not necessitate the presence of all Members during the Fourth of July week?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly. That could be done. I am glad the gentleman from Indiana referred to it, because that is a very proper contribution to make. In other words, if the conferees cannot get together next week and there is a prolonged conference, both branches could provide for a further extension of time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I have asked the gentleman to yield in view of the statement made relative to a possible rule being granted in connection with the tax bill. I have just informed the majority leader and the minority leader that both the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the ranking Republican member have informed me that they will request a rule for 2 days' debate on the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am very glad to get that information. I did not have that information and my announcement of the program was predicated upon the assumption which the gentleman kindly confirms.

Mr. HALLECK. I might say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that, of course, I am in complete accord with the arrangement in respect to the Members from Georgia and their primary on next Wednesday. It just so happens, however, that out in Indiana both parties are having their State conventions, which is a matter of some consequence to all of us from Indiana.

I take it the leadership will be seeking a closed rule on the tax bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. If that is granted, then on Thursday the business would simply be calling the roll on the motion to recommit and the passage of the bill, if a roll call should develop.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

I find it difficult at times to make a program that will be pleasing to everyone, but I am sure the Members know I do my best to have the program of the House that will be pleasing as far as humanly possible to the membership on both sides. If by meeting an hour earlier on Thursday next it would be of assistance I would be glad to do it, and I am sure that the membership of the House would concur in such action.

Mr. HALLECK. I was on the point of suggesting, in view of the situation of the Georgia Members with respect to their returning to Washington and other Members who would be away, that it would be a good thing. I am glad the majority leader has that in mind, because I am convinced that it would be of considerable assistance to the Members.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman from Indiana desires that, I hope he will confer with me next week.

Mr. HALLECK. Yes; I shall be glad to do that, and I may say to the gentleman that I am glad to hear his announcement for the week of the 4th of July. We have been working here quite steadily, and as far as I can discover, the House is right well up with its work.

Mr. McCORMACK. The House has been most cooperative. I have expressed my appreciation before, and I cannot emphasize it too strongly. We are caught up, and I do not know of anything now which will not permit an exceedingly light week, if there be anything at all for the week of the Fourth. But, of course, I would like just a slight leeway to protect myself, because I feel obligated to carry out any absolute statement I make to the House. I should like a slight leeway in case something should develop.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the majority leader if under the circumstances that he has presented the rule is granted and the tax bill is considered on Tuesday and Wednesday and the vote should go over until Thursday, would the vote be the first order of business on Thursday?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly; the vote would be the first order of business on Thursday.

Mr. HALLECK. Then, I take it, unless something develops in the meantime, that the House would adjourn over until the following Monday.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is my intention, of course; that is always my intention, and the House has always cooperated where it could be carried out.

MONUMENT TO CONSTANTINO BRUMIDI

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5943) to provide for the erection of a monument on the grave of Constantino Brumidi, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out "accept on behalf of, and without cost to the United States, title to" and insert "install a bronze and stone monument at."

Page 1, line 10, after "Capitol" insert ": Provided, That upon the installation of the monument the maintenance of the monument and perpetual care of the grave site shall be assumed by the trustees of Glenwood Cemetery, District of Columbia: And provided further, That the United States shall have no responsibility for the upkeep and care of the monument at the grave site."

Page 1, strike out all after line 10 over to and including line 4 on page 2.

Page 2, line 6, strike out "$200 to carry out the purposes of this act" and insert "$100 for the perpetual care and upkeep of the monument and grave site by the trustees of Glenwood Cemetery, and the further sum of not to exceed $400 for a suitable bronze and stone monument to mark the grave of the said Constantino Brumidi."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for the erection of a bronze and stone monument at the grave of Constantino Brumidi."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HONORARY DEGREE CONFERRED ON MRS. NORTON

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I seek recognition at this time—and the gentlewoman from New Jersey is not aware of the purpose for my doing so—to convey to my colleagues of the House information that I know will be pleasing to all of them.

We all have deep respect for the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] without regard to party. No matter what may be any Member's difference of opinion with her on legislation, there is profound respect for her because of her ability, her sincerity, and her courage.

I know the membership of the House will be pleased to learn that she received a great honor. The St. Bonaventure College, a great Catholic institution, recently conferred upon our colleague and friend, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], the greatest honor any institution can confer upon anyone, an honorary degree, in her case the degree of LL.D., doctor of laws.

I know that in extending my congratulations I am extending the congratulations of all my colleagues to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] on this additional honor she has received and which she so richly deserves.

CAMP JOSEPH T. ROBINSON

Mr. DEGRAFFENRIED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 3783) authorizing the transfer of part of Camp Joseph T. Robinson to the State of Arkansas, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 4, line 3, strike out all after "way" down to and including "property" in line 7.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSPORTATION ON CANADIAN VESSELS

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3771) to provide transportation on Canadian vessels between Skagway, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, between Haines, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, and between Hyder, Alaska, and other points in Alaska or the continental United States, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the transportation.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does this bill do?

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, that is fully explained in the title of the bill, which is "to provide transportation on Canadian vessels between Skagway, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, between Haines, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, and between Hyder, Alaska, and other points in Alaska or the continental United States, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the transportation."

Under our general statutes this would be illegal, but permission has been granted to Canadian vessels which provide this service because American vessel service is not available.

This bill merely extends for an additional year the permission that has been given in prior years.

Mr. RICH. It would not interfere with any American enterprise by substituting Canadian enterprise.

Mr. HART. There is no American enterprise, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and as to the necessity for the enterprise being there, the Canadian vessels alone are authorized to provide this service.

Mr. RICH. We want to help the Canadians all we can, but I do not want to let any other country interfere with American enterprise.

Mr. HART. I may say to the gentleman that this bill passed the Senate and was unanimously reported by the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, until June 30, 1951, notwithstanding the provision of law of the United States restricting to vessels of the United States the transportation of passengers and merchandise directly or indirectly from any port in the United States to another port of the United States, passengers may be transported on Canadian vessels between Skagway, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, between Haines, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, and between Hyder, Alaska, and other points in Alaska or the continental United States, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the transportation: Provided, That such Canadian vessels may transport merchandise between Hyder, Alaska, and other ports and points herein enumerated.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments may have until midnight Saturday night to file reports on H. Res. 647 and H. Res. 648.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

ATTEMPT TO SILENCE CRITICS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] heads a select committee of the House appointed to investigate lobbying activities. He is proceeding with his investigation. But apparently he is doing so without the slightest public indication of what he hopes to accomplish or of how to accomplish it. This is true only if one ignores the crassly political motives which evidently inspired the Democratic majority to create the committee.

In the first place, the present law to regulate lobbying on legislative matters before the Congress of the United States fails specifically to define lobbying. The purpose of the law is to compel paid lobbyists to register with the Congress, and to disclose the sources and amounts of incomes earned by lobbying. Presumably it is intended to keep the lobbyists out in the open, where their activities can be restricted if need arises.

Questioned on the floor, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] refused to define lobbying; said further that he did not think it necessary to adopt a definition. This, of course, is in line with the purposes obviously in the minds of Democratic leaders when the committee was created. But when he opened the hearing he said lobbying was "any attempt by individuals or groups to influence governmental decisions."

Recently, in an effort to get at the real purpose of the committee staff, I questioned the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Congressman BUCHANAN, on the floor of the House. When he refused, or was unable, to define lobbying, I described lobbying as "any attempt, other than through the presentation of facts, expressions of opinion labeled as such, or appeals to reason, by individuals or groups, through pressure, political or economic, the offer of reward or threat of punishment, to influence enactment or administration of legislation or governmental activities."

This definition, if adopted and followed, would police all those who, in an effort to influence legislation or governmental decisions, abuse the right of free speech, a free press, the right to petition the Congress. It would, however, keep open the way to regulate those who for corrupt purposes or by corrupt means misuse free speech, a free press, the right of petition.

But apparently the adoption and the adherence to such a definition would not be consistent with the real objective of some of the staff of the Lobbying Committee.

One of the objectives of that staff seems to be the silencing through intimidation of all critics of the administration, of all those who are fighting either waste, corruption, or communism in the executive departments.

One reason for this suspicion lies in the questionnaire sent out by the committee staff and in the selection of the 166 business and educational organizations to whom it was sent.

It was notable that this list was confined exclusively to those companies and firms which have opposed the socialistic proposals of the Fair Deal and who have stood firm for constitutional government. It was notable, too, that many large companies, and left-wing organizations and labor unions, which have supported the Fair Deal, were conspicuously absent from the list.

Even a cursory reading of the questionnaire reveals that it was intended to harass and embarrass the companies and organizations formed to support constitutional government to which it was addressed. The questionnaire contained questions which many with a pencil and paper, a file of newspapers and magazines, and an advertising rate book could answer for themselves. But the questions relating to paid advertising on legislative subjects were only a small part of the questionnaire.

Other questions were included, relating to expenses and donations to organizations, such as the Committee for Constitutional Government, Inc., and to the Constitutional Educational League, which are fighting nobly for the things their names imply. Officials of these, and other organizations of the kind, earlier had been smeared by New Deal supporters and one of them jailed, for refusal to list their subscribers and contributors and thus lay them open to smears and persecution at the hands of Government officials and others who support such left-wing propaganda machines as the Friends of Democracy and the Anti-Defamation League.

The whole thing added up to a demand for information which would cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to gather and collate over a period of some months. Yet the committee staff gave those presented with the questionnaire only about 3 weeks in which to do the job.

There are those who are willing to say that this questionnaire was just a trap, that and nothing more; a means of accomplishing a purpose far afield from that for which the committee was authorized.

Some people say that the CIO or left wing furnished a part of the staff for the committee; that it was not intended that companies and patriotic organizations receiving the questionnaire should be able to comply with committee demands.

These people say that the real purpose of the questionnaire was to provide an excuse for CIO representatives and tools of the Friends of Democracy and the Anti-Defamation League, working through the committee staff, to get a look at corporation books, a privilege hitherto denied the unions.

In any event, it appears that some members of the Buchanan committee staff are not such as one should select to guide the activities of the committee. All of them, no doubt, are known as respectable citizens, against whom no charge of moral turpitude would be made. But it would seem that their ideas and purposes, as indicated by their past activities, are not such as to qualify some of them for the positions they now occupy.

The real purpose in this, a campaign year, appears to be an attempt to silence critics of the administration.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absense was granted as follows:

To Mr. SADLAK (at the request of Mr. WOODRUFF), for today and Friday, to attend the funeral of a close personal friend.

To Mr. SMITH of Virginia (at the request of Mr. HARRISON), for Thursday, June 22, on account of official business.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mrs. NORTON, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 1243. An act to amend the Hatch Act;

H. R. 4895. An act to permit the prospecting, development, mining, removal, and utilization of the mineral resources within the national forests in Minnesota, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8198. An act to provide for the organization of the Army and the Department of the Army, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 480. Joint resolution extending the time for the release, free of estate and gift tax, of certain powers.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JUNE 23, 1950

(Legislative day of Wednesday, June 7, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, as noontide marks the hurrying day and our words are hushed to silence, we would bathe our hearts and minds in the glorious thought that amidst all life's changing scenes we are with Thee.

Purge us, we beseech Thee, of low desire. Lift us to high resolve. In this great hour of human destiny, deepen in us the sense of surpassing opportunity and responsibility, yea, of a glorious mission to do our full part in averting a global catastrophe as our willful world is given one last chance to make this earth a decent habitation for all Thy children. May it be in Thy providence that our America, desiring nothing but peace for herself and for all the world, may come to the kingdom for such a time as this. In the Redeemer's name we ask it. Amen.

CURTAILMENT OF POSTAL SERVICES—RESOLUTION OF BOSTON (MASS.) CITY COUNCIL

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and myself, I present for appropriate reference and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution adopted by the Boston (Mass.) City Council, relating to the reduction of services of the Post Office Department in the Boston area.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That the Boston City Council petition the Congress of the United States to take immediate steps to correct the deplorable reduction of services of the United States Postal Department in this area.

The false economy of curtailed mail deliveries to residential and business customers, as well as the resultant confusion of the public in general, has aroused the indignation of the people of Boston.

It is indeed a sad reflection on the reasoning power of the authorities responsible for this chaotic situation, to behold on one hand, billions of dollars being expended by our Government for aid to foreign nations who have postal services far superior to our own, and to witness on this hand a reduction of postal services which returns us to the horse and buggy methods of the early 1800's.

Let us not allow this deplorable inconsistency of government and all its resultant economic hardships to continue, without our vigorous protest.

In city council June 19, 1950, adopted.

Attest:

W. J. MALLOY,
City Clerk.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EQUALITY OF REPRESENTATION BY STATE LEGISLATIVE BODIES

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, in the course of debate on S. 1728, the FEPC bill, the question came up with regard to whether or not State legislatures are representative bodies. Opponents of the bill took issue with my statements concerning the unrepresentative character of some legislative bodies.

In this connection it is interesting to take note of the resolution adopted by the United States Conference of Mayors which met in New York City last month. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the body of the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That since equality of representation is the most vital and fundamental principle of democracy and inequality of representation is a tyranny to which no people worthy of freedom will lightly submit; and in order that cities be accorded the fair and equal representation in the various State legislatures to which they are entitled as a matter of justice and right, the 1950 Annual Conference of the United States Conference of Mayors urge upon the States where fair and equal representation does not exist to correct this condition which is utterly repugnant to the basic concept of democratic processes of government, by initiating action leading to reapportionment at the conclusion of the 1950 population census, or, in those States not having constitutional or statutory provision for reapportionment on the basis of population, to sponsor the constitutional or statutory amendments necessary to make such reapportionment possible.

THE THREATENED RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, emphasizing the utmost importance of enactment into law of Senate bill 3463, to make unlawful any strike or any lockout by a carrier arising out of or in connection with any dispute falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act, I ask unanimous consent that there be set forth in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks an article, being the first article on page 1 of this morning's New York Times, entitled "Fourth Strike Threat Faces Railroads; Another Is Studied," and continuing over onto page 18 of this morning's edition of the Times.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FOURTH STRIKE THREAT FACES RAILROADS; ANOTHER IS STUDIED—PULLMAN CONDUCTORS SCHEDULE WALKOUT JULY 11 ON DEMAND FOR REDUCTION IN HOURS—YARDMASTERS WEIGH STEP—A FACT BOARD MAY HEAD OFF SLEEPER TIE-UP—SENATOR DONNELL DEMANDS ACTION

(By Louther S. Horne)

CHICAGO, June 22.—The Nation's railroads, already threatened with walkouts by three unions, today faced another strike call.

The Pullman Conductors Division of the Order of Railway Conductors scheduled a walkout for 7 a. m., Chicago daylight-saving time, July 11. Another union, the Railroad Yardmasters of America, has a strike call under consideration. Earlier, the latter union had scheduled a walkout for April 17, but canceled it when the National (Railway) Mediation Board intervened.

Appointment of a Presidential fact-finding board, it is expected, may head off the Pullman conductors walkout, which was ordered by A. G. Wise, executive vice president of the Order of Railway Conductors and general chairman of the Pullman Conductors Division. The union demands a reduction of the basic work month from 225 hours to 210, without a reduction of pay, and certain changes in working rules.

This strike, if it develops, would result in a stoppage of all pullman service and disruption of many rail operations in the current heavy vacation travel season. About 2,200 union members would be involved.

In the last 2 days three unions, including the Order of Railway Conductors, have posed strike threats that would paralyze operation of the country's more than 300 major railroads and that, if prolonged, would curtail American business and industrial activity. The other unions are the Switchmen's Union of North America, A. F. L., and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

STRIKE EFFECTIVE SUNDAY

Arthur J. Glover, president of the switchmen's union, yesterday issued a strike call effective 7 a. m. Sunday against these five midwestern and western railroads: The Rock Island and the Chicago Great Western, with terminals in Chicago; the Great Northern, the Denver & Rio Grande Western, and the Western Pacific. The Great Western is chiefly a freight carrier.

Mr. Glover's strike call would involve 4,000 of the union's members—it claims 25,000—and is aimed at enforcing the group's national demand for 48 hours' pay for 40 hours' work. The carriers have offered the 40-hour week and a pay rise of 18 cents an hour, but the switchmen insist an increase of 30 cents is necessary to maintain present take-home pay.

Early tonight, Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., chairman of the National (Railway) Mediation Board, who arrived here yesterday with Leverett Edwards, a Board member, to try to avert the switchmen's walk-out, reported that the disputing parties had held no meetings.

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors voiced strike threats last night in a joint announcement that the general chairmen of both groups had been summoned to Chicago to consider country-wide strike action because of the findings of the Presidential emergency board in its report issued June 15.

REPORT IS CALLED UNJUST

W. P. Kennedy and F. H. Nemitz, presidents, respectively, of the BRT and ORC, reminded railroad officials that the 250,000 members of the two organizations had "voted over 95 percent to strike if necessary to get long overdue rules improvements for road men and the 40-hour workweek with no pay cut for yard-service employees."

The union heads' statement asserted that while the fact-finding board recommended the 40-hour workweek for yard service employes, it did not provide 48 hours' pay, and recommended withdrawal of most of the other requests made by the two unions for liberalization of working rules.

The union charged that the board's report was "the most unjust, unfair, unequitable, and injurious report and recommendations issued by an emergency board since the Railway Labor Act became law."

"All steps of the Railway Labor Act have been fully complied with," the two union leaders asserted, "and we are within our rights to withhold our labor in the historic battle of working men and women for dignified, fair, and reasonable working conditions."

Under the terms of the Railway Labor Act, the unions are free to strike 30 days after an emergency board reports. In this case, the 30-day period would end July 15.

Meanwhile, the switchmen's dispute brought announcements from the Great Western and Western Pacific systems that they would join the Rock Island in preparing for a complete shut-down Sunday morning if the strike were not canceled. A spokesman for the Great Western said embargoes were in preparation "to get everything off the line by the deadline."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the insertion of the article to which I just referred an article on page 18 of today's New York Times entitled "Antistrike Action Asked" be inserted in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANTISTRIKE ACTION ASKED

WASHINGTON, June 22.—Senator FORREST C. DONNELL, Republican, of Missouri, told the Senate today that antitstrike legislation should be passed immediately to head off the threat of Nation-wide railroad shut-down.

He said the threat to the national safety was great.

Senator DONNELL is author of a bill that would amend the present Railway Labor Act to prevent strikes and in effect require compulsory arbitration of railway-labor disputes.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I have received a considerable number of telegrams from various companies and various representatives of organizations, as for illustration, from the vice president of the transportation division of the St. Joseph Chamber of Commerce, a representative of the St. Joseph Livestock Exchange, the president of the chamber of commerce of the city of St. Louis, and numerous others. In the interest of saving time I shall not read the telegrams, but I send them to the desk and ask that they be set forth in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks. All of them bear on the threatened railroad strike.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The curtailment or stoppage of transportation this territory right now becomes of national importance in handling and preservation of foodstuffs and may entail tremendous losses to producers in our area. Hon. FORREST C. DONNELL, Switchmen's Union of North America has announced its intention to strike the Rock Island and four other roads June 25. This in defiance of emergency board's recommendation. The undersigned is a traffic and transportation association of flour mills located at Kansas City and numerous points in Kansas, including points on Rock Island, some of which are served by Rock Island exclusively. We believe switchmen's action arbitrary and shows disposition to ignore orderly processes set up for protection all concerned. Public interest is paramount to that of a few switchmen, and such a condition should not be tolerated. We do not favor oppression of labor, but they should abide by the same rules as others. We urge such action by Congress as necessary prevent this strike.

J. W. HOLLOWAY,
Executive Secretary.

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to speak at any length; but I wish to call attention to the fact that this bill, the arms defense bill for western Europe and the Atlantic area, has been reported to the Senate under most favorable circumstances. It has been reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations and by the Committee on Armed Services, who sat together in the consideration of the bill. Every member of those committees who was present or who desired to be recorded, voted for the favorable report. There were only three members of both committees combined who asked to be recorded as "present." So it seems to me that sort of recommendation by these two great committees, after careful and detailed consideration to the bill, ought to appeal to the judgment of the Senate.

Who were the members who so voted? The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. The Senate, I am sure, has confidence in the Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], a distinguished Member of this body; the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]; the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN]; the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON]; the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT].

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] was ill in the hospital, and I had no opportunity or desire to interfere with his comfort, so he was not consulted. His office was consulted and agreed with the decision that it would be best not to record the distinguished Senator. I am sure, however, from his actions in the past and from his general conduct as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, that had he been present he would have voted enthusiastically for the favorable report of the bill. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], presently the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, as a result of the illness of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], voted for the report, as did the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations voted for a favorable report on the bill.

From the Armed Services Committee, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] was marked "present," as was also the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

Members of the Armed Services Committee who voted for a favorable report were the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHAPMAN], the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. HUNT], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. The Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] was recorded as "present." The chairman of the Armed Services Committee, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], voted for a favorable report.

I cite these names because it is a most unusual circumstance that an important bill such as this should receive a unanimous report by two of the powerful committees of this body.

Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Armed Services have finished their consideration of the mutual defense assistance program for the next fiscal year. I should like to present our recommendations to the Senate at this time. Since the basic issues were debated at considerable length last year I shall not detain the Senate very long.

Shortly before the outbreak of the first great war in 1914 a famous British statesman remarked that "There is no such thing as an inevitable war. If war comes it will be from failure of human wisdom."

On two tragic occasions since that time human wisdom has failed. We are determined that, so far as the free world is concerned, it shall not fail again.

Mr. President, last year the Senate took two vitally important—perhaps decisive—steps toward world peace. We approved the ratification of the North Atlantic Treaty by an overwhelming vote of 82 to 13. Then we proceeded without delay to implement our obligations under that treaty by supporting the mutual defense assistance program.

The bill now before the Senate, which would continue that program for another year, is yet another indication of our determination that freedom shall survive in the world. It is a declaration of faith that free men can meet and overcome the persistent menace of totalitarianism. Together with the United Nations, the European recovery program, and the North Atlantic Treaty, it is the best insurance we can presently find that the peace of the world will not be broken, or if it is broken by totalitarian aggression, that right will be defended by might.

Members of the Senate are fully aware of the reasons such insurance is essential. During the past few years our efforts to maintain peace in the world have been constantly undermined by the threat of direct or indirect aggression on the part of the Soviet Union. In the face of this threat we have no alternative. The free nations must work together to build up our collective strength to the point where no potential aggressor would dare launch an attack against any of us.

We know that the peace of the world will not be broken by the democratic countries. We know, also, that weakness and indecision on our part invite aggression. We know, too, that strength coupled with a clear determination to use that strength, if necessary, to repel aggression is the best guaranty we can possibly have that a third world war may be avoided.

MDAP AND UNITED STATES FOREIGN POLICY

As I pointed out last year, Mr. President, the mutual defense assistance program is entirely consistent with other major foreign policy steps this country has taken during the past few years. In order to counter Soviet expansionism and aggression our policy has developed along five closely related lines.

First. We have placed constant emphasis upon the United Nations as the cornerstone of American foreign policy. Everything within our power has been done to strengthen the UN machinery for the peaceful settlement of disputes and for economic and social cooperation among the nations.

Second. We have cooperated fully with other countries in repairing the terrible damages brought by the war and in returning the world to some degree of economic stability. The Marshall plan and the technical assistance program stand as eloquent evidence of our good faith in this regard.

Third. We have maintained a national defense establishment sufficient to meet our own defense needs and to take care of our international commitments in a turbulent and uncertain world. No realistic person would advocate any other course.

Fourth. We have joined in collective self-defense arrangements with like-minded countries in Latin America through the Rio pact, and the North Atlantic area, where we believed such pacts would help the cause of peace. Here again the emphasis is on defense, for both the Rio pact and the North Atlantic treaty are aimed only at aggressor nations.

Fifth. We have launched a military assistance program in an effort to help strengthen the defense capacity of certain friendly countries whose freedom is vital to the security of the United States and to world peace.

These five facets of our foreign policy are all of the utmost importance. Each one is closely related to the others. Only if we push ahead vigorously with all of them can we be sure that our foreign policy will be successful.

SUMMARY OF BILL

At the outset let me review briefly what the pending bill provides. Last year the Congress authorized and appropriated $1,314,010,000 for the mutual defense assistance program. For the coming fiscal year the joint committee recommends that an additional $1,222,500,000 be authorized. Of this amount not to exceed $1,000,000,000 would be used to carry on the important task of helping our North Atlantic Treaty partners build up their defensive strength; $131,500,000 would go to Greece, Turkey, and Iran; $16,000,000 to Korea and the Philippines; and $75,000,000 to countries in the general area of China. In addition, the bill before the Senate includes a number of amendments which will make possible a more effective administration of the program during the critical year that lies ahead.

ATLANTIC TREATY OBLIGATIONS

The North Atlantic Treaty makes clear that an armed attack against any one of its members is an attack against all. It further provides that, in the event such an attack should occur, the parties to the treaty will take such action as they deem necessary, including the use of armed force, to restore and maintain the security of the North Atlantic area.

This pledge in itself is a powerful deterrent to aggression. It puts any potential aggressor on notice that the combined power of the North Atlantic community will be available to defend our freedom and our civilization.

It is article 3, however, that provides the bone and muscle for the treaty structure. In that article the 12 signatories further pledged themselves, by means of continuous self-help and mutual aid, to maintain and develop their individual and collective capacity to resist aggression.

Now, Mr. President, we must be realistic. The pledge we have all made to take action against armed attack is exceedingly important. But we can give real substance to that pledge only by working together to build up a collective-defense capacity sufficient to meet the needs of the hour.

IMPLEMENTING THE TREATY

Last fall various Members of the Senate feared that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to get the kind of unified planning and cooperative action necessary for the proper implementation of the North Atlantic Treaty. In particular, it was feared that our European friends, reluctant to depart from the outdated military traditions of the past, would be unwilling to agree to an integrated and balanced defense for western Europe.

In western Europe, too, there were some understandable fears. Living under the shadow of the Russian bear as they do, this whole enterprise is a matter of life and death to them. They wanted to make sure, therefore, that the United States really meant business. They wanted to make certain—before taking any far-reaching action—that the United States stood ready to translate its words into concrete action.

Happily these fears have been dissipated. In the few short months since last September when the Congress approved the mutual defense assistance program, the North Atlantic Treaty machinery has been set up, plans for the integrated defense of Europe have been drafted and approved, and the first shipments of arms have begun to move from our ports.

Mr. President, this is a remarkable achievement. I think it is safe to say that never before in our peacetime history has so much constructive planning been accomplished by so many nations in such a short period of time.

While this speed is commendable, it is, of course, absolutely essential if we are to accomplish our objective. The Soviet Union, which never fully demobilized after the war, continues to modernize its military strength and to expand its area of power wherever possible. According to a recent reliable report, the U. S. S. R. is now spending the equivalent of $45,000,000,000 each year for military purposes. While this may be an exaggeration, the difficult situation which we confront calls for unity on our part. It calls for courage. It calls for action.

In the implementation of the North Atlantic Treaty there are bound to be differences among the 12 member states. But this is no time to quibble over details. A man cannot afford to spend time discussing fire-prevention methods when a criminal is, at that very moment, setting fire to his house.

Meanwhile the program is well under way. By the end of this month our deliveries to western Europe will be more than 152,000 tons of military equipment and supplies, 195 military aircraft, and naval vessels with a combined tonnage of over 13,500. This we have been able to do in spite of the fact that our appropriations were not available until the end of October.

This substantial evidence of our firm intention to help our Atlantic Treaty partners defend themselves has met with an enthusiastic response abroad. The terrible feeling of insecurity and despair which has haunted western Europe since the war is rapidly being replaced by a spirit of assurance and determination. Our European friends are tackling the problem of joint defense with a new and bold confidence which is most encouraging to us.

Last year the Congress wisely provided that our assistance should be conditioned upon approval by the President of recommendations from the North Atlantic Council for an integrated defense of the North Atlantic area. I am convinced that this gentle request for cooperation has paid rich dividends. As early as January 27 a strategic concept for the integrated defense of the North Atlantic area was recommended by the Council and approved by the President.

Two months later a detailed list of the equipment to be furnished had been prepared. This list was based upon the strategic concept which I referred to above. In other words, it was based upon the role each country is to play in the coordinated defense of the North Atlantic area.

BALANCED DEFENSE FORCES

Mr. President, this is real progress. Still more progress came out of the recent London meeting of the Council. There it was agreed that the 12 treaty members should concentrate upon the development of balanced collective forces in building up the defensive power of the area.

Viewed historically, this decision is nothing short of amazing. In the past the countries of Europe have insisted upon maintaining a complete defense establishment with a separate army, navy, and air force. This has resulted in great duplication of effort, waste, inefficiency, and relative weakness.

Now these piecemeal efforts have been abandoned and there will be a practical division of labor. Each nation will make the contribution with respect to the kinds of weapons and forces which it is best equipped to make and which will fit into the common defense effort. In this way we shall have a much stronger combined common defense force at a smaller cost than we could possibly produce with each nation proudly pursuing its own independent objectives with its own independent forces.

NEW WEAPONS

There have been persistent reports in the press lately that our Government has perfected a number of new defensive weapons that may change drastically the nature of modern warfare. It is even suggested that, equipped with these new weapons, a relatively small number of well-trained troops might be able to prevent the invasion of western Europe by any potential aggressor. If this be true, some people have asked, will not the kind of aid we are now sending to Europe soon be outdated and is it not a waste of American dollars?

The answer is an emphatic "No." It is true that our defense establishment is working hard on certain peapons which will add greatly to the defensive strength of our North Atlantic forces. But, for the most part, these weapons are not ready to be put into active use, and it would be a serious mistake to become so enthusiastic about them that we neglect the immediate and difficult task of helping our western European friends build up their defenses in an effective manner.

It would, of course, be a pleasant thing if we could find some easy way out. The fact remains, however, that the aid contemplated in this program is absolutely basic to the defense of western Europe, regardless of any new weapons which may be developed. Every tank, every plane, every gun we send today will play its part in defending our freedom if trouble should come tomorrow.

CONTRIBUTION OF OTHER COUNTRIES

Before voting for this program every Senator will, of course, want to consider whether the other participating countries are contributing their fair share to the defense effort. In doing this, we should all keep in mind that, while our contribution to the North Atlantic states is a very vital one, it is nevertheless only a small proportion of the total amounts which they have set aside in their budgets for such purposes.

Let us look at the figures. During fiscal 1951 the United States will spend approximately 6.9 percent of our net national income for defense purposes. During the same period the United Kingdom will spend 7.4 percent of its net national income; France, 7.9 percent; the Netherlands, 9.1 percent; Greece, 9 percent, and Turkey, 7.7 percent. It will be noticed that our percentage is smaller than any of these. In terms of their relative capacity to pay, and in view of our admonition that they should not let their defense programs impair the progress of economic recovery, I think the other participating countries are doing very well indeed.

The act we passed last year stated:

> Congress recognizes that economic recovery is essential to international peace and security and must be given clear priority.

While the program for 1951 contemplated increased military expenditures on the part of our European partners, great care is being taken to make sure that this additional financial burden on these countries will not have an adverse effect on their economic recovery. To my mind, economic recovery comes first, defense preparations second. There can be no really sound defense preparation unless there is a sound economy at its base. One reason why the joint committee rejected an amendment proposed by the able junior Senator from Massachusetts to use ECA counterpart funds for military purposes was because it was felt that it would be a mistake to divert these funds from their planned use for recovery.

"NEUTRALITY" IN EUROPE

Some people in this country and in Europe have suggested that western Europe may in the future assume the role of a buffer between the United States and Russia. They have suggested that once western Europe has recovered its economic strength—once it has built up its military power—it will remain neutral in the event of a conflict between totalitarianism and freedom. They fear that our military assistance will not, in effect, be aid to our allies, but aid to a group of neutral countries. This is a fantastic suggestion and one which I deal with only because it is being bandied about by those who are careless of fact and history.

The states we are helping today are those which faced and staved off totalitarian aggression from 1913 to 1917, from 1939 to 1941. They gave the United States time to gird itself for the war against totalitarianism which we knew was coming. These people valued freedom even more than their homes and their lives. They fought on when their lands were overrun. They are more familiar than we are with the darkness that would forever enshroud western Europe if communist imperialism should envelop them.

These are the states from which in large part we drew our institutions, our law, our democratic system, our heritage. If capable of resistance, they would no more desert us in a conflict with totalitarianism than we could have stood aside and watched them go down to defeat in 1917 or 1942.

The people of western Europe have learned even better than we that in the twentieth century neutrality is not possible in the clash of ideas represented by communism and democracy. Peace can only be attained if the free states stand together in defending their freedom.

AID TO OTHER COUNTRIES

While our own security is vitally linked to the security of western Europe it is also dependent upon the peace and security of other areas of the world. Consequently, we urgently recommend the continuation of our aid to Greece, Turkey, and Iran, to Korea and the Philippines, and to the general area of China. Let me say a few words about each of these.

The encouraging situation in Greece is convincing proof of the principle that a little preventive medicine, if given in time, may forestall a very serious illness. Had Greece yielded to Communist pressures that country would now be a hotbed of intrigue and subversive activities in the Mediterranean area and a constant menace to world peace. But the gallant people of Greece, encouraged by our aid, have at long last put down the guerrilla bands which threatened their freedom. Now, for the first time in a decade, they have control over their own destiny.

The Greek-aid program is a bright star in the annals of American diplomacy. It would be penny-wise and pound-foolish, however, to withdraw now, with the battle nine-tenths won. We must continue our assistance on a reduced scale for another year so that the Greeks may replace their battered equipment and be in a position to prevent any new guerrilla uprisings.

Our military assistance to Turkey has also been extremely effective. The Turks, whose courage no one can doubt, have been able to stand on their own feet and resist the terrific pressure of Soviet imperialism. During the past 2 years they have brought about a substantial reduction in the size of their armed forces; at the same time, through the process of modernization, they have greatly increased the combat effectiveness of those forces. This program is now past the halfway mark.

Iran is still a third near eastern country whose security is tremendously important to the free world. The people of Iran live under the very shadow of the Kremlin and are subject to constant Communist intrigue. While they are at present devoting a large share of their resources to defense purposes, they cannot, without outside assistance, provide for the modern, well-equipped forces they need. We recommend, therefore, that funds be authorized to provide equipment and training which will improve the fighting effectiveness of the Iranian Army.

THE FAR EAST

In the Far East the situation remains dangerously fluid. While, in general, it is impossible for us to formulate aid programs for Asia with the same thoroughness and precision that they are developed for western Europe and the Near East, we must continue to take vigorous action to prevent the further expansion of communism in that area. We are strongly recommending, therefore, that our program for the Far East continue on the same scale as last year.

In southeast Asia the tentacles of Communist China are already greedily reaching toward Indochina, Thailand, Burma, Malaya, and Indonesia. Both Stalin and Mao Tse-tung would like nothing better than to see the whole of that rich and important area fall into the Communist maw.

Last year the Congress provided the President with a $75,000,000 emergency fund to be spent by him in the general area of China. That money is being used to very good advantage. Some weeks ago we announced our vigorous support for the new states of Indochina in their struggle against the Communist forces of Ho Chi-Minh. We have also taken steps to provide arms, ammunition, aircraft, and other jungle-fighting equipment to various governments in the Indochina area.

In the same vein, certain constabulary equipment is being made available to Indonesia so that the new government, which has taken over an extremely difficult assignment, will be able to maintain internal order and stability. It is important that the people of this area stand firm against the infiltration of the Communist virus. Our relations with the Philippines and our whole strategic position in the Far East are involved.

So far as the Philippines are concerned we pledged our word that we would help in the training and development of their military establishment. We are already doing so under a law passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress and we will continue to stand by our friends whose independence we granted in 1946. Assistance extended under this bill will provide the training and equipment necessary if Philippine forces are to preserve internal order in the face of the strenuous efforts of the Huk Communist-inspired guerrillas to create disorder and take over the country.

One final word about South Korea. There we have a relatively new democratic state flanked on the north by the Soviet-dominated country of North Korea. The people of Asia are watching this situation very carefully to see whether the new republic can stay alive and maintain its free government. Last July our occupation forces withdrew and the people of South Korea must now be able to protect themselves. Under this bill the President can extend Korea the kind of military aid it needs to preserve internal security and to deter possible aggression from the north.

Mr. President, there is unfolding in Asia a great human drama that is one of the historic developments of our age. Hundreds of millions of people, stirred by a growing feeling of nationalism, are on the march. War-weary and poor, they seek security and independence. They want to be allowed to work out their own destiny. They want more of the good things that modern technology has brought to the western world.

Their governments, which are new and inexperienced, face chaotic conditions brought on by the war. Trade has been disrupted or destroyed. Old established patterns of society are breaking down. Under these conditions Communist propaganda, which cleverly exploits the growing nationalism in Asia, may have an especial appeal to many people.

Can we meet this challenge? I am confident we can. Over the years we have developed strong ties of friendship with the peoples of the East. But we must act boldly. We must do what we can to help them in their determined efforts to find security, stability, and better living standards. Moreover, we in the western world must demonstrate, in a way they cannot fail to understand, the vigor, the vitality, and the moral strength of the democratic way of life.

Given the situation which we confront in the Far East, military aid is an essential part of our total program. The pending bill will permit the President to take rapid, and I hope effective, action there whenever it is in our national interest to do so.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

In addition to the authorizations for next year, the two committees recommend several amendments to the existing law which are essential if we are to move ahead as rapidly as we should. In the last part of the committee report are set forth in detail proposed changes in the present law, to which I invite the attention of Senators who are interested in that feature. Since these are discussed at some length in the committee report, I will refer briefly to only three of them here.

In the first place, it seems entirely logical to change the law so as to permit our Government to furnish several kinds of military-production equipment which are badly needed by our partners abroad. At the present time we can send machine tools, but we cannot send production equipment, such as welding machines, filters, heat-treating equipment, and electric furnaces. Such material would aid them in producing military equipment of various kinds.

This is a distinction without a real difference and it works to our serious disadvantage. One of our objectives is to stimulate additional military production in western Europe. It is estimated that for every dollar's worth of machinery and materials we provide Europe can produce seven or eight dollars worth of finished equipment. Why then, by a self-denying ordinance, should we furnish some of the things they need but refuse to furnish others?

The committees recommend, therefore, that the bill be amended to include not only machine tools but production equipment as well. That proposal is in the bill. This is the best way I know to get more security at a decreased cost to the American taxpayer.

In the second place, we are at present unable to provide assistance, even on a cash-sale basis, to a number of friendly countries whose security and friendship are important to our own national interest. Certain countries, for example, need spare parts for American tanks and other equipment which they secured from us through lend-lease channels. They find it a little difficult to understand why we could furnish them the tanks but not the spare parts—when they have the cash to pay for them—which they must have to keep those tanks in good condition.

Under existing law cash-on-the-barrel-head assistance may be extended to the members of the Rio Treaty and the Atlantic Pact, together with those nations designated to receive grant aid under the bill. This means that the other countries of the world, including some of our very good friends in Africa and the Near East, are automatically excluded. Here again, it seems to me, we are cutting off our nose to spite our own face. Here again important benefits could be provided without cost to the United States.

I strongly recommend, therefore, that the provision relating to cash sales be broadened so that we may be able to sell military equipment and materials to any other nation whose ability to defend itself or to participate in the defense of the area of which it is a part, is important to the security of the United States. Clearly, we must abandon our highly inconsistent policy of furnishing military equipment on a grant basis to some of our friends and refusing to sell such equipment to others for cash.

In the third place, the United States can extend grant aid only to those countries designated in the law. This means that we would not be in a position to make miiltary equipment available to certain other countries—unless they had the necessary dollars with which to purchase them on a cash basis—even in the face of a critical emergency seriously affecting the security of the United States.

This is an uncertain world and our Government ought not to be powerless to act to meet such an emergency. For this reason the joint committee recommends that the President be given some additional authority to grant a limited amount of assistance to any other European country whose strategic location makes it of direct importance to the defense of the North Atlantic area and whose defensive strength is vital to our security. In the event any such assistance is given, the appropriate committees of the Congress will be immediately notified.

CONCLUDING COMMENTS

Mr. President, in his message to the joint session of the Congress in February 1918, Woodrow Wilson, a great President, made the following statement:

> We believe that our own desire for a new international order under which reason and justice and the common interests of mankind shall prevail is the desire of enlightened men everywhere. Without that new order the world will be without peace, and human life will lack tolerable conditions to existence and development. Having set our hand to the task of achieving it, we shall not turn back.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, we did not set our hand in 1919 to the task of achieving the kind of international order President Wilson spoke about. But now our course is set and we could not turn back even if we tried.

I am convinced there is no other road to peace. I am convinced that, in the world of today, this program is essential if we are ever going to be able to build the kind of international order in which reason and justice and the common interests of mankind can ultimately prevail. It is essential because, if democracy is to survive, we must be strong enough to defend ourselves against those who would enslave us.

The free nations have learned the hard way that our security lies in our strength and our strength lies in our unity. Our cooperative efforts on behalf of peace are succeeding. But we must never permit the encouraging momentum toward peace which is building up in the free world to subside. To falter now would imperil all the hard-won gains of the past few years. I urge the Senate to give its overwhelming approval to this bill and take yet another decisive step toward peace.

Mr. President, we speak of the war as if it had ended. The war, in fact, has not ended. It will not end until there is some assurance to the free nations of the world that their safety will be protected and secured to them. So long as the world stands quaking with fear at the aggression and the efforts of totalitarian powers, there can be no peace, there can be no peace within the breasts of freemen. I trust and pray God that those who entertain ambitions of conquest, who want to spread their power over the earth, may hesitate and may pause, and may abandon their ambitions.

There is room enough on this globe for all people of good will and good mind to pursue their activities and to prosper reasonably. Why should any nation want to lay the heavy hand of conquest upon other nations and other peoples?

Mr. President, we have entered into obligations to assist other peoples, we have assumed commitments with reference to western Europe, not for our own sake, but for the sake of the peoples of those areas, their freedom and their independence. The United States cannot abandon them. We cannot give up the efforts we are making for the peace of the world, and the sanctity of the lives and the liberties of the peoples of the world.

Mr. President, I ask the Senate to give this measure its support by an overwhelming majority, just as the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Armed Services gave it a unanimous report, except for three members who were recorded as present, and who did not vote. We gave the bill our best consideration, and out of it came the approval of this long list of distinguished members of the committee. I trust the bill will receive an overwhelming vote of the Senate.

THE BRITISH INTERNATIONAL POSITION AND AMERICAN AID PROGRAMS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the British Socialist Party recently issued a declaration opposing British participation in the Schuman plan to unify the European coal and steel industries. This plan is probably the first major step taken at European initiative toward the goal of European integration. Our newspapers, aware of the enormous significance of the plan, have been doing an intensive job of explanation. The issues are many, and I would like this afternoon to indicate certain new and resultant problems which face the United States in our relations with the United Kingdom. I suggest the desirability of reexamining our foreign aid programs to make sure that they conform to new realities resulting from the British position.

To begin with, Mr. President, there seems to be some ambiguity as to whether the statement represents the British Socialist Party or the British Government. Let me say that I do not think that it matters much whether the attitude of the British Government differs slightly from that of the Socialist Party. Nor do I think it matters whether the United Kingdom eventually endorses the Schuman plan in principle and, after several months of negotiations and adjustments, accepts membership and then, by delaying tactics, keeps the organization from functioning.

My point is that the record shows that every time the British Government has been offered an opportunity to join other Marshall-plan countries in concrete action toward the unification of Europe, the British Government has not only failed to assume leadership, but has obstructed and delayed the action of others.

This was true of those efforts made from time to time to give authority to the OEEC—the organization of Marshall-plan countries. This was true of the attempt of the continental countries to create the European Payments Union. In fact, I have received disturbing reports that the plan tentatively agreed to in Paris has been obtained only after meeting British conditions, the acceptance of which threatens to make it a ghost of what it might have been or what we and the continental countries intended. And now we see the familiar pattern being followed in the current effort to unify the European steel and coal industries.

All these British positions, I believe, can be explained simply. The fact is that in spite of the many policies the United States has in common with the United Kingdom, despite the great good will which the two nations have for each other, the British objectives with respect to European integration are fundamentally opposed to those of the United States.

Our foreign policy since the end of the war has assumed that British and Americans were partners in a common enterprise, striving for a common objective. While I do not doubt that the British agree with us on such obvious ends as peace and the general welfare, it seems clear they do not agree on the immediate steps for rebuilding the economy of Europe. It is my belief that all these events make it necessary to acknowledge the reality of Britain's position and consider whether our Marshall-plan program should be reoriented.

Let me hasten to say that British interests, in not coinciding with our own, are not less worthy than our own. I do not imply that British aims are more selfish than those of the United States; they are simply different. While we have many more interests in common than we have differences, the British do have a Socialist government and the British are trying to hold together the Empire. Both of these facts have a strong bearing on the current policy of the British toward Europe.

I believe that, since the British people have freely chosen a Socialist government, it is fundamental that the United States should be scrupulously noncommittal on that political choice. It is also Britain's sovereign right to shore up the empire if it feels that this is the road to solvency and strength. But our respect for Britain's sovereign right to choose its own direction does not mean that we should applaud that direction to the detriment of our own objectives on the continent.

The error in the American position, it seems to me, is our failure to recognize that a Nation dedicated to socialism and striving simultaneously to maintain a special status with a group of countries scattered across the globe cannot subordinate itself to a new authority embracing the Marshall-plan countries. My point is that we cannot shut our eyes to the British position, and that if we find that the British Government is committed to policies which prevent it from becoming a part of a united Europe, without reservation, we should cease to carry on a program based on the assumption that it will do so.

Many of us, when confronted with this consistent obstructionism on all proposals aimed at Europe's economic integration, have had the impulse to say that Britain's refusal to cooperate should be answered with a denial of Marshall-plan funds. I am afraid that this is not the answer—that this position solves nothing and that we would create more problems than we would solve by taking that position.

It is hardly necessary to point out that the British Government is not following its present course because of ignorance or stubbornness or because it desires to flout the United States. It is simply a fact that a government elected on a platform of socialism, which must give first priority to maintaining full employment and raising living standards of the masses, cannot disregard the mandate of the electorate, cannot commit itself to integration with European industries when this inevitably means changes in wage rates, closing down of certain industries, and a painful period of economic adjustment. A government which believes that its only hope of regaining its position as a world power is to maintain its position as the leader of an empire, cannot abandon its special status with the empire countries and join as an equal partner with France, Italy, Belgium, and so forth, in the creation of a European superstate.

Our short-run objectives in Europe, meaning military and economic assistance, are fully as important as our long-run objectives, European integration and self-sufficiency, and any redirection of British policy would require at least a couple of years to accomplish even if Britain were willing. We need the constant help of the United Kingdom in making the North Atlantic Treaty effective. We want the cooperation of the United Kingdom, which is an industrial and commercial power, in getting Europe back on its feet and bringing the commerce of the world back to normal. In short, we need the continued friendship and good will of the British people.

It seems to me, therefore, Mr. President, that we should take action along a different line. We should not follow a policy aimed at coercing the British into joining a unified Europe under present circumstances. Instead, I feel that the framers of our foreign policy should revise our basic program of economic aid in at least two respects.

First, we should reexamine the earlier assumptions on which the Marshall plan was based.

Our basic premise has always been that western Europe has resources which, if fully utilized, would permit that area to maintain itself economically and politically, and that the great deterrent to full utilization has been economic nationalism. We should now consider whether this premise holds with the United Kingdom, outside of the integrated area. We should decide whether it is an economic possibility for the Continent to integrate and be self-sufficient without the United Kingdom. If, for example, our plans for building new factories on the Continent have been based on a European economic pattern inclusive of England's industries, such plans should certainly be reexamined on the basis of England's refusal to be a part of that economic area.

Secondly, just as it is necessary for us to reconsider the program for European integration without England, we must reappraise the program of economic aid to Great Britain, in view of the new fact that the costs of fitting Britain's economy into the integrated structure are no longer a consideration. The question of whether or not England would require less United States aid if the resources of the empire are not supplemented by those of western Europe through integration is a difficult one, and should receive careful study. Certainly, even though the United States finds it desirable to continue to finance the United Kingdom while not insisting that the United Kingdom conform to our program for rebuilding Europe, the United States would find it difficult to justify a program of assistance to the British Empire which did not include in it acceptance by the British of United States policies toward world trade, particularly as regards trade restrictions and discriminations.

It would seem, Mr. President, that an estimate of British dollar requirements for the next fiscal year, hitherto based on the premise that the British program is part of the program for all western Europe, should be recalculated if it develops that different basic assumptions must be adopted.

One further complication must be noted: It is clear that our final decision on policy toward the United Kingdom cannot be decided on economic considerations alone, on whether they help or hinder Europe's economic integration. We need Britain's military assistance and Britain's political backing. I am sure the Marshall-plan countries also need Britain. This seems to point to the conclusion that it is more difficult every day to maintain a separation between our economic aid and military assistance. Perhaps, taking the larger view, it is necessary to spend money to solidify the Atlantic community without drawing too fine a distinction as to whether the assistance should have economic or military labels.

Mr. President, I should like to include in my remarks at this point a statement which I, as chairman of the watchdog committee, recently made before the Appropriations Committee. This statement develops in greater detail some of the problems with which we are confronted in determining how much money Europe really needs.

At the hazard of repetition, I now present my views to the whole Senate.

Mr. President, last year I submitted to the Appropriations Committee a memorandum suggesting a possible reduction of $740,000,000 in the appropriation for the ECA. The suggested reduction was from the budget estimate, and was based on studies of that estimate made by the staff of the "watchdog committee."

The budget estimate last year was $4,198,200,000. Had my suggested reduction been adopted, an appropriation of $3,458,200,000 would have been provided.

The ECA, in reply to my suggestion, protested that such a reduction would substantially retard the recovery of Europe. They stated:

> The program presented by the ECA is a minimum for recovery, not a minimum for relief.

Mr. President, I believe you will find it interesting to review the RECORD for a moment and see how much I was in error when I made the suggestion for a reduction last year, as a member of the Appropriations Committee and as chairman of the "watchdog committee."

The Congress provided an appropriation, for the present fiscal year, of $3,778,380,000. At present, the estimate for obligation of this appropriation indicates the ECA will have a carry-over of approximately $277,000,000 as of June 30, 1950. If we deduct this carry-over or unobligated sum from the appropriation, it appears that ECA will spend approximately $3,501,380,000 during the present fiscal year, or within approximately $40,000,000 of the amount suggested by the "watchdog committee" as adequate for this year's programs.

Last year I suggested that ECA was asking for more money than it would need for certain commodities. Among these was food. In this category I suggested that possibly $125,000,000 could be saved. In reply the ECA said:

> The net effect of such a cut ($125,000,000) would be an absolute decline in the consumption levels of bread grains, fats and oils and sugar, which would lead to the reimposition of food rationing in some countries and to a reduction in the present ration scale in others.

The ECA in its estimate last year estimated the total dollar import requirements of the participating countries at $1,036,000,000 for food from the United States during fiscal 1949–50. The estimate now before us, based on 8 months' experience, places this figure at $626,500,000, or a reduction of $410,000,000.

It becomes apparent that at least $125,000,000 was saved in this category alone, and there have been none of the dire results with respect to food consumption contemplated by ECA as quoted above. In fact, ECA now says, and I quote:

> The diet of western Europe has improved sharply, both in quantity and quality, since 1947 and is now back virtually to the prewar levels. The consumption of fruits and vegetables has expanded substantially as has that of fats and oils, dairy products, and meat. * * * The largest gains over 1947–48 were made by bread grains (42 percent) and sugar (40 percent) which rose from 69 to 98 and 77 to 108 percent, respectively, of prewar.

From my personal observation I can attest to the greatly improved diet and food consumption of the people of western Europe. Her agricultural production is approximately equal to prewar. The statistics before us also indicate impressive industrial recovery and show that Europe today, excluding Germany, is producing at a rate 29 percent above prewar. It would seem to me that this record indicates recovery has been achieved, yet we know that much of this recovery depends on some continued aid. This brings me up to the question we are now faced with. How much is it necessary for us to appropriate for the next fiscal year?

The things we need to know in order to determine how much should be appropriated for European recovery for the next fiscal year are not contained in the volume full of statistics which the Appropriations Committee has before it. The answer to the problem confronting us cannot be found today by comparing calories, bushels, tons, bales, and barrels for 1951 against 1950 or for Austria against Sweden.

The problem of determining the right amount of European aid is considerably different today from what it was at the beginning of the program 2 years ago. When people were near starvation one could calculate requirements for calories, translate them into dollars, and feel some confidence that he had the answer. When factories were idle, he could make an estimate of the quantities of copper, coal, and machinery to get them into operation, and he was proved correct if the result was that the factories got into operation. So long as feeding the hungry and getting idle machinery to operate were the immediate objectives, the job of estimating the money needed was relatively simple.

My point is that today those objectives have been reached, and that the problem of determining how much money it is necessary for us to supply for an economic-aid program for Europe is much more difficult.

The ECA recognizes that it is confronted with a changed situation, and its request for 1950–51 has been arrived at by cutting last year's amount of country aid by 25 percent and then reducing the sum further by certain savings from the 1949–50 program. This total has been divided up among countries and commodities with various individual adjustments. But the basic fact is that the over-all amount was arrived at by reducing the 1949–50 figure by 25 percent.

The ECA does not explain in detail how this 25 percent figure was arrived at, or why it was not 35 percent or 40 percent instead. Undoubtedly, a major factor was the unexpected progress in European production which had been made in the last year. When European industry is producing more than before the war, and European agriculture almost as much as before the war, the need for economic assistance has clearly diminished. I suspect that another factor which entered into the calculations in arriving at this 25-percent reduction was a judgment as to what the taxpayers of the United States would be willing to spend. The 25 percent figure was arrived at last autumn, and it is possible that a different judgment as to what we can afford to spend for European economic aid might be made today.

At any rate, my argument is that the ECA has not this year based its request on a target of mouths to feed or of idle factories, but it recognizes that money is necessary to carry forward its program toward objectives which are exceedingly difficult to translate into dollars. Translation has been made by a very simple device—a 25 percent cut. The thing that is really important, it seems to me, is not how the $2,657,000,000 which ECA is requesting is divided among countries or commodities, which is what the ECA presentation is concerned with, but why Europe needs 25 percent less than last year, rather than 50 percent, or 40 percent, or 15 percent less.

I have said that it is more difficult to estimate the requirements for European recovery in 1950 than it was in 1948. The answer that has been given to every proposal in the past for a substantial reduction in the ECA appropriation has been that it would wreck the program. Let me ask the Senate to consider what wrecking the program might mean. Certainly in view of the level of economic activity in Europe today, no one can argue that a further cut of ECA dollars of 15 percent—that is, 40 percent below 1949–50, instead of 25 percent below—would transform Europe into a land of starvation, or would stop the wheels of European industry. After all, ECA dollars are a relatively small part of Europe's total income today, Europe is well above the starvation level, and her factories are operating well above the prewar rate.

The dangers we have to meet with our dollars in Europe today are much less tangible. I suppose that most people, including Mr. Hoffman, would say that the most important thing for the ECA program to accomplish in Europe is to maintain the new spirit of hope and determination which has become manifest among the people of western Europe since the inauguration of the Marshall plan. I would agree that any cut in the ECA appropriation which would lead the people of Europe to feel that the United States no longer cared for their well-being, that we were no longer standing in their corner in the fight against communism, would be disastrous. I cannot believe, however, that under current conditions an appropriation of $2,657,000,000 would be right in this respect, while an appropriation of $2,200,000,000 would be wrong. Remember, Mr. President, that since 1948 we have become a party to the North Atlantic Treaty, and have embarked on a program of military assistance to Europe. Surely, the people of Europe know today that we are with them, and no item of a few hundred million dollars in economic assistance is going to alter that fact.

I believe that many people, including Mr. Hoffman, would agree that perhaps the second most important of our current objectives in Europe is to promote the economic integration of that area. Europe is not likely ever to pay its own way if it rebuilds its economy along the nationalistic lines that prevailed before the war. The only way in which Europe can make the maximum use of its resources is to develop into one big market and concentrate its production in the most advantageous locations.

The ECA proposes to make a substantial advance in this direction by establishing a European payments union, and is earmarking a part of next year's appropriation for that purpose. Nevertheless, I do not feel that much progress has been made toward industrial unification, and I feel that money is being spent unwisely in building factories in Europe to conform to programs which are essentially national in character. I commend to each member of this committee that section of the watchdog staff study entitled "An Analysis of the ECA Program" dealing with the economic unification of Europe. This report indicates that the pattern of the European steel industry has been set for the next generation, that it is not an integrated pattern, and that it has been financed with American money.

The so-called Schuman plan seems to hold much promise in this direction. The Schuman plan will not take much ECA money, however. As far as rebuilding the European steel industry is concerned, the money has already been committed.

I note that in the 1950–51 program Europe is to import about $900,000,000 worth of capital equipment from dollar sources. I maintain that this is too much. Until Europe is organized to put into effect a unified industrial program—which it is not today—the money will be spent to benefit national interests, and after the factories are built it is too late to integrate them. European factories are producing more than they did before the war. Let us not build any more until we know they will advance the integration of Europe.

I believe that Europe would be better off in the long run if we cut in half the ECA appropriation for capital equipment.

Probably most people, and I believe that Mr. Hoffman would agree, feel that a third major objective of our European program is to provide enough money so that no government will fall to another unfriendly to the United States. I cannot believe that at this time the political balance is so precarious that $2,657,000,000 of United States money will keep friendly governments in power, while $2,200,000,000 would be too little to permit us to keep the Communists from taking over France and Italy.

I concede that it is extremely difficult for anyone to estimate how many dollars it will take in 1950–51 to keep each country in western Europe from going Communist. It is extremely difficult to say how many dollars are required to maintain in Europe the spirit of hope rather than despair.

It is not my judgment that these things can be accomplished only with a sum of $2,657,000,000 and that an expenditure of $2,200,000,000 would make them impossible.

Unless in 1950–51 the spirit of Europe changes from hope to despair, unless the advance toward unification is reversed, and unless some participating governments are taken over by the Communists, I do not believe that anyone can charge that the program has been wrecked.

The ECA has always overestimated its requirements in the past. Last year when the watchdog staff estimated that the ECA appropriation request could be reduced by $740,000,000, it was charged that such a cut would wreck the program. Nevertheless, this estimate of the staff proved to be almost exactly the amount which the ECA has actually used.

I propose therefore that there be appropriated approximately $2,200,000,000 and that authority be granted to use the carry-over funds. This will provide approximately $2,500,000,000 for the ECA programs in 1950–51. This amount is approximately 16 percent less than ECA estimates its requirements for the coming fiscal year. This is, however, the same percentage by which the ECA estimate was overstated for the present fiscal year. I am sure that it cannot be shown today that such an amount would wreck the program.

I see no reason why the reduction which I recommend would cause western Europe to lose confidence in us, or why it would hinder steps toward integration, or why it would cause any participating government to fall.

If some unforeseen crisis should appear next winter, there will be ample time to present such problems to the Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Nevada for his forceful address based upon the analysis of the watchdog committee which was appointed to supervise and investigate the spending of ECA funds. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not feel that the report and the observations made completely justify the continuance of that committee during the life of ECA?

Mr. McCARRAN. I shall answer the Senator as follows: It has been my privilege to serve as chairman of the watchdog committee during the Eighty-first Congress. We have made very careful studies and very careful reports. Some of our reports have been put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. All of them have been made to the Congress. In my judgment it would be a colossal mistake to do away with the "watchdog committee," which was established by the Eightieth Congress. Under existing conditions, the Senate may know that no appropriation is available which would continue the staff of the "watchdog committee" beyond the 30th day of June. The ECA Authorization Act, a reenactment of the 1948 act, went through Congress some months ago. The act carried a provision for the "watchdog committee," but carried nothing in the way of an appropriation. As I have said, the appropriation will end on the 30th of this month, which will leave a legally constituted committee of the Senate and House of Representatives hamstrung because we shall have no means by which we can continue with our staff. Hence there will be no means of carrying out the direction of the legislation. I think it would be a great mistake to have that situation come about.

We had some difficulty in trying to put the item into the appropriation bill. Just a few days ago the Committee on Appropriations, I think by a unanimous vote, adopted a resolution providing that the "watchdog committee" should receive its money from the contingent fund of the Senate. That matter is now pending before the Committee on Rules and Administration, and it is my fervent hope, regardless of who may be the chairman of the "watchdog committee," for the next year at least, that the item will be approved by the Committee on Rules and Administration and that the "watchdog committee" will be continued, so that it may act in accordance with the law.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. In the judgment of the distinguished Senator from Nevada is the amount of the proposed appropriation consistent with the staff and personnel that is needed to continue the activities of the watchdog committee?

Mr. McCARRAN. Very much so. I wish to say in that regard that the Appropriations Committee cut the item down to such a point that we had to reduce the staff, and very capable and competent members of the staff, seeing the end in sight, sought other employment. We are now going along with what might be termed a skeleton staff. It is a very competent skeleton staff. If the amount suggested by the Committee on Appropriations is approved by the Committee on Rules and Administration, we can restaff the watchdog committee and continue to do what I think is a worth-while job.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

INCREASE OF BORROWING POWER OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 6567, to increase the borrowing power of Commodity Credit Corporation, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of Commodity Credit Corporation, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 7, sec. 624), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 22. (a) Whenever the Secretary of Agriculture has reason to believe that any article or articles are being or are practically certain to be imported into the United States under such conditions and in such quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, any program or operation undertaken under this title or the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, or section 32, Public Law Numbered 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, or any loan, purchase, or other program or operation undertaken by the Department of Agriculture, or any agency operating under its direction, with respect to any agricultural commodity or product thereof, or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any agricultural commodity or product thereof with respect to which any such program or operation is being undertaken, he shall so advise the President, and, if the President agrees that there is reason for such belief, the President shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission, which shall give precedence to investigations under this section to determine such facts. Such investigation shall be made after due notice and opportunity for hearing to interested parties, and shall be conducted subject to such regulation as the President shall specify.

"'(b) If, on the basis of such investigation and report to him of findings and recommendations made in connection therewith, the President finds the existence of such facts, he shall by proclamation impose such fees not in excess of 50 per centum ad valorem or such quantitative limitations on any article or articles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption as he finds and declares shown by such investigation to be necessary in order that the entry of such article or articles will not render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, any program or operation referred to in subsection (a) of this section, or reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any such agricultural commodity or product thereof with respect to which any such program or operation is being undertaken: Provided, That no proclamation under this section shall impose any limitation on the total quantity of any article or articles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption which reduces such permissible total quantity to proportionately less than 50 per centum of the total quantity of such article or articles which was entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during a representative period as determined by the President: And provided further, That in designating any article or articles, the President may describe them by physical qualities, value, use, or upon such other bases as he shall determine.

"'(c) The fees and limitations imposed by the President by proclamation under this section and any revocation, suspension, or modification thereof, shall become effective on such date as shall be therein specified, and such fees shall be treated for administrative purposes and for the purposes of section 32 of Public Law Numbered 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 24, 1935, as amended, as duties imposed by the Tariff Act of 1930, but such fees shall not be considered as duties for the purpose of granting any preferential concession under any international obligation of the United States.

"'(d) After investigation, report, finding, and declaration in the manner provided in the case of a proclamation issued pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, any proclamation or provision of such proclamation may be suspended or terminated by the President whenever he finds and proclaims that the circumstances requiring the proclamation or provision thereof no longer exist or may be modified by the President whenever he finds and proclaims that changed circumstances require such modification to carry out the purposes of this section.

"'(e) Any decision of the President as to facts under this section shall be final.

"'(f) No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party; but no international agreement or amendment to an existing international agreement shall hereafter be entered into which does not permit the enforcement of this section with respect to the articles and countries to which such agreement or amendment is applicable to the full extent that the general agreement on tariffs and trade, as heretofore entered into by the United States, permits such enforcement with respect to the articles and countries to which such general agreement is applicable. Prescription of a lower rate of duty for any article than that prescribed by the general agreement on tariffs, and trade shall not, if subject to the escape provisions of such general agreement, be deemed a violation of this subsection.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask for immediate consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MYERS. Based on several conferences which we have had on the subject, we have come to the conclusion that it may be possible to work out a unanimous consent agreement to vote on the conference report at 4 o'clock on Monday afternoon. However, before submitting a unanimous consent request, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Anderson	Chavez	Ellender

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair). A quorum is present.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, after making some inquiries it seems it will be impossible to reach a vote on the conference report this afternoon. I therefore make the unanimous-consent request that on the calendar day of Monday, June 26, 1950, at the hour of 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to vote, without further debate, upon the motion to agree to the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation; that the time between 12 o'clock and 4 o'clock p. m. on said day be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the report, the time to be controlled, respectively, by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON].

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, I wish to say that I made inquiry in the forepart of this week as to what we might expect respecting the calendar of business for this week, and the majority leader at that time gave me quite definite information about what we had to expect, and what he hoped we would be able to accomplish before the end of the week.

I realize fully that no one can predict what the Senate will do or how much time will be required on a legislative measure. Nevertheless, knowing that the conference report on the Commodity Credit Corporation bill would be taken up today, and not expecting more than a couple of hours of discussion on it, I canceled meetings at which I had arranged to be present this week end, and had them postponed until next week. It is not possible for me to leave Minnesota until 7:15 on Tuesday morning. That will bring me back into Washington before 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, providing we have flying weather that will permit us to take off in Minnesota and land in Washington.

If the vote comes on Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock I shall not be here. I regret that I cannot be here, because I am a member of the conferees on the part of the Senate who have finally signed the report. I signed it reluctantly. For that reason I should like to be present when the report is finally considered and passed upon. So if there is acceptance of a request to vote at 4 o'clock on Monday I shall regret it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I make an inquiry of the distinguished acting majority leader? In the event the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into, and I hope it will be, the conference report will then be the pending business, and, of course, will be open to debate until the Senate recesses when it is through with its business today. Is it the intention of the distinguished acting majority leader to keep the report as the pending business, or in the event there is not sufficient debate upon it today to occupy the remaining time, is it the intention to take up something else?

I should like to know, because several Senators are wondering whether or not there might be a vote on something else before the conclusion of the Senate's session today.

Mr. MYERS. I can reply to the minority leader in this manner. I think there are probably sufficient speeches to be made today on the conference report to occupy the remainder of the time. If there are no further speeches, then, as we reach an appropriate hour, I think we should recess and not resume the consideration of the military-assistance bill.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. THYE. It is now only 2:25 p. m. The afternoon is long. I believe it would be good business and good policy to undertake to have the speeches that are to be made, delivered this afternoon, and try to arrive at a vote on this measure before we recess this evening. There are many hours remaining before a reasonable time for taking a recess arrives. I do not believe there will be speeches on this question so lengthy that we would run into a late hour this evening before arriving at a vote on the question.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to reply to the Senator from Minnesota in this manner: I endeavored to secure unanimous-consent agreement for voting at 1 or 2 o'clock on Monday, and those who are objecting to the conference report refused to enter into such an agreement, because they really believe that they needed not only the time remaining today, but a few hours on Monday to discuss the conference report. Personally I should be very happy if we could get the report out of the way today, by voting on it later in the afternoon, but I have been informed by a number of Senators that it will be impossible to secure a vote this afternoon.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that some unanimous-consent agreements result in delaying the legislative work of the Senate. I have seen unanimous-consent agreements arrived at to vote at a certain hour, after which there was no Senator on the floor ready to speak on the subject involved, and the Senate was obliged to recess for as much as an hour and a half in midafternoon because no Senator wanted to take up the time to speak. That is the difficulty and the trouble with respect to arriving at unanimous-consent agreements. We arrive at them, and then we mark time, as a soldier would say, for hours without continuing discussion of the question under consideration, waiting only for the hour to vote to arrive.

I regret exceedingly that we cannot proceed with the report now. I hope we can at least pass it over until next Tuesday at 4 o'clock, by entering into a unanimous-consent agreement to vote at that time, and in the meantime consider some other measure.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I should like to say that I have a great deal of sympathy for the point of view expressed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE]. I should like very much to have the Senator from Minnesota present not only when the vote is taken but when most of the debate on this matter takes place, because as one of the conferees, I prize very highly his point of view on matters affecting American agriculture. As he knows, I seek his counsel constantly in regard to agricultural problems, along with that of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN].

As one who objects to voting this afternoon, I want to say to the Senator from Minnesota that I prefer not to vote this afternoon for two reasons. I have checked into the question of a roll call, and I feel that we will be in a much better position to defeat the conference report Monday than we will be this afternoon. I want to be very frank about that.

Second, I think it is going to take the week end for some of my colleagues in the Senate to be fully apprised as to the attitude of America's farm organizations in regard to the conference report. Before the week end is over I think they will hear from those farm organizations, as they are very much opposed to the conference report, because they feel that great damage would be done American agriculture if the report were adopted. I quite agree with the farm organizations. I would have no objection if a unanimous-consent agreement could be worked out with the acting majority leader to vote on Tuesday at 4 o'clock, with the understanding that on Monday we take up some other measure, beginning at 12 o'clock noon, and devote our time on Monday to it, and then vote on the conference report on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. But I have no jurisdiction at all in that matter.

I am satisfied that if the intention is to have the conference report voted on this afternoon the debate which will occur will be so prolonged that it will not be possible to reach a vote on the conference report this afternoon, because I think a serious mistake has been committed in the conference report. In my opinion, those of us who are doing what we can to protect the best interests of American agriculture must make a complete record on this particular conference report, because I believe the language of the conference report is worse than nothing on this subject matter. I think we should go back to the Magnuson-Morse amendment and to the language of the House bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I join the Senator from Oregon in saying that I feel reasonably certain that there is not enough time left this afternoon to debate this matter as it should be debated. I am agreeable to having the vote on the conference report taken either on Monday or on Tuesday, but I do know that there are quite a few points which should and will be brought out in the debate on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I have asked to be recognized in order that I may comment on the remarks of the very able junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]. He said the farm organizations are very unhappy about the conference committee's report relative to what we call the Magnuson amendment. I personally stated earlier that I myself was very unhappy about the conference report, and I signed it very reluctantly. But after I learned that it was utterly and absolutely impossible to obtain any agreement from the other branch of the Congress, the House of Representatives, as to the inclusion of different language in the conference report, I finally agreed to sign this conference report, because it already is late in the season; today, is June 23, and the combines are in operation in the Southwest, and the harvest is moving north, and the entire Commodity Credit Corporation's program is awaiting the final action on this matter. Every day we delay action on this piece of legislation, that much later will be the final report, coming from the Commodity Credit Corporation, which gives the farmer any assurance of what his support program for this year will be.

It was for that reason—because of the lateness in the year and the positive knowledge that the House of Representatives would not yield to us—that I finally agreed to sign this particular conference report, but I did so most unhappily.

I wish to say that every day we delay the enactment of this measure, we are creating a greater confusion in the agricultural areas of the Nation, because of the lack of a farm-support-program announcement.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I merely wish to assure the Senator from Minnesota that there is no disposition on the part of those of us who support the amendment to delay this matter. We appreciate the necessity of having something done about the conference report by the end of the month. However, we feel very strongly about the amendment. We think it is very greatly in the interest of the agriculture of the United States, and we want to make the fight on that basis.

I was merely going to suggest to the acting majority leader that if it were possible, if some other proposed legislation could be taken up on Monday or even during the remainder of today, without having a vote on it, then perhaps we could vote on the conference report on Tuesday at 4 o'clock—setting the conference report aside until then. If that decision were reached, we could then either vote up or vote down the conference report at that time. Of course, the report must be adopted by the end of the month.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I think that the proper procedure—and I am sure the acting majority leader will agree—is to attempt to have favorable action taken on the proposal to have the vote on the conference report taken on Monday afternoon. Certainly I could not agree to the suggestion of the Senator from Washington that the conference report be set aside and that the Senate take up some other measure, in view of the fact that an announcement was made, as all Members of the Senate know, that the business before the Senate this afternoon would be the conference report on the Commodity Credit Corporation bill.

Of course, whenever an attempt is made to obtain a unanimous-consent agreement, it is very difficult to satisfy everyone. However, if Monday is not satisfactory, then I certainly would suggest that the acting majority leader make a proposal to have the vote on the conference report taken some time later next week.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The impression seems to have been created that we are operating against a deadline, so far as this measure is concerned—a deadline of June 30, or some such date. However, Mr. President, there is no deadline so far as the adoption of this conference report is concerned. There is no reason in the world why the Secretary of Agriculture has not already announced his 1950 wheat program, unless he arbitrarily sees fit to hold it up in an attempt to force Congress to adopt this conference report. If any farmer in the Midwest or elsewhere is having any trouble in getting his loans, I wish he would tell us about it, because there is absolutely nothing which prohibits the Secretary of Agriculture from taking care of all the farmers in this matter; and certainly they should be taken care of, regardless of whether we as individual Senators agree on the law which is now on the statute books.

I am not going to object to the proposal to postpone the vote on the conference report until Monday; but I do not wish the Senate to be under the misapprehension that a deadline is involved, or to operate under any alleged threat from the administration that there is a deadline which much be met or otherwise the agricultural program will be sabotaged.

The Secretary of Agriculture has ample funds now on hand to carry out his announced programs and I will discuss this phase further Monday.

Furthermore I call particular attention to the fact that this Corporation which is seeking another $2,000,000,000 has still not submitted their audited reports to the Congress for their operations during the period since June 30, 1947. And as I pointed out last week, the Corporation as of June 30, 1947, found it necessary to write off over $96,000,000 in order to balance their books.

So far as I am concerned those books for the years 1948, 1949 are going to be delivered to the Senate before they get another dime.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. I yield.

Mr. THYE. The Senator from Delaware has said there are ample funds, and that there is no reason why the Secretary of Agriculture cannot announce the program. The Senator is correct, in that the funds available are ample to permit announcement of a support program for wheat, and possibly to permit announcement of a support program for some of the other basic commodities which may come to harvest early in this particular calendar year.

However, let us remember that the diversified farmer and the other type of farmer—as distinguished from wheat, cotton, or corn farmers—have just as much right to the Commodity Credit Corporation funds as any other groups of farmers do. If the Secretary of Agriculture were to obligate all the present funds to the crop now coming on—in other words, the crop now in harvest—there would be no funds left to support poultry, pork, dairy products, citrus fruits, or some of the other nonbasics.

I think the Secretary of Agriculture has in mind that when he announces the program, he must know whether he has sufficient funds to go through with it in regard to the perishables or the nonbasics, as well as the basic commodities, the price of which by law the Secretary of Agriculture is mandatorily bound to support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous consent request of the Senator from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to reply to what the Senator has just said, but before doing so, I have no objection to having the unanimous-consent agreement entered into.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator reserve the right to object?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, is the unanimous-consent request agreed to? If it is, I shall then be happy to yield to the Senator from Delaware for the purpose of making the reply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not finally announced that it was agreed to. Does the Senator from Delaware object?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous consent is entered into.

The unanimous-consent agreement, as reduced to writing, is as follows:

Ordered, That on the calendar day of Monday, June 26, 1950, at the hour of 4 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to vote, without further debate, upon the question of agreeing to the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Ordered further, That the time between 12 o'clock and 4 o'clock p. m. on said day be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the report and controlled, respectively, by Mr. ELLENDER and Mr. MAGNUSON.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I merely desire to say, in reply to what the Senator from Minnesota has just said, that the Senator from Minnesota was pointing out the fact that the combines are now operating in the Midwest, and that the farmers there were going to be confronted with a serious problem.

Mr. THYE. If the Senator will permit a correction, I did not refer to combines operating in the Midwest, but in the extreme Southwest.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The extreme Southwest is what I meant. The farmers of that area will not be up against any problem at all, if the Secretary of Agriculture will carry out the instructions of the Congress and will administer the law, for which he has the necessary money available. The only reason in the world why he would place any farmer in an embarassing position today is because he wants to put a little pressure on Congress to give him this $2,000,000,000 increased borrowing power.

ENLISTMENT OF ALIENS IN REGULAR ARMY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2269) to provide for the enlistment of aliens in the Regular Army, which were, on page 1, line 5, strike out "1951" and insert "1953"; on page 1, line 6, after "enlistments", insert "or reenlistments"; on, page 1, line 7 and 8, strike out "ten thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred"; on page 1, line 8, after "unmarried", insert "male"; on page 2, line 4, after "determine", insert "; Provided, That persons enlisted under the provisions of this Act shall be integrated into established units with citizen soldiers and not segregated into separate organizations for aliens"; on page 2, line 17, strike out "1951" and insert "1953", and on page 3, line 3, after "shall", insert "if otherwise qualified for citizenship, and after completion of five or more years of military service, if honorably discharged therefrom."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this is a Senate bill which was reported unanimously by the Armed Services Committee of the Senate. It was passed by the Senate unanimously. The purpose of the bill is to authorize the enlistment in the Army of 10,000 selected aliens. The House took the Senate bill as reported by the Senate Armed Services Committee, but reduced the number from 10,000 to 2,500. It was then passed by the House, yesterday.

Let me say that the bill is strongly desired by the Chief of Staff of the Army, which is due to the fact that World War II proved that it is vitally necessary that we have within the ranks men who understand the languages, customs, people, terrain, and weapons of different nations. I know of no objection to the bill. The change from 10,000 to 2,500 has the approval of the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], with whom I have consulted. I therefore move that the Senate agree to the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

INCREASE IN BORROWING POWER OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the Senate now has under consideration the conference report agreed upon by the conferees appointed by this body, on H. R. 6567. I may say the House has already adopted the report, and it is now up to the Senate to do likewise, in order that the bill may be sent to the President for his signature.

I thought it might be advisable at this time for me to give a brief history of the amendment to section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as it has been made part of the report we are now considering. It will be recalled that the Senate adopted the House version of the bill and added to it the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment, which seeks to amend section 22 in three respects. Under section 22 of the present law, whenever the President has reason to believe that any article or articles are being or are practically certain to be imported into the United States under such conditions and such quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective, or materially interfere with, any farm program, he may require the Tariff Commission to investigate the matter and, upon the finding of that Commission, he may decide under that section whether to increase the tariff, or impose a quota on goods being imported into this country.

The Magnuson amendment, in the first instance, changes that portion of section 22 and places the responsibility on the Secretary of Agriculture to initiate these proceedings. Second, instead of having the Tariff Commission make the final investigation, as is now provided by the law, the Magnuson amendment would make it read so that the Department of Agriculture would investigate the matter and make all findings and reports to the President.

The third and most important change is with respect to subsection (f) of section 22 of the present law.

Subsection (f) provides specifically that no proclamation under section 22 shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreements to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party. The significant change made by the so-called Magnuson amendment to that particular subsection (f) is that it reverses the order, in that it provides that no international agreement may hereafter be entered into or present agreements extended beyond their termination dates which do not reserve the right of this country to invoke section 22 whenever the President decides to do so. That is the distinction between the present law and the provisions of the Magnuson amendment. The House did not pass upon that issue.

We went into conference, and of course met with strenuous opposition to the Magnuson amendment on the part of the House conferees. We met on two occasions, and finally came to an agreement. It is true that the Senate conferees did not get all they sought, but I believe that some progress has been made toward carrying out the policies and protective provisions of section 22 of the present law. The conferees agreed to reenactment of the present law, with two changes. Instead of the President's initiating the investigation as to whether goods should be prevented, under the provisions of section 22, from coming into the United States, the Secretary of Agriculture is to initiate the inquiry, the same as is provided in the Magnuson amendment, with the addition that after the Secretary of Agriculture makes his finding he shall so advise the President, and if the President shall agree that there is reason for such relief, the President is required to cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission to determine the facts.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Has the Senator seen the letter sent out by the American Farm Bureau Federation relative to section 22?

Mr. ELLENDER. I may state to the distinguished Senator that I have received many letters, but I do not recall that particular letter.

Mr. THYE. If the Senator will yield, I should like to read one paragraph of the letter, because it is relevant to the remarks which the Senator has made with reference to the entire question.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire letter be printed in the RECORD at this point. It is a letter addressed to me by Mr. J. Don Parel, associate director of the Washington office of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1950.

HON. EDWARD J. THYE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THYE: In compliance with your request concerning the views of the American Farm Bureau Federation relative to the conferees' action on section 22 of H. R. 6567, they are as follows:

Section 22 was designed to protect United States agriculture from imports when such imports would cause undue hardships to domestic producers of like commodities.

The proposed conference amendment to section 22 does not accomplish the original objective of section 22 to which we are committed by American Farm Bureau Federation resolution.

If the Congress accepts the conference report, the situation will be improved if the legislative history includes an interpretation of the conference amendment showing it was the intention of the Congress that under the conference amendment section 22 could be invoked when acreage allotments, marketing quotas, or marketing agreements are in force with regard to any agricultural commodity or when surpluses of agricultural commodities are being used for school-lunch and other domestic-consumer programs.

Sincerely,

DON PAREL,
Associate Director, Washington Office.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, the last paragraph of the letter covers the main question. It reads as follows:

If the Congress accepts the conference report, the situation will be improved if the legislative history includes an interpretation of the conference amendment showing it was the intention of the Congress that under the conference amendment section 22 could be invoked when acreage allotments, marketing quotas, or marketing agreements are in force with regard to any agricultural commodity, or when surpluses of agricultural commodities are being used for school-lunch and other domestic-consumer programs.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, in the course of my remarks I shall bring out that point. I believe, as the letter states, that the language contained in the conference report is an improvement on the present law. Under the present law it is optional that the President continue the safeguards that are contained in article XI of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, but this new language makes it obligatory on him to incorporate these safeguards in any future agreements or amendments to existing agreements.

Mr. THYE. If I may ask a further question of the Senator, if that becomes mandatory on the President, then why was the Magnuson amendment emasculated in the manner in which it was?

Mr. ELLENDER. I may state to my distinguished friend that we were dealing in conference; we dealt with House Members who had not considered this proposal, and they made us a proposition which we accepted. I think it is a decided improvement on the present law.

Mr. THYE. As the Senator so well knows, I was a member of the conference committee, and the Senator knows as well as I do that we did not yield until we felt that every effort on the part of the Senate conferees had been exhausted. Some of us felt it was useless to debate it any longer, and we either had to report that we were in disagreement or we had to sign what we had before us and report it to the Senate. I was most unhappy when I signed it, because I felt we were suggesting to the President what we hoped he would do, but I did not feel that we wrote anything into the law which made it mandatory on the part of the President to do something. That is why I read the paragraph from this letter, so as to make certain that the very able Senator from Louisiana would agree specifically that what we, as members of the conference committee and Members of the Congress, want, so far as the Senate is concerned, is the application of the very position stated in the letter from the American Farm Bureau Federation. That is what we expect of the President and what we expect of the officials of the Commodity Credit Corporation, including the Secretary of Agriculture. What we hoped for and what the Magnuson amendment intended, was to do that which is stated in the paragraph of the letter which I read.

Mr. ELLENDER. I propose to discuss with the Senate a little later the provisions of the general agreement dealing with the very subjects to which the Senator has referred. It makes it obligatory on the President when negotiating new agreements or changes in existing agreements to include the pertinent provisions now contained in GATT.

Mr. President, just before I was interrupted——

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. THYE. I thank the Senator for yielding to me. I realize that he yielded for more than a question. He permitted me to speak my real thoughts and convictions on the question.

Mr. ELLENDER. I was very glad to yield to my distinguished friend from Minnesota.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I shall not get into a discussion with the distinguished Senator from Louisiana with reference to this amendment, because I appreciate the problems of the conference, and I appreciate the fact that the objective sought by the change of the amendment was somewhat along the lines of the original agreement, but I hope that before we are through with the discussion the Senator from Louisiana will discuss the practical angle. Experience has taught us many times that with the processes which are now in effect, by the time we get around to achieving any action on the matter the damage has already been done.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand the Magnuson amendment, it is not retroactive; it applies to future agreements.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. The conference report on the pending bill also applies to future agreements. It prohibits the President from entering into agreements which do not permit the imposition of quotas under section 22 to the extent permitted by article XI of the United Nations general agreement on tariffs and trade, or which do not permit increases in duties under section 22 to the extent permitted by article XIX of such general agreement. Today, in entering into new agreements, he can disregard the policy of articles XI and XIX entirely, or he can further limit their scope. We have provided that the President must in the future make international agreements in accord with the exceptions that are contained in articles XI and XIX of the general agreement on tariffs and trade. I am saying to my friend that this is, to my mind, an improvement on what we now have, because as I have indicated, under subsection (f) of section 22 he can bypass section 22, but we are making it obligatory on him to continue the safeguards of articles XI and XIX in the future.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, the Senator from Louisiana appreciates that it has been bypassed on many occasions.

Mr. ELLENDER. For the reason that subsection (f) of section 22 gave him full authority to bypass it. He could use his own discretion in entering into trade agreements. However, Congress is telling him, "You must make future agreements which are consistent with the policy of articles XI and XIX of the general agreement on tariffs and trade."

The questions anticipated a little what I was going to say. Now that we are on the subject I may as well discuss it. As I tried to indicate, the agreement reached by the conference committee leaves section 22 as it is now written with two exceptions, one exception being that the Secretary of Agriculture is made responsible for initiating action instead of the President. After the Secretary comes to a conclusion, he advises the President, and if the President agrees with the Secretary the President proceeds, as now provided under section 22, to have the Tariff Commission investigate the facts and make a finding.

I come now specifically to what may be termed the meat in the coconut. I refer to subsection (f).

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. THYE. This is the language which is in the report. It says:

The Department of Agriculture, or any agency operating under its direction, with respect to any agricultural commodity or product thereof, or to reduce substantially the amount of any product processed in the United States from any agricultural commodity or product thereof with respect to which any such program or operation is being undertaken, he shall so advise the President, and, if the President agrees that there is reason for such belief, the President shall cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission.

I am afraid of that "if," and I was afraid of it at the time I reluctantly signed the conference report. It says, "if the President agrees." The President may not agree. He has what might be called a mile of latitude in the word "if." That is what I was concerned about when I reluctantly signed the conference report.

Mr. ELLENDER. As the Senator knows, the Secretary of Agriculture is an appointee of the President. He acts under the President, and the President in the past has been given discretionary powers over the entire executive department. That is really the reason for the language. We cannot make it obligatory upon the President to carry out the recommendations of the Secretary.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator if it is not a fact that the conference committee had the feeling that the provision as incorporated in the conference report, which required the Secretary of Agriculture to take affirmative action by making a report of a threat to the agricultural economy of the Nation, or any particular portion thereof which was under a support-price program, would itself bring a greater guaranty to American agriculture than would anything in the present law.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; and that action would be taken. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is it not a fact that it was the view of the conferees—I believe it was the unanimous view of the conferees—that agriculture would receive much greater protection by having a positive, affirmative requirement that the Secretary of Agriculture, when there was a threat, must take action and would take action, than to have, as under the present law, no such requirement, in which case there is no assurance of initiating any action whatsoever?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator is correct. That is absolutely true.

Mr. HOLLAND. Therefore it would be much more likely that the President would take action in requiring the investigation by the Tariff Commission——

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Since the Secretary of Agriculture had taken official action to protect an official program existing under a law of the United States and supported by appropriations made by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is the Senator still of the opinion that that one provision brings about a much more effective initiation of the program than that embraced in the present law?

Mr. ELLENDER. Exactly. It is an improvement on what we have.

Before I was interrupted—and I do not mind interruptions—I was about to discuss subsection (f) in the light of the way it was changed in conference. It will be noted that the language of subsection (f) of the present law has not been changed. In other words, it says:

> No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party.

That language is also in the amendment agreed upon in conference.

However, we have added this significant language, which in my opinion is also an improvement over what we have under the law at the present time. Let us not forget that, although the President has the power under the general agreement on tariffs and trade, to take certain action under section 22 when we have a surplus and when we have a production control program, the President could, under the present language of section 22, give up such power in a future agreement. This new language makes it mandatory that the President continue the present conditions of the general agreement under which we can now invoke section 22. I will read it:

> But no international agreement or amendment to an existing international agreement shall hereafter be entered into which does not permit the enforcement of this section with respect to the articles and countries to which such agreement or amendment is applicable to the full extent that the general agreement on tariffs and trade, as heretofore entered into by the United States, permits such enforcement with respect to the articles and countries to which such general agreement is applicable.

In other words, under the general agreement, article XI, we have this provision:

> 1. No prohibitions or restrictions other than duties, taxes, or other charges, whether made effective through quotas, import or export licenses or other measures, shall be instituted or maintained by any contracting party on the importation of any product of the territory of any other contracting party or on the exportation or sale for export of any product destined for the territory of any other contracting party.

That is the general provision in article XI of the general agreement on tariffs and trade. However, to that general provision there are exceptions. Let me read one:

> 2. The provisions of paragraph 1 this article shall not extend to the following:
> (c) Import restrictions on any agricultural or fisheries product, imported in any form, necessary to the enforcement of governmental measures which operate—

I invite the attention of Senators to this part—> to restrict the quantities of the like domestic product permitted to be marketed or produced.

In other words, if we have in this country today marketing agreements or, as we have on cotton, acreage controls, the President can impose quotas under the section 22 upon the importation of the commodity which is subject to such agreements or controls. This rule applies to any commodity on which we have an effective marketing quota or acreage reduction. Section 22 can be invoked in those cases.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. THYE. What would be the situation so far as powdered eggs coming in from a foreign country are concerned, or with respect to dairy products? Perhaps we could refer to apples, or potatoes. Of course potatoes would be under an acreage allotment or marketing agreement. However, so far as apples are concerned, that would not be the situation, because there are no marketing agreements on apples.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand the provisions which I have just read, their intent is that these sections apply in cases where we have marketing quotas or some other effective production control. With respect to eggs, we do not have an effective marketing or production control. Therefore, the provisions of article XI which I have read do not apply. However, where we do have production controls, as in the case of cotton and corn, those provisions would apply.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, the effect of the conference report, as I interpret it, is to substitute article XI for the provisions of section 22.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let me state to the distinguished Senator from Washington that the point is that the general agreement on tariffs and trade, because of the exceptions I have just read, allows section 22 to be fully effective, if there are in effect, as I have stated here, marketing or production limitations.

Mr. MAGNUSON. And if the State Department would carry them out.

Mr. ELLENDER. Oh, no; I beg the Senator's pardon. That is the law now. But if the Senate should agree to the conference report, it will make it obligatory on the State Department and on the President not to exclude these provisions in any future agreement, as they can now do.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let us get this straight; not to refrain from violating section 22, but not to violate the provisions of article XI.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct; he must keep the present relationships between section 22 and the general agreement in effect.

Mr. MAGNUSON. So we might as well be honest about it and repeal section 22.

Mr. ELLENDER. No. I state with all the emphasis in my power that as I understand the report, as to matters which can be dealt with under articles XI and XIX, section 22, under the terms of the conference agreement, has the same force and effect as it now has. Of course, we have to have an effective marketing or production control on the commodities involved, or come within some other permissive provision of article XI or XIX, before section 22 can be invoked.

The reason why the Senator is a little troubled is, I believe, because we cannot have an effective production control for apples, let us say, unless the apple trees are cut down. We face the same problem in imposing effective control of the production of eggs. As to those commodities, it may not be possible to have effective controls.

Thus there may be a question as to whether or not article XI applies. But I again state and emphasize that as to all commodities which can be effectively controlled, either through marketing quotas or through production controls, the operation of section 22 under the general agreement on tariffs and trade can be made as effective as it now is. Does the Senator disagree with that?

Mr. MAGNUSON. No; I do not disagree with that; I say it can be, but if my amendment had been retained, we would have been assured it would be.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am pointing out to the distinguished Senator that the same language which he proposed in his amendment has been incorporated in the conference report. Let me read it again to the Senator:

No international agreement or amendment to an existing international agreement shall hereafter be entered into—

The same language the distinguished Senator used—which does not permit the enforcement of this section with respect to the articles and countries to which such agreement or amendment is applicable.

Certainly the distinguished Senator will not deny that article XI of the general agreement on tariffs and trade provides:

The provisions of paragraph 1—

Which I read awhile ago—shall not extend to the following—

And what is included in the "following"?—

(c) import restrictions on any agricultural or fisheries product, imported in any form, necessary to the enforcement of governmental measures which operate—

(i) to restrict the quantities of the like domestic product permitted to be marketed or produced, or, if there is no substantial domestic production of the like product, of a domestic product for which the imported product can be directly substituted; or

(ii) to remove a temporary surplus of the like domestic product, or, if there is no substantial domestic production of the like product, of a domestic product for which the imported product can be diretcly substituted, by making the surplus available to certain groups of domestic consumers free of charge or at prices below the current market level.

Referring to the furnishing of school lunches and measures of that character. In other words, whenever we have surpluses of certain commodities which are being removed from the market by the Government or on which effective production controls are in effect, the general agreement on tariffs and trade would allow section 22 to be invoked.

Mr. President, what we have written in the conference report is that the President shall in the future consider the policies set out in articles XI and XIX of GATT, and he shall not enter into any future agreement unless the policies of those provisions are carried out therein. In other words, he cannot disregard them, as he could do under the present law.

Mr. President, I should also like to point out that the new subsection (f) does not prevent the President from entering into agreements that prescribe lower rates of duty than are prescribed in the general agreement for the same articles. However, the new subsection (f) does require that such agreements contain an escape clause similar to that contained in article XIX of the general agreement. This is made clear in the last sentence of the new subsection (f).

Mr. President, I wish to say, in conclusion, that I think the Senate conferees have discharged their duty well, especially in view of the fact that, as the Senator from Minnesota will remember, when we walked into the conference the first thing the conferees from the House said was, "We want our bill as written. We do not want the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment." It was up to us then to battle with them. We discussed the matter on the first day for quite some time, and I could see that, with the Magnuson-Morse amendment in the bill as written, there would be no chance at all to have the House agree.

The first thing Mr. SPENCE, who represented the House, said was, "I have it from good authority, unquestionable authority, that if the Magnuson-Morse amendment remains in the bill the President will veto the bill."

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point that I may support the Senator's statement?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. THYE. I address my remarks to the able Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], as well as to the Senator from Louisiana. When we were in the conference, while we studied the overall question of the amendment the first day, and likewise into the second day of conference with the House Members, we, as Senate Members of the conference, definitely recognized that we were not going to get House concurrence in the amendment as it was written. As the Senator from Louisiana stated, if that amendment as it is drawn, were to remain in the Senate bill, we could expect a Presidential veto. I wish to state again that it was for that reason that I, as one of the conferees, signed the report.

If the Senator will allow me, I should like to make a further remark. I regret that I shall not be present on Monday when the vote comes on the question of whether the conference report shall be adopted or rejected. A unanimous-consent agreement has been reached for a vote on the report on Monday. I shall not be able to return from the State of Minnesota for that vote on Monday. I stated earlier that I had changed my schedule so as to be present today. After having changed my schedule I now find that we cannot have a vote on the measure today, but that the vote will be taken on Monday, when I cannot be present. Were I present—and that is the reason for these remarks now—I would vote for and I would ask the Senate to adopt the report as it is written. I do not believe—and I say this in all sincerity—that we could obtain any better language than appears in the report as it is now written. All that can be done is to delay for several more days the enactment of this proposed legislation, which would delay the final announcement of a farm-support program to the farmers. I think it would not only be a mistake but a catastrophe if that announcement were delayed many days, because it is already late. It is for that reason that I am announcing now that were I here on Monday I would ask the Senate to adopt the report as it is written.

In event there are any mistakes, as it may seem to us, made by the Secretary of Agriculture and by the President in administering the provisions of this proposed act, we will be back in session at the beginning of next year and we can deal with the question at that time again.

I should like to say to the very able Senator from Washington I fully realize his disappointment. I am disappointed. But I realize that when we are up against a stone wall which we cannot very easily hurdle and we know we cannot hurdle it, we had better make the very best of it, rather than delay the whole farm program in an attempt to send the report back for another conference with the House conferees.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Neither the Senator from Oregon nor I want to delay this matter. It is important to announce the farm program as soon as possible. I appreciate that. But, in my opinion, the truth of the matter is that this is something which is of far greater importance for the future of American agriculture under the present Government-support system. The State Department, the reciprocity committees, and the Tariff Commission are now in the process of forming their lines for conference in England in the latter part of August, I believe, for the negotiation of new trade agreements. Most of those agreements will run for 3 years. Most of the agreements now being renegotiated are of vital importance to American agriculture, because they involve countries which are themselves engaged in the production of agricultural products similar to our own.

I think it is vitally important that the State Department know, not only the intent of Congress, but the extreme necessity of making the new trade agreements in such a way that they will fit into our Government-support program. Had my amendment been in the law we would not have had the potato scandal we had last year. We would not have had a situation which makes people wonder why it seems that we support prices out of one pocket and then allow the State Department to negotiate agreements which might be injurious.

I appreciate the problem the conferees had. The Senator from Louisiana said that last year the Senate adopted the same amendment to the Anderson bill by a vote of, I believe, 54 to 22. The Senator from Louisiana is correct in stating that the President of the United States at that time said to the congressional leaders, and to me, I might say, that if the Anderson bill contained the amendment he, the President, would probably veto the bill. I do not know where the information comes now to the House side. Surely there has been no intimation to me now from the White House that there would be a veto of the commodity-credit bill because of my amendment.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. THYE. We have had so many vetoes during this legislative session that many of us realize they come forth just as the blossoms in the spring.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think the vetoes of the President so far have been correct. It happens that I voted against the measures he has vetoed. But I think there has been a considerable change of thinking toward this so-called approach, because since last year we have had this problem brought to the fore, it has been brought to the attention of the American public, the Department of Agriculture and the State Department, which is now in process of negotiating new agreements.

Mr. President, I do not know whether there would be another veto. However, I do not think the United States Senate should legislate or submerge its opinion on any matter because of the fact that a piece of legislation might be vetoed. If legislation is vetoed we will meet that situation when it comes. I think the matter of letting the State Department know now what we mean and what we meant by section 22 is of more vital interest to American agriculture and to our future economic agricultural stability than any other one thing we can do. That is why I am trying to have the measure sent back to conference, because the Senate has, not once but twice, decided the point. The House conferees know all about the matter. They had the matter up last year. I know we are at loggerheads. I appreciate the Senator's position with respect to the matter. The House voted on the question yesterday. The vote was about 2 to 1 against us.

Mr. ELLENDER. More than 2 to 1.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It was more than 2 to 1 against us. It is time we have a show-down on the matter.

Mr. ELLENDER. Since the distinguished Senator from Washington has raised the question with respect to the tariff agreements, let me read what Winthrop G. Brown, Director, Office of International Trade Policy, United States Department of State, had to say.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Brown is the man who has been doing all the lobbying here for the State Department against the amendment. He has a perfect right to do so. I do not object to that.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I do not like the term "lobbying." The committee called on Mr. Brown.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I say he has a perfect right to do it.

Mr. ELLENDER. We called on Mr. Brown as a witness. We called on him to assist us in trying to bring in something that would improve the situation. I read from his testimony before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as it appears on page 372 of the hearings:

> We do not think that it is necessary to reserve that complete unilateral right to impose quotas, because, in our opinion, in the opinion of the Department of Agriculture, we have under the general agreement the right to use quotas in the cases where we really need to do so.

That is in the general agreement, now, but it is not obligatory on the President to continue it. We are now providing that he must continue it. I quote further from Mr. Brown's testimony:

> For example, the general agreement says that we would be free to impose a quota on agricultural imports in any case where we are supporting the prices of the commodity in this country and where we are restricting our own domestic production.

That is what the general agreement provides for, and since, under the present wording of subsection (f), the President does not have to include that provision in future agreements if he does not want to do so, he could exclude it. But now we say "You have got to include it in any future agreement or amendment to existing agreements."

Mr. Brown said:

> The basis for that agreement, of course, is that where there is a limitation on the domestic market, it is fair and right and proper that there should also be a limitation on the import.
> There is also a provision in the agreement which would permit the imposition of a quota at any time where we are disposing of our agricultural surpluses, say, in the free-lunch program or under a stamp plan or any way of that kind as we, I think, are doing with potatoes today; and, finally, in the agreement it would permit the imposition of a quota or a fee at any time where the imports of the commodity were causing or threatening any serious injury to the domestic production.

All that comes about from the exceptions I have read into the RECORD on several occasions.

I read further from the hearings:

> Senator AIKEN. Well, have not all three of those conditions occurred in the case of potatoes, Mr. Brown?
>
> Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir; and we would be under the——
>
> Senator AIKEN. Mind you, I am not saying that in a critical sense, but I noticed that as you enumerated the conditions under which quotas could be imposed, that all those conditions apparently applied to the potato crop at the present year, of the 1949 crop.
>
> Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir. This is really a matter or legal right that we are discussing here, and that is what concerns us.
> Under the agreement we would be free, as a matter of right, as it now stands and under section 22 as it now is, to impose a quota on Irish potatoes.

Of course, it is not obligatory now to continue those conditions under which section 22 can be invoked with respect to Irish potatoes; but we will make it obligatory, under the agreement reached by the conferees on the part of the Senate and the conferees on the part of the House.

I read further from the hearings:

> Senator AIKEN. The President is simply authorized, not required to do it.
> Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

I say to the distinguished Senator from Washington that is the law now; and under the agreement reached by the conference committee we will make it obligatory on the President to continue it.

Reading further from the hearings, Mr. Brown then said:

> But so far as what worries us is concerned, which is our international situation, the agreement which we now have and the section as it now reads, gives him the power if he decides as a matter of internal policy and procedure that he wants to do it.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Would the conference report prevent the importation of pork products from Poland?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes, if we have an effective marketing program or an effective production program.

Mr. THYE. I had occasion to obtain, on May 29, from the PMA some figures on the importation of pork products, lard and hams, particularly from Poland. It was startling to me to note that even in January 1950, and in February and March, we imported large amounts. For instance, we imported 608,000 pounds in January, 895,000 pounds in February, 595,000 pounds in March. On the other hand, our exports of lard to Poland were absolutely zero in the months of January and February, and we exported only 140,000 pounds of lard in the month of March.

If we examine the figures for the entire calendar year 1949, we find that after May 1949, we had heavy importations; but, on the other hand, the Secretary of Agriculture was announcing from time to time, as he appeared before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that he was positive that he would be compelled to purchase pork before the calendar year 1949 was over, in order to maintain parity in pork prices.

Let us consider the figures for the months of September and October 1949. We find that in September, 137,000 pounds of pork products were imported from Poland; in October, 182,000 pounds; and in November, when pork prices in the United States were going down every week, 220,000 pounds were imported; and in December—when we were actually in distress, so far as pork prices to the producers were concerned, the price was almost down to the support price, and some farmers were taking less than the parity price for their pork—in December, 269,000 pounds of pork and pork products were imported into the United States from Poland. On the other hand, during September, October, November, and December we did not export any lard to that section of the world, where normally we would expect that they would be taking lard from the United States.

That is one of the reasons why the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] submitted the amendment. That is one of the reasons why so many of us from the diversified-farming section of the country or the section where diversified types of farming operations are conducted, are so keenly concerned.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the tabulation from which I have been reading may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, many persons think farmers receive a benefit from the farm program, just because a high support price is announced for corn and because a high support price is announced for wheat. However, that is not true in the case of the farmers in the diversified-agriculture areas.

For instance, in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, the eastern part of North Dakota, and the eastern part of South Dakota, the mere fact of the existence of a high support price on corn and a high support price on wheat does not mean a great deal to the farmers in those areas. In Minnesota we have 188,952 farms; but of that number, only 5,677 farms obtained a wheat loan in fiscal year 1949 or availed themselves of the so-called wheat support program. That amounted to only 3 percent of our farms. In the case of corn, 30,841 farms of the 188,952 farms, obtained a corn loan.

The rest of this great group of farmers were going to the elevators and were buying competitively, we might say, with the "seal-up" program, to obtain the mill feeds and the other supplementary feeds they need to carry on their normal production both in the poultry house and in the dairy barns and in the feed lots and in the hog yards.

In Iowa there are 208,934 farms. Only 3,829 of them, or 1.8 percent of the farms in Iowa, received a wheat loan. So the wheat program does not mean a thing to the Iowa farmers.

Among the group of Iowa farms—208,934 of them—only 59,269, or 28 percent of the farms, obtained corn loans. I am now speaking of the fiscal year 1949.

The situation in Illinois is practically the same, for in Illinois 4 percent of the farms took wheat loans, and 19 percent of the farms took corn loans.

In Indiana, only 2.6 percent of the farms took wheat loans, and 6 percent of the farms took corn loans.

In Wisconsin, only .01 percent of the farms took wheat loans, and 1.8 percent of the farms took corn loans.

So, Mr. President, in speaking about the over-all farm program and in speaking of imports, there is good reason why many of the Members of Congress—those representing the diversified-agriculture areas of the United States, such as the State of Washington, where there is a great amount of fruit production and dairying, and the States in the Midwest, such as the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, the Dakotas, and Illinois—will support the Magnuson amendment. In Minnesota we are in the so-called diversified-agriculture husbandry or diversified-agriculture management area, and we produce livestock and perishable commodities in connection with practically every farm operation we have.

However, we see the importation of potatoes, in competition with potatoes produced by our Minnesota Red River Valley potato growers and by the North Dakota Red River Valley potato growers. Yet the farmer is ridiculed by the consumers because the farmer is said to be receiving the benefits of the support program or because it is said there is a support program for him, and the consumer thinks the farmer is getting too much benefit in that connection; and consumers consider that, as consumers, they are being held up by the fact, as is alleged, that the farmer is getting too much for the commodity he produces—although the fact is that the farmer is not getting too much; he is only getting from 60 percent to a possible 90 percent of parity, and who would deny that to him? Yet the farmer is held up to ridicule, and the newspapers carry cartoons showing piles of potatoes deteriorating. When we read those stories; when we see potatoes imported from Canada, which importation is breaking the market of the potato grower in this country so that he must depend upon some sort of price-support program; when we see pork products being imported from countries behind the iron curtain, so to speak, while we cannot export a pound of lard or any of the other by-products of pork to countries behind the imaginary iron curtain—when we see those things, it behooves such men as the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], myself, and other Senators who represent the diversified type of farming in the United States, to stand on the Senate floor and say that we are unhappy when we see an amendment, which was first approved by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and then adopted by the Senate and sent to conference, deleted in conference and the provision left with an "if" in it, so that if the President wishes to do this, that, or the other thing, he may do so.

I have read the figures showing the importations of pork. I have read the figures showing how much the diversified agricultural area of the United States obtain from the wheat and corn program. I have made these statements for no other purpose than to point out that we have made some mistakes in the past. The President has been a party to those mistakes. When importations of products and commodities which deteriorate or even destroy our market are permitted, and when we then must appropriate funds to support a commodity and to buy up the commodity as we were compelled to buy potatoes in order to maintain parity or near parity for the potato growers, there is something wrong. If this emasculated amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] stands, I merely want to say that we as Senators and Members of the Congress must watch the situation very carefully in the course of the next year. If we do not have full cooperation by the President and the Secretary of Agriculture in preventing imports which deteriorate and destroy our own produce and commodity prices, we shall merely have to come back on the Senate floor a year from now, or 7 or 8 months from now, to wage the necessary fight in order that we may get some sort of protection against imports which would deteriorate or destroy the diversified type of American farming in the United States.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, at this point let me call the attention of my distinguished friend to the fact that the same Congress which enacted section 22 did not enact subsection (f), to provide that no proclamation under section 22 shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party. It was only after this law was put on the statute books that it was amended to include the language I have just read to my distinguished friend.

I have said, and I repeat, that what the conference has done is, to my way of thinking, to make many of the provisions of section 22 effective, in that in future agreements, the policy of article XI from which I have so often quoted cannot be discarded as it can be now. What can happen now under the present law is that the President can agree that section 22 shall never be invoked. But the conference report requires him to continue the conditions under which section 22 can now be invoked. I think it is a decided change from what now exists.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think it is a change.

Mr. ELLENDER. I mean a change for the better.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question. What the conference report in effect does is to substitute the provisions of article XI for section 22. Is not that correct?

Mr. ELLENDER. To some extent it does, that is correct. But what difference does it make, if the same goal can be obtained?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think the procedure is so cumbersome that the goal never will be obtained. But here is an example of what happens: For about 2 years now I have been trying to get the State Department to act under section 22 for the tree nut industry. The Department, with whom I have had all kinds of correspondence, still continues to say that it cannot act under section 22, because it conflicts with article XI.

Mr. ELLENDER. In what way does it conflict?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I will read that tomorrow. I have the reasons given by the State Department.

Mr. ELLENDER. If the Senator will permit me, it is because there is no specific law to curb the production of the commodity to which the Senator refers. If there were an effective method by which such commodities could be marketed or the production of them curtailed, then it would come within the purview of article XI.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is what I think. But the State Department speaks otherwise.

Mr. ELLENDER. But even if article XI remained as now written, and as the law now provides, the President could eliminate it just as he can agree that the provisions of section 22 can never be invoked. Let me further call to the attention of my good friend from Washington the fact that even if his amendment were adopted as written, it would not affect agreements now in force.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. It would affect future agreements only.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct. But the reason I proposed it in that form was that we are to negotiate all our agreements within the next few months. For example, let us take the tree nut industry, which has no presently operative marketing agreement. We have never been able to get the Department to do anything about it, yet we are spending $5,000,000 annually to support that small industry. We have never been able to place it even under a marketing agreement.

I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana a further question, which I think will be most helpful to Senators who are not present this afternoon, but who will be here Monday. Let us take the case cited by the Senator from Minnesota, the importation of pork. I suppose those who produce pork look with some alarm upon the fact that the pork importations are becoming such, in their opinion, as possibly to injure the price-support program. They may have to apply for parity support. Under the conference agreement, just what would be the practical procedure, if there were those who wished to put this machinery into motion in the hope that the President might ultimately act to place quotas on the imports, in order to protect them?

Mr. ELLENDER. To begin with, any agreement that is entered into cannot bypass the exceptions to which I have referred on several occasions.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Suppose we have an agreement to allow so much of a given product to be imported?

Mr. ELLENDER. If there is an effective marketing agreement, or other production or marketing control, for the products, then, under article XI, section 22 could be invoked. And under this new provision the President could not sign an agreement bypassing article XI.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I understand that.

Mr. ELLENDER. We make it obligatory. It will work. Let me put it to the Senator in this way: The procedure will work virtually the same as it would under the Senator's amendment. Then we say that no future agreement can be entered into in violation of articles XI and XIX.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I should like to ask the Senator one further question. Suppose an agreement is made taking into consideration article XI, and it allows the importation of pork in certain quantities; suppose the pork raisers of America believe that they are being injured. What would be the procedure to remedy the situation under the conference-agreement recommendation?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Secretary of Agriculture would start the ball rolling.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The same as would be the case under my amendment?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. What would be the next step?

Mr. ELLENDER. The next procedure would be to submit his recommendations to the President. The President would refer them to the Tariff Commission. Under the Senator's amendment, what would happen would be that the Secretary of Agriculture would initiate the proceeding and would look into the matter himself.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is the difference, up to that point.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Under my amendment the Secretary of Agriculture would initiate it and make a finding which would go to the President.

Mr. ELLENDER. And the President would put it into execution.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If he wished to do so.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; the same as it is under the Senator's amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But my amendment also provides that it is mandatory under section 22.

Mr. ELLENDER. As is the case with the conference-report provision. It is the same thing. There is very little difference as I see it between the conference report and the Senator's amendment with respect to procedure.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Even now we can go through the Tariff Commission. The Secretary of Agriculture has to act first; then the President turns it over to the Tariff Commission, and then it comes back to the President for action. But all the imports are in before any action is taken.

[Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair warns the occupants of the galleries that it is a violation of the rules of the Senate to express approval or disapproval in any way.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let me point out to my distinguished friend that the person who finally acts is the President. So there is not much distinction between the two in that respect.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the Senator allow me to ask one more question to clarify the matter?

Mr. ELLENDER. Certainly.

Mr. MAGNUSON. This, again, is an interpretation of the conference report. Would not the practical effect of the conference report provision be that after the President has gone through all the steps which have been referred to he would have to consult the signatory nations.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; not immediately.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Is it the Senator's interpretation, that the President can act unilaterally without consulting the signatories to the general agreement?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; if delay would result in serious damage. Later, he would have to. If action to increase duties under section 22 can be delayed without serious damage, the President would consult the other signatories. As I understand it, the conference report makes no difference in that situation.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Florida for a question.

Mr. HOLLAND. If the Senator will be indulgent, I should like to make some observations and use them as a basis for a question or two.

In the first place, I should like to say to the Senator from Washington, for whom I have esteem and with whose purposes in this matter I have complete sympathy, having supported his amendment, that I believe the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Minnesota have, if anything, understated the difficulties with which we found ourselves confronted in conference. It seemed to the Senator from Florida that the situation was so serious that it involved not just the possibility of a Presidential veto, but, what was much more important, the probability of complete failure to get anything at all in the way of needed additional powers for the Commodity Credit Corporation in the serving of the agricultural groups of the Nation. It was only after several conferences, after having called in the appropriate executive departments, both Agriculture and State, after various controversies which were a great deal warmer than those which have occurred on the floor, that the conferees felt they should make the concession on the amendment which undoubtedly was made, as the Senator properly said, in arriving at the conference report, rather than to unsuccessfully continue to insist upon the program incorporated in the Senator's amendment. The principal purpose of the bill, after all, does not directly pertain to section 22, which is only brought into the bill by the amendment.

I should like to bring up two or three points which I think may temper the situation greatly.

First, with reference to the potato situation, I should like to remind the Senator from Washington that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and the junior Senator from Florida were three authors and sponsors of the amendment to the bill which recently passed the Senate, which completely terminated any question in the potato situation, so that, unless we hereafter agree upon something much more effective by way of a price-support program for Irish potatoes, there will be none.

With that predicate, so that it will appear that in no sense is the Senator from Florida, nor are the other Senators mentioned, defending or apologizing for what happened under the potato program, I should like to suggest a correction to the statement of the Senator from Washington relative to the potato debacle of last year.

The Canadian situation aggravated the potato problem, but it did not create it. The total importations from Canada last year amounted to a little less than 10,000,000 bushels, whereas the domestic surplus was, as I recall, about five times that amount.

Again I say I do not defend or apologize for the bringing in of any Canadian potatoes, because I do not know why they should have been allowed to be brought in to further complicate the picture.

The second thing I should like to observe, if I may, is that the reciprocal trade program is far wider than the price-support programs under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. In my State, for instance, there are very few crops which have the benefit of any price-support program. We raise some cotton, some peanuts, some tobacco, and some tung nuts, and they are subject to the price-support program; but our citrus industry, which is our largest agricultural industry, and the large vegetable industries of the State and others are not subject to the price-support program. So they are much more interested in other implications of the reciprocal trade program than they are with respect to subsection (f) of section 22 relative to the reciprocal trade agreements, which applies only to the products which have price supports. They find it hard to understand why they, who do not have the benefit of governmental price supports, should not have at least as friendly treatment as that sought to be given by section 22 and by the Magnuson amendment to agricultural producers who are direct beneficiaries of Government subsidies.

May I say further to the Senator that I think it is interesting to observe not only that we were interested in conference in strengthening section 22 by the insertion of a mandatory requirement, a mandate coming down from the Congress, that the Secretary of Agriculture himself must be effective and active in this field, which provision was not in the present law, but that we thought it was a distinct contribution and a useful addition coming out of conference, to the amendment introduced by the distinguished Senator from Washington, and we are still of that opinion. May I repeat my question? Is not the distinguished Senator from Louisiana strongly of the opinion that that change does greatly add to the effectiveness of the proposal?

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not think there is any doubt about it, as I said before.

Mr. HOLLAND. The next thing I should like to mention is that I think the Senator, while partially correct in his statement that article XI of the general agreement on tariff and trade has to a limited extent been substituted for section 22, he is in error in many respects in making such a general statement, in that many of our neighbors with whom we carry on much trade are not signatories of the general agreement. For instance, only last week an outstanding committee composed of early tomato producers of the Nation sought the help of the State Department to negotiate a reciprocal trade agreement with Mexico, which is an early tomato producer, and is a strong competitor with the early tomato producers in this country. We were advised, in the very beginning, that dealing with Mexico had to be on an entirely separate and different basis from that which would prevail in dealing with any country covered by the provisions of the general agreement on tariffs and trade; in other words, that an agreement with Mexico would not come at all under the provisions of article XI of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

The next point that I should like to make is this. Of course, all of what I am saying is by way of trying to bring some comfort to my very good friend from Washington, because I realize he has an objective which is much greater—and the conference committee admits that it is greater—than that which is covered by the conference report. However, we do feel that we have made real progress under the conference report.

The next point that I wish to make is addressed to the fact that instead of having gotten no value heretofore for agriculture out of section 22 the conference, after considerable investigation of the subject, felt that—notwithstanding the fact that section 22 had not been as sympathetically administered as we felt it should have been—great values had nevertheless come to the agriculture of our Nation out of the administration of section 22 to date, and that they were strengthened materially in the conference report. With the thought of having in the RECORD the worth-while things for agriculture that have been done under section 22, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Louisiana if he would have any objection to my incorporating in the RECORD at this time—or whether he would be good enough to do so—a letter from Mr. W. T. M. Beale, Associate Chief, Commercial Policy Staff of the State Department, responding to the request of the Senator from Louisiana and my request regarding the performance with respect to cotton, wheat, and flour. The memorandum on cotton it attached to the letter.

Mr. ELLENDER. I have no objection, and I cheerfully join the distinguished Senator from Florida in requesting that the material be placed in the RECORD at this point in his remarks.

Mr. HOLLAND. Therefore, Mr. President, I should like to place in the RECORD at this point a letter addressed to my distinguished friend the Senator from Louisiana, from the Department of State, written by W. T. M. Beale, Associate Chief of the Commercial Policy Staff, dated June 23, 1950, and relating in the first instance to certain action taken with respect to cotton under section 22, and also referring to certain rulings—and they were helpful rulings—which were made with respect to wheat and wheat flour under section 22. I should like to offer also a listing of the investigations made and proclamations issued thereon relative to cotton.

There being no objection, the letter and list were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 23, 1950.

The Honorable ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR ELLENDER: In response to Senator HOLLAND'S request to Mr. Brown, of this Department, for a list of the actions currently in effect under section 22, Mr. Brown has sent a memorandum, a copy of which I enclose, to Senator HOLLAND concerning the orders in effect which establish quotas on various grades of cotton and certain cotton wastes.

For your further information the only other such actions in effect under section 22 are the annual quotas of 800,000 bushels of wheat and 4,000,000 pounds of wheat flour. These quotas became effective on May 29, 1941, under a presidential proclamation contained in Treasury Decision No. 50404. Modifications in the operation of the wheat and wheat-flour quotas which do not alter the over-all amount and which are of no great current importance are in further proclamations contained in Treasury Decisions 50609, 50863, 50983, and 51033.

Sincerely yours,

W. T. M. BEALE,
Associate Chief, Commercial Policy Staff.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION INVESTIGATIONS ON COTTON

Under the provisions of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, the Tariff Commission has conducted eight investigations on United States imports of raw cotton since 1939. The following summarizes pertinent data on each investigation:

1. ORIGINAL INVESTIGATION

At the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, the President directed the Tariff Commission on July 26, 1939, to investigate American imports of raw cotton with a view either to raise the tariff or impose quantitative restrictions if it was found that such imports were coming into this country under such conditions and in sufficient quantities as to render or tend to render ineffective or materially interfere with our domestic agricultural programs. Hearings were held on August 14–16, 1939, and a report was made to the President on August 25, 1939.

The recommendation of the Tariff Commission was to establish annual country quotas on three classes of cotton, as follows: Short-staple cotton (except harsh cotton under ¾ inch and except linters), 14,516,882 pounds; long-staple cotton (1⅛ inches and longer), 45,656,420 pounds; and cotton waste, 5,482,569 pounds. The recommendations were accepted by the President and issued in a Presidential proclamation dated September 5, 1939, and effective September 20, 1939.

2. FIRST SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

On November 20, 1940, the Chairman of the Advisory Committee to the Council of National Defense recommended to the Tariff Commission the suspension of import quotas on long-staple cotton of 1 11/16 inches and longer for the duration of the emergency.

The committee pointed out that this cotton was urgently needed for the manufacture of balloon and airplane fabrics but was in short supply in the United States. The Tariff Commission ordered an investigation on December 4, 1940, held hearings 1 week later, and issued a report to the President on December 13, 1940. The Commission recommended the suspension of quotas on cotton 1 11/16 inches and longer. The President issued a proclamation to this effect on December 19, 1940, effective immediately.

3. SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

Until the proclamation of September 5, 1939, it had been possible for United States cotton that had been sold to Canada and rejected by the purchaser, to be returned to the United States for resale. As a result of the proclamation it was not possible to do so and apparently American cotton exporters had suffered losses. On October 27, 1941, the Under Secretary of Agriculture requested the Tariff Commission to investigate this situation. An investigation was ordered on November 12, 1941, hearings held on December 10, and a report made to the President on February 20, 1942. The report recommended the suspension of quotas on American cotton returned to the United States upon rejection by foreign importers. It was also recommended that the quota be suspended on commercial samples of cotton and cotton waste. The President accepted the report and issued a proclamation on March 31, 1942, effective immediately.

4. THIRD SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

As a result of the trade agreement concluded with Peru on May 7, 1942, it was understood that country quotas on long-staple cotton would be changed to a global quota equal to the total of the country quotas. This change would permit the United States to import the same amount of long-staple cotton despite the adverse effects of the war on certain producers. A request for this change was made to the Tariff Commission by the Secretary of State on May 9, 1942, and an investigation was ordered on May 12. No hearings were held. A report recommending the change was sent to the President on June 8 and a presidential proclamation embodying this recommendation was issued on June 29, 1942, effective July 29.

5. FOURTH SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

The Secretary of Agriculture requested the Tariff Commission to investigate the situation with regard to harsh or rough cotton under three-fourths of an inch which, as noted above, had not been covered by the President's proclamation of September 5, 1939. An investigation was ordered on September 17, 1946, hearings held on October 14 and 15, and a report issued to the President on December 31, 1946. The Commission recommended a global quota of 70,000,000 pounds on this type of cotton. A Presidential proclamation to this effect was issued on February 1, 1947, and made retroactive to September 20, 1946.

6. FIFTH SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

At the request of the American cotton-textile industry an investigation was ordered on January 23, 1947, to determine whether or not a supplemental quota should be established for long-staple cotton. Hearings were held on February 18, 1947, and a report issued to the President on April 21, 1947. The report recommended a supplemental quota for cotton 1 3/8 inches or more but less than 1 1/2 inches of 23,094,000 pounds for the quota year ending September 19, 1947. The President issued a proclamation on June 9, 1947, embodying this recommendation; the proclamation became effective on June 14.

7. SIXTH SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

The American cotton-textile industry requested the continuation of a supplemental quota on long-staple cotton for the following quota year. An investigation was ordered on January 15, 1948, hearings held on February 17, 1948, and a report issued to the President on May 14, 1948. The report recommended that no quotas be placed on cotton 1 3/8 inches or longer and that a supplemental quota of 18,300,000 pounds be established for cotton over 1 11/16 inches but less than 1 3/8 inches. The report was not accepted by the President because of the passage in the interim of the Agricultural Act of 1948. It was requested that the Tariff Commission reconsider the matter.

On July 14, 1948, a revised report was sent to the President, recommending a supplemental quota of 18,000,000 pounds for cotton 1 1/8 inches or over and less than 1 11/16 inches. In addition it was recommended that licenses be issued to individual cotton-manufacturing concerns on the basis of their essential needs for the remainder of the quota year ending September 19, 1948. A Presidential proclamation to this effect was issued on July 20, 1948, effective immediately.

8. SEVENTH SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

The cotton-textile industry requested a further continuation of a supplemental quota as well as a change in the quota year to permit them to obtain foreign long-staple cotton under the quota under more favorable conditions. An investigation was ordered on June 9, 1949, hearings were held on July 7, 1949, and a report was issued on August 11. The report recommended changing the beginning of the quota year to February 1 each year for cotton 1 1/8 inches or more but less than 1 11/16 inches and establishing an interim quota of 16,487,042 pounds for the period September 20, 1949, to January 31, 1950. The President's proclamation which accepted this report was issued on September 3, 1949, effective September 20, 1949.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. I wish to thank my friend from Florida. As I indicated a moment ago, I have nothing to add to my statement unless some further questions are asked of me. I am very hopeful that the Senate will approve the conference report next Monday.

NOMINATION OF GORDON DEAN AS MEMBER OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I should like to make brief comment on the nominations for membership on the Atomic Energy Commission which were reported to the Senate this afternoon by my friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON]. I think they are excellent nominations, and I particularly wish to pay tribute and compliment this afternoon to one of the nominees, whom I know personally and intimately, Mr. Gordon Dean. It was my pleasure during 1936 and 1937 to serve in the Department of Justice. Interestingly enough, Mr. Dean and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] were my two superior officers. I came to know Mr. Dean very well.

I wish to say for the RECORD that in my judgment Mr. Gordon Dean is the type of man who should be encouraged to take up a career of public service. He is a man of great intellectual integrity and unquestioned loyalty to his Government. He is a man of superior intelligence and, in my judgment, he has demonstrated by his past public service that he always places the public interest foremost in his thinking when it comes to rendering any decision connected with his duty as a public servant.

Although the President of the United States has bestowed a great honor on Mr. Dean by nominating him for this post, the American people also are complimented by this nomination, because Mr. Dean will serve them with distinction. He is a devoted public servant who places the public interest uppermost in his service to his country.

INCREASE IN BORROWING POWER OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I am very hopeful that the Senate will disapprove the conference report, which the Senator from Louisiana has so ably but, nevertheless, I think mistakenly defended here this afternoon. I do not intend to speak at great length. I wish to lay a foundation in the RECORD with certain material which I shall use as a basis for a longer argument on Monday. I think the conference report is a most unfortunate report from the standpoint of the interest of the American farmers. I think it should be returned to conference with specific instructions from the Senate that the Senate wishes to have further discussion with the House conferees on the adoption of the Magnuson-Morse amendment.

I believe that from any angle from which the problem may be approached, the Magnuson-Morse amendment should be approved. I desire to discuss it for a short time from the viewpoint of the future of the reciprocal trade program. I wish to discuss it as a Republican who has supported the reciprocal trade program of the present administration. I happen to be one who believes that the principle of reciprocal trade in the world in which we live should be considered as being here to stay. I am a Republican unalterably opposed to any movement backward in the direction of the Smoot-Hawley tariff program for our country, because in my judgment the framework of the Smoot-Hawley tariff is economic isolationism. Economic isolationism will jeopardize peace in the world today just as much as will political isolationism.

Mr. President, one of the great dangers—and I have noticed this danger in my brief service in the Senate—is that too frequently there is a tendency on the part of Congress, yes, on the part of the American people, too, to move from one extreme to another, failing to take into account the fact that we do not make progress in America by extreme action. We make progress in this country only when we agree upon the adoption of sound principles, and then seek to carry them out reasonably, moving forward by degrees, not seeking to make progress by way of a social or economic avalanche.

I think the principle of a reciprocal trade program is sound, but certain abuses have developed within the administration of the reciprocal trade program to which I would direct the attention of the Senate.

Mr. President, I would that I did not have to make the statement I am now about to make, but for the past 4 years I have pleaded with the State Department time and time again to give evidence of an intelligent understanding of America's agricultural problems. The fact is that in incident after incident the State Department has come to satisfy me that it does not have an intelligent understanding of agricultural problems in America, and its administration of the reciprocal trade program in respect to agricultural products is my exhibit A in support of my accusation that there is a need in the State Department, in the reciprocal trade section, of men who can demonstrate some practical understanding of America's agricultural problems. Time after time in recent years the State Department, in the name of carrying out a reciprocal trade program, has discriminated against America's farmers, with the result that I desire to say from my desk here today to the President of the United States and to the State Department that, whether they know it or not, the truth is that there is a revolt developing among American farmers in opposition to the whole program of reciprocal trade. American farmers are mistaken in their belief that their economic welfare can be served by a return to a high tariff wall, because they must recognize that, after all, their economic interests, too, happen to be dependent upon the economic welfare of other economic groups.

Mr. President, the American farmers are right about one thing; they are right in their insistence that the abuses in the administration of the reciprocal trade program, which have come to characterize the reciprocal trade section of the State Department in respect to agricultural products, must come to an end. That is one reason why the junior Senator from Oregon has supported the peril point principle in respect to reciprocal trade. He continues to be at a loss to understand the arguments of those who criticize those who support the peril-point amendment. He submits, when all is said and done that the peril-point amendment is inherent in the Magnuson-Morse amendment. It is simply an amendment which seeks to accomplish what is consistent with our constitutional system of government, namely, a check upon the executive branch of the Government.

It is not an amendment which seeks to destroy the reciprocal trade principle, but is an amendment which says in effect, when we simmer it all down to its essence, that there is a duty resting upon the Congress of the United States to make certain that the officials in the executive branch of the Government, including the President of the United States, shall have the facts before them before they reach an agreement on reciprocal trade. It seeks to give assurance that if the President then goes forward and executes a reciprocal trade agreement, in direct opposition to what the economic facts brought out by the application of the peril point procedure may show, he shall then be required to advise the Congress as to why nevertheless he went forward with the agreement.

What is wrong with that? Certainly we have not reached the point in this country when we are going to delegate to the President of the United States, or, through him, to the State Department, complete, arbitrary, blanket authority to determine the economic welfare of the Nation through executing reciprocal trade agreements—and blanket reciprocal trade agreements have exactly that effect—without some effective check upon them by the Congress of the United States.

In connection with the Magnuson-Morse amendment, I wish to say that, I am holding fast to a principle which I think is fundamental in our system of government, namely, the principle of adequate checks of the legislature upon the executive, just as I support adequate checks of the executive upon the legislature.

Mr. President, if we had had the peril-point amendment in operation, or if we had had the Magnuson-Morse amendment in operation, 2 years ago, certain decisions which have been reached by the State Department in regard to the administration of reciprocal trade could not have been put into execution, because the submission of the facts to the American people, through the application of the peril point amendment, would have been the check of fact necessary to stop such arbitrary action as the State Department has been guilty of in incident after incident.

Therefore, as a supporter of the reciprocal trade-agreement principle, I plead here this afternoon for a further consideration of the Magnuson-Morse amendment, because I think it will operate as an effective check upon the executive branch of the Government, and I think it will bring some sense to the State Department in regard to agricultural products, the lack of which has characterized so much of the action of the State Department in the field of reciprocal trade in the past 4 or 5 years.

It has been 5 years now that the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the junior Senator from Oregon have fought shoulder to shoulder on this issue. This is not the first time we have been able to get through the Senate of the United States the principle of the Magnuson-Morse amendment. We got it through in the Eightieth Congress, we got it through in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress, and how were we undercut in the last session of the Congress in this matter?

The Senator from Washington is here and he can check me now for accuracy, but I want to submit for the record my understanding of what happened in the last session. After we had again secured Senate approval of the principle for which we are once more fighting, it was reported to the Senate and to the conferees that a gentleman's understanding had been worked out, that there had been an informal understanding or assurance from the State Department that in the future very careful consideration would be given to the type of problem the Senator from Washington and the junior Senator from Oregon had raised time and time again with State Department officials and Department of Agriculture officials. Assurance was given, so I understood, that the State Department would carry out the purposes of the Magnuson-Morse amendment but did not want it written into the law. I may say, seeing the present occupant in the chair is the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], that we appreciate the great help we have received from him in years past in dealing with the very problem I am now discussing.

Mr. President, gentlemen's agreements in the Senate are one thing. Gentlemen's agreements and understandings in the Senate are as good as the coin of the realm. They are lived up to. They are the legal tender of good faith. But it is sad to report that I have not formed a very favorable impression to date respecting gentlemen's agreements with certain departments of the Government on the executive side. I mean that as no reflection on the President of the United States, because let me say here as a Republican that if we have a gentleman's understanding with the President of the United States it, too, is as good as the coin of the realm. Having had such understandings with the President, I know whereof I speak.

But the President of the United States cannot begin to keep his fingers on all the intricacies of operation of the many departments of the executive branch of the Government. I happen to be one who believes that the President of the United States is not fully aware of the way the Reciprocal Trade Section of the United States State Department, particularly in respect to agricultural products, has been working in years immediately past. I am sorry to have to express such a lack of confidence in that section of the State Department, but I do so, based upon very sad experience with it.

It is interesting to note, from the material I shall insert in the RECORD before I close, Mr. President, that it was the State Department again, in spite of the informal assurance I thought we had in days gone by, that was going to see to it that the particular problems the Senator from Washington and I have stressed so many times in connection with this particular issue would be handled on the basis of facts; yet, it was the State Department that appeared primarily against the amendment, and as I shall show on Monday, offered a series of specious arguments in opposition to it.

Oh, let us stop "kidding" ourselves about this, Mr. President. Let us face the fact—and I assert it is the fact—that what that group in the State Department really wants is unchecked, arbitrary, discretionary power to enter into reciprocal trade agreements in behalf of the United States Government with foreign powers, unchecked by the Congress of the United States.

I believe in the check-and-balance system of our Government. I believe, Mr. President, that before the State Department enters into reciprocal trade agreements the American people are entitled to know that there has been a presentation of facts to the executive branch of Government, through a legislative check such as the peril-point amendment seeks to accomplish, which would in effect be accomplished by the Magnuson-Morse amendment in respect to agricultural products. Once that checking of fact has been submitted, then let the administration face those facts and decide at that point whether or not it then wants to go forward with a specific proposed reciprocal trade agreement.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MORSE. I shall yield in a moment.

I think that is sound administration. I think that is carrying out the principle of checks and balances of American constitutional government. But I want to say, as a constitutional liberal on the Republican side of the aisle in the Senate, that the American people had better wake up, before it is too late, and realize the growing expansion of arbitrary power on the part of the executive branch of the Government. If we let that trend continue in America, then the American people are going to lose the effectiveness of one of the greatest guaranties they have, namely, the principle of checks that the founding fathers themselves wrote into the Constitution. By disuse there comes atrophy. If we, the Congress, continue in bill after bill to grant into the hands of departments in the executive branch of the Government more and more unchecked power, we are going to find in the years to come that the whole system of checks and balances will atrophy. If he does not watch out, a Senator of the United States will soon find himself, when he stands up to defend one of the great safeguards of freedom for the American people, namely, the principle of using checks and balances against arbitrary power on the part of the executive branch of the Government, as one who is talking almost a foreign theory. We have already gone so far, Mr. President, that it has become characteristic of the thinking of too many heads of too many sections of the executive branch of the Government, particularly in the State Department, that the Congress of the United States should not even contemplate imposing checks upon them.

I know of no department of Government that needs more checks today than the State Department, and particularly in the whole field of the administration of the reciprocal trade program and other foreign trade matters. I shall continue to defend and fight for the principle of reciprocal trade, but I also shall continue to insist that the administration of the reciprocal trade program must be brought within the realm of an adequate check on the part of the legislative branch of the Government. I think that is inherent in the Magnuson-Morse amendment.

I now yield to the junior Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I should like to say to my friend, the distinguished Senator from Oregon, that since the junior Senator from Washington first came to the Senate of the United States about 4 years ago he has heard a very great deal about reciprocal trade treaties and agreements without being certain that he actually understands the proper and true meaning of the word. I wonder if the Senator from Oregon can tell me how any trade agreement which is either unfair or lopsided or unjust to American industries and American consumers can be construed to constitute a reciprocal trade treaty?

Mr. MORSE. If the facts are as assumed by the Senator's hypothetical question to be the case, then of course his question answers itself. Such a reciprocal trade agreement could not be fair. Such a reciprocal trade agreement would be discriminatory.

I am glad the Senator raised the question, because it leads to the very next point I want to make in respect to the obligation which I think the people of the United States owe to the American farmer in connection with reciprocal trade agreements affecting certain basic commodities of American agriculture. I want to make the point in this way:

I should like to be reassured, Mr. President, that there is at least one man or one official in the State Department who knows that it takes from 10 to 12 years to grow an orchard of trees to profitable production, be the trees filberts or walnuts, be they cherries or apples, be they pears or peaches.

The fact is, Mr. President, that, striking an average, from 10 to a dozen years are required to get an orchard to a point where the orchardist can make a reasonable profit in a good year from his orchard. Yet in the State Department there are theorists who apparently have no compunction about working out a reciprocal trade agreement which will wipe out, insofar as reasonable profits are concerned, thousands of acres of orchards in the United States, ignoring the arguments which many of us in the Senate have made in the past 5 years. Among those Senators I include the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], my colleague from Oregon [Mr. CORDON], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], who also has been of assistance in this connection, in regard to certain fruit crops in Florida.

What reply do we receive from the State Department, Mr. President? The reply is, "Of course we cannot enter into reciprocal trade agreements without having some injury done to America."

Mr. President, that is granted; I have never denied that premise. I realize that we cannot continue the reciprocal trade agreement program—and I think it is essential that it be continued, from the standpoint of world peace—without doing some injury to some segments of the American economy, including some segments of the agricultural economy. But, Mr. President, I ask who should bear the loss? Is it fair, is it sporting fair, to have a small group of economic theorists in the State Department fly to Geneva and work out a reciprocal trade agreement affecting, for instance, the orchards of the United States—and what I am saying about the orchards can likewise be said with equal force in regard to a good many other agricultural products of the United States—and by that one agreement heap upon that group of American farmers all the losses resulting therefrom—and I emphasize the word "all." If such a reciprocal trade agreement is essential for the economic welfare of the United States, over the long pull, then I say it is essential that all the American people stand a part of the loss which flows from the agreement.

Do not forget, Mr. President, that in these days we are living in a world in which many nations with whom we carry on reciprocal trade negotiations are not functioning on the basis of a private free-enterprise system. To the contrary, in these negotiations, these days, we are dealing with a great many nations which are operating, in varying degrees, upon the basis of a state economy. That is true whether it be Great Britain, France, Italy, or even the Scandinavian countries; and also there is much of it in the Low Countries. We have to do economic business with them; but cannot the Senate see, cannot the administration see, that when we are negotiating a reciprocal trade agreement with another nation in respect to a particular product which comes under a state-economy program, then we place the American producers of that product at a great disadvantage? This point is particularly true in respect to manufactured products, more so than in respect to agricultural products, although even there it is interesting to note, in the case of the state-economy countries, the state aid which flows to their farmers as a result of a state-economy program. So the fact is that in a great many instances there is really very little reciprocity between a state-economy nation and our Nation with its free economy.

So I say again today what I have been heard to say on other occasions, that one of the reasons why we need to have all the economic facts in advance of the negotiation of a particular reciprocal trade agreement is the necessity of informing the American people, as well as the administration—which has the primary responsibility for negotiating such agreements—as to the effects of the proposed agreement upon a given segment of the American economy and, therefore, indirectly upon the total economy.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MORSE. I will yield as soon as I finish this particular point.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, that is what I am pleading for. However, that is not the way it works. The theorists in the State Department fly to Geneva and negotiate a reciprocal trade agreement. Of course, the Congress is supposed to rubber-stamp it; in fact, in American politics we have almost reached the point where if those of us who serve in Congress do not automatically rubber-stamp with approval the reciprocal-trade negotiations of the State Department, then efforts are made to brand us as persons opposed to the reciprocal-trade principle. However, Mr. President, I am used to that kind of misrepresentation, and it does not bother me a bit. I am continuing with my fight to do what I can to force this administration to face the economic facts in regard to the effects of some of the reciprocal trade agreements upon America and the American economy and, in this instance, particularly in respect to the effects upon the agricultural economy.

I say that the farmers of the United States are entitled to have the losses spread among the American people as a whole, and not brought to bear entirely upon the orchardist, for example, who has spent from 10 to 12 years of hard labor in bringing an orchard up to profitable condition, only to have it wiped out, in effect, by an unfortunate reciprocal trade agreement.

Mr. President, I shall insert in the RECORD at this point, from the standpoint of personal experience, some evidence which I know very well can be subject to misinterpretation by those who do not know me personally. However, it will not be subject to misinterpretation by anyone who is personally acquainted with me, because I think my acquaintances know that a personal economic interest would not cause me to change a position on any matter of principle. Yet when I give this example I know there will be those who will say, "Oh, oh! He lost some money, and that explains his position on the Magnuson-Morse amendment."

To the contrary, Mr. President, my experience in the particular matter which I now wish to mention gives me personal authority to speak on the subject, because I happen to know the effects of some of the actions of some of the starry-eyed theorists in the State Department—in this connection, Mr. President, as regards some of their negotiations in connection with filbert nuts.

I happen to have had—and note, I emphasize "to have had"—a small filbert orchard, merely a small hobby orchard; not one on which I could have made any substantial living, but one consisting of about 3½ acres. For a professional man who spends most of the hours of the day in the office and then tries to take care of a small orchard during the seasons of the year at least when the orchard needs attention, taking care of 3½ acres of filberts is no small job. At any rate, it keeps a man in trim.

The reciprocal-trade-theory boys in the State Department, who, I suspect from conversations with some of them, had never seen a filbert tree, consummated certain reciprocal-trade agreements covering filberts, with the result that our domestic market was flooded with foreign nuts. As a result the filbert growers have been taking a tremendous loss. It reached a point where for two reasons I decided to tear out my filbert trees and grow hay. It got to the point where my loss was so much on my mere 3½ acres that I jerked the trees out of the ground and sowed a crop of oat hay because I could not afford the financial loss caused by the State Department boys. Further I wanted to place myself in such a position that no one could say that I have any particular vested interest in any particular orchard growing filberts. I at least have removed that basis of criticism. But the experience I have had with my own little filbert orchard satisfies me that the theorists in the State Department simply do not know the A B C's of agricultural problems in this country. They need to have some checks brought to bear upon them. They need to have the kind of check provided in the Magnuson-Morse amendment and the kind of check provided in the peril-point amendment which, on two occasions has been defeated in the Senate of the United States.

I take the position that if the State Deparment officials are to be given the arbitrary power which they are exercising, and if it is decided that it is in the best economic interest of the United States to go forward with a reciprocal-trade agreement affecting, for example, some segment of American agriculture, then the losses resulting therefrom should be spread over all the people of the United States. Supposedly the reciprocal-trade program has been entered into for the economic benefit of all our people. It is not fair to levy the total cost of the loss accruing on but one small segment of American agriculture.

That is pretty much the point of view of farm leaders, to whose views I shall refer in a moment, in regard not only to this amendment but in regard to their genera' objections to the reciprocal-trade agreements made by the State Department respecting agricultural products. I say, not with unkindness, or at least without any intent to be unkind, that what is needed in the State Department in the reciprocal-trade section apparently is men who show at least some evidence of an understanding of the agricultural problems of the country. To date I say they have shown for the most part a sorry ignorance, a lack of any knowledge of agricultural problems.

I yield now to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington is seriously interested in the meanings of words. The Senator from Oregon undoubtedly has read and studied, as has the Senator from Washington, a number of the trade agreements signed by the United States with other countries throughout the world. Has the Senator from Oregon ever been able to find the word "reciprocal" in a single trade treaty at any time signed by this Nation with some other nation?

The reason I raise the question is that I am pretty much of opinion that reciprocity means to share equally. It is obvious to any man who can think that a good many of the trade treaties now binding upon our country do not share equally. They, therefore, cause great suffering to American farmers in the Pacific Northwest and to other American industries. I am about to fall heir to a very strong opinion that someone possessed of an acutely sensitive mind, with a vocabulary well suited to publicizing something which is not true, has hit upon the word "reciprocal," and has used it so incessantly that it has become a byword throughout the Nation. It is a word which is about as misleading as any word I could possibly call to mind. I wonder whether the Senator from Oregon shares my concern about the misuse, if I am correct in terming it that, of the expression "reciprocal trade treaty," when everything he has said this afternoon indicates that the basis of his charges is that there is no reciprocity in the agreements which are called reciprocal.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Washington has answered the question for me. The burden of my argument this afternoon is that, particularly in respect to agreements affecting agricultural products, they have not been reciprocal.

Mr. CAIN. Yet the State Department constantly refers to them as reciprocal trade agreements, does it not?

Mr. MORSE. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. The distinguished Senator from Oregon concedes, does he not, that the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment would not be effective, let us say, with respect to the filbert growers, unless they were to have a program of some kind?

Mr. MAGNUSON. But they do have.

Mr. ELLENDER. Just a moment. I want to ascertain the fact. Is that correct?

Mr. MORSE. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. What kind of program is in effect for the filbert growers, the apple growers, and other fruit growers? Can the Senator tell us for the RECORD? I should like to know.

Mr. MORSE. The only program we have ever been able to place in operation for the filbert growers has been the Morse marketing agreement, which I got through the Senate last year, and which the House approved. We did not receive much encouragement from the State Department or the Agriculture Department for that agreement, I may say to the Senator from Louisiana. We have not been able to get any sympathy from the State Department in most of the controversies over agricultural products, whether affecting filberts, apples, pears, or what not. I submit it is more because of ignorance in the State Department than of intent. I simply think they do not know their stuff when it comes to agricultural problems. That is why I believe we must take the arbitrary power away from them and provide a checking channel whereby we can stop the starry-eyed theorists of the State Department, who have come from the economic classrooms of America but not from the farms of America, to deal with the problems of American agriculture. I say that as one who taught for more than 20 years. But I desire to add that I think it is also important that we bring together both practical men and theorists when we come to study the effect of a reciprocal trade agreement on American agriculture.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator will admit, then, will he not, that the only way by which any assistance can be afforded the farmer under the Magnuson-Morse amendment is to have an effective program as to the product grown?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, it is necessary that there be an effective program.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is the Senator's view, is it not?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, but marketing agreements are worthless if the State Department is free to defeat their purpose by entering into an unfair reciprocal trade agreement.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand that. But unless there is a program in effect, the Magnuson-Morse amendment, even if adopted, would not be effective as to the growers of any commodity not covered by an effective program. Is not that correct?

Mr. MORSE. Until they put a marketing program into effect.

Mr. ELLENDER. I merely wanted the record to show that that was in the Senator's mind.

Mr. MORSE. I have no quarrel with that. There are some good marketing programs in effect which would profit greatly from the adoption of the Magnuson-Morse amendment.

Mr. President, I have spoken as long as I care to this afternoon. I shall make my major argument on the amendment itself on Monday, but at this point I desire to insert in the RECORD certain supporting material which I think adequately sustains the position which the junior Senator from Oregon and the junior Senator from Washington have taken.

I have here a telegram from Albert S. Goss of the National Grange, which reads as follows:

The National Grange appreciates and hopes you will continue to insist on the Magnuson amendment in the CCC bill. We feel it is vital to any program of price supports.

The next is a telegram from John J. Riggle, assistant secretary, National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, reading as follows:

National Council of Farmer Cooperatives strongly urges your support of original text Magnuson-Morse amendment to CCC bill when it reaches Senate floor. We believe language suggested by conferees is not adequate to give United States farmers protection they urgently need against injurious imports.

The next is a telegram from John E. Trunk, general manager, Northwest Nut Growers, which reads as follows:

One of our greatest legislative disappointments is conferees' rejection of Magnuson-Morse amendment for section 22. Many agricultural crops including ours face ruination and discontinuance under present State Department trade policies. May we ask your help to fight on Senate floor rejection of conference report and insist that Magnuson-Morse amendment be accepted?

The next telegram is from E. F. Forbes, president, Western States Meat Packers Association, of San Francisco, Calif., which reads as follows:

We wholeheartedly favor the Magnuson-Morse amendment to the CCC bill, H. R. 6567, which was passed by the Senate to protect against excessive imports of agricultural commodities on which we have price support programs. The amendments substituted by the conferees after striking out the Magnuson-Morse amendment have no value and offer no protection, but merely act to continue the present unsatisfactory situation. We urge that you fight for the Magnuson-Morse amendment as the practical answer to this problem.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD what I consider to be a very excellent synopsis and analysis of the action of the conferees on the bill, which has been prepared by my good friend from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], entitled "Brief Analysis of Conferees' Action on Commodity Credit Corporation Bill, H. R. 6567."

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRIEF ANALYSIS OF CONFEREES' ACTION ON COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION BILL, H. R. 6567

(By WARREN G. MAGNUSON, United States Senator)

On Thursday, June 15, House-Senate conferees reached agreement on differences in the two versions of H. R. 6567. The Senate version of this bill contained, as section 3, the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment. This amendment was in the nature of a substitute for existing section 22 of the AAA.

Section 22 gives the President only limited and only permissive authority to deal with agricultural imports. The Magnuson-Morse amendment does not expand his authority or make it mandatory. If the facts warrant it, he may impose an import fee up to 50 percent ad valorem or a quota not less than 50 percent of the imports during a representative period.

Please bear in mind that section 3 of H. R. 6567, the Magnuson-Morse amendment, was adopted unanimously by the Senate Agriculture Committee. It was adopted by the Senate without objection and after a 3-day floor fight last year, similar language was approved by a vote of 44 to 28. Last year, too, the amendment was lost in conference.

A subsection, F, was added to section 22 by the Eightieth Congress. The most important single provision of the Magnuson-Morse amendment is the substitute for this subsection.

Here is the way subsection F now reads:

"No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party."

The Magnuson-Morse amendment reverses the emphasis by saying:

"No international agreement hereafter shall be entered into by the United States or renewed, extended, or allowed to extend beyond its permissible termination date in contravention of this section."

Here is the language the conferees adopted:

"(f) No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereinafter becomes a party; but no international agreement or amendment to an existing international agreement shall hereafter be entered into which does not permit the enforcement of this section with respect to the articles and countries to which such agreement or amendment is applicable to the full extent that the general agreement on tariffs and trade, as heretofore entered into by the United States, permits such enforcement with respect to the articles and countries to which such general agreement is applicable. Prescription of a lower rate of duty for any article than that prescribed by the general agreement on tariffs and trade shall not, if subject to the escape provisions of such general agreement, be deemed a violation of this subsection."

If you will read the underscored portions of this language you will see why it is so objectionable. The net effect is to ratify article 11 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—or to put it another way, the net effect is to make section 22 subordinate to article 11 of GATT and to authorize the Department of State in any new trade agreements to follow the same pattern. As a practical matter present provisions of GATT nullify section 22.

The most pertinent part of article 11 of GATT reads as follows:

"1. No prohibitions or restrictions other than duties, taxes, or other charges, whether made effective through quotas, import or export licenses or other measures, shall be instituted or maintained by any contracting party on the importation of any product of the territory of any other contracting party or on the exportation or sale for export of any product destined for the territory of any other contracting party.

"2. (c) Import restrictions on any agricultural or fisheries product, imported in any form, necessary to the enforcement of governmental measures which operate—

"(i) to restrict the quantities of the like domestic product permitted to be marketed or produced, or, if there is no substantial domestic production of the like product, of a domestic product for which the imported product can be directly substituted; or

"(ii) to remove a temporary surplus of the like domestic product, or, if there is no substantial domestic production of the like product, of a domestic product for which the imported product can be directly substituted, by making the surplus available to certain groups of domestic consumers free of charge or at prices below the current market level; or

"(iii) to restrict the quantities permitted to be produced of any animal product the production of which is directly dependent, wholly or mainly, on the imported commodity, if the domestic production of that commodity is relatively negligible."

Since the net effect of the conferees' action on H. R. 6567 is to subordinate section 22 to article 11 of GATT, it would be far better and certainly more forthright to repeal section 22.

FURTHER ACTION

The conferees also "compromised out of the bill" the streamlining provision of the Magnuson-Morse amendment. The amendment transferred from the Tariff Commission to the Secretary of Agriculture full responsibility for developing the facts upon which the President would act, in cases where imports threaten domestic farm programs.

Justification for streamlining stems from the fact existing machinery is so cumbersome as to be totally ineffective—particularly in the case of perishables. Net effect of conferees' action is to write into section 22 the procedure presently followed under Executive Order 7233, dated November 23, 1935. This accomplishes nothing.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted at this point in the RECORD a letter which I have received from Frank W. Taylor, secretary-manager, Northwest Horticultural Council, dated April 11, 1950, attached to which is a brief prepared by the Northwest Horticultural Council in support of the Magnuson-Morse amendment.

There being no objection, the letter and brief were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

NORTHWEST HORTICULTURAL COUNCIL,
Wenatchee, Wash., April 11, 1950.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR WAYNE: I am indeed sorry that circumstances beyond my control prevented my seeing you in your office last Friday morning as planned so that we could further discuss the above Senate bill which, as you know, has been reported out by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to accompany H. R. 6567 which was passed by the House and provides for increased borrowing power for the Commodity Credit Corporation. Senate report No. 1375, as you know, includes in addition to the Commodity Credit Corporation borrowing authorization, the Magnuson-Morse sponsored amendment to change section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. This amendment is of vital importance to our industry particularly as it is a step in the right direction to afford our fruit and other perishable agricultural industries streamlined action designed for protection against injurious imports.

In our particular case, the chief problem is, as you know, heavy and unrestricted imports of Canadian apples. We have long attempted, both in the departments and legislatively, to secure such protection and we consider it of paramount importance to the northwest apple industry that the Magnuson-Morse amendment to S. 2826 be passed by the Senate in its present form. We know that you will see that it is supported on the floor when the Senate considers this bill and we urge that you oppose any attempts to change its text either for political reasons or otherwise. Once it has passed the Senate we also sincerely hope that you will use your influence with your colleagues in the House to insure its acceptance by the House conferees from the Banking and Currency Committee.

We strongly recommend that, if the bill passes the Senate and the amendment to section 22, of which you are cosponsor, is rejected in conference, that you and Senator MAGNUSON rally your colleagues and insist that the Senate refuse to accept the conference report unless your amendment is included.

Although we have given you, from time to time a great deal of information on the situation that confronts us, the writer believes that the attached copy of a letter addressed to Mr. Hyman Leikind of the United States Tariff Commission by Mr. J. Walter Hebert, chairman of our import committee, boils down pertinent facts that may be useful to you in supporting our contention that the proposed change in section 22 is necessary and desirable. If there is any additional information which we can supply you or if you have any further questions please do not hesitate to contact the writer immediately by telephone or telegram.

With kindest personal regards, we remain,
Sincerely yours,
NORTHWEST HORTICULTURAL COUNCIL,
FRANK W. TAYLOR, Secretary-Manager.

NORTHWEST HORTICULTURAL COUNCIL,
Wenatchee, Wash., April 4, 1950.

Mr. HYMAN LEIKIND,
United States Tariff Commission,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LEIKIND: When you were in Seattle recently you will recall that R. L. Shultz promised you a summary of the competitive situation that exists on the United States market as a result of importation of Canadian apples. With the assistance of Mr. Shultz, I have attempted in this letter to summarize the more important points without going into statistical details which are already available to you in governmental statistical reports and in the briefs filed with the Committee for Reciprocity Information before the Annecy conference last year.

The United States imports of Canadian apples come almost entirely from British Columbia. Apple production in British Columbia is similar to that in the State of Washington. It has the same soil and climatic conditions and employs the same orchard practices, harvesting, and packing methods as does the United States apple industry of the Pacific Northwest. They size and grade their apples and pack them in the standard Northwest apple box, having adopted these practices from the United States Northwest apple industry. To the casual United States consumer, its apples are identical in grade and style of package to those produced in the United States Northwest apple districts.

The varieties it exports to United States markets are for the most part the same as those grown on the United States side of the Northwest border. The one important exception is the MacIntosh variety which they grow in large volume. This variety is not grown in the Pacific Northwest but is grown in our Middle Western States and New England and is our second largest variety nationally. British Columbia MacIntosh competes strongly with our Mid-West MacIntosh. This matter of varietal competition is extremely important. For example, the 1949–50 national apple crop in the United States consisted of the following varieties in point of volume: First, Delicious; second, MacIntosh; third, Winesap; fourth, Jonathan; and thereafter followed numerous other varities in smaller volume—Romes, Staymans, Yorks, Newtons, Baldwins, etc. The first four varieties named constituted 50 percent of the crop. The Winesap is a late keeper and is not generally shipped until after the Jonathan, Delicious, and MacIntosh are out of the way. The British Columbia exports consist primarily of Jonathan, MacIntosh, and Delicious, and compete with the heavy production in point of time as well as in usage with the major production of United States grown apples.

These so-called fall varieties move into consumption from September through February, mostly October through December, during which time the impact of additional imported quantities of these same varieties greatly aggravates the competitive situation. This is the period of the heaviest Canadian shipments, which is also the time of the heaviest United States shipments. Last season the impact was so severe as to drive prices of Jonathan and MacIntosh below the costs of packing and transportation and selling, leaving the United States grower little or nothing whatever for his apples, or even a debit in many cases.

The distribution of British Columbia-grown apples to United States markets practically parallels that of apples from the Pacific Northwest. They also compete strongly with Midwest-grown MacIntosh and Jonathans in Midwest markets such as Minneapolis, Milwaukee, and Chicago.

The unit cost of production in British Columbia is substantially less than in the Pacific Northwest. The transportation cost is the same to the United States markets where these apples compete. Therefore, the British Columbia grower has a distinct competitive advantage on the basis of delivered unit cost. It is the practice of B. C. Tree Fruits, Ltd., the one-desk selling organization for British Columbia apples, to sell in United States markets on a delivered basis. This, of course, includes the freight and all delivery costs. The British Columbia shipping organization prepays the Canadian portion of the freight in Canadian currency, and the United States portion in United States dollars. They collect from the United States buyer the entire delivered price in United States dollars. The United States duty of 12½ cents per bushel, net weight, is, of course, merely nominal. When computed on the net weight in the standard Northwest apple box it figures about 11.5 cents per box, compared with 37.5 cents per standard apple box, gross weight (railroad published estimated weight of 50 pounds), for the Canadian tariff.

While it is not a matter of tariff, we wish to point out that the 10 percent official discount of the Canadian dollar in terms of the United States dollar enables the Canadian grower to recover from 30 to 40 cents on the average delivered-price sale of a box of British Columbia-grown apples when the United States dollars are exchanged for Canadian currency. This is an important incentive, over and above the normal trading inducements, to sell larger quantities of British Columbia apples in the United States than would otherwise be the case. This recovery in exchange more than pays the United States duty and in actual practice completely nullifies the tariff.

The trend of production in British Columbia is upward because of the age of their plantings and could easily double within the next decade. According to a tree survey taken in 1945, 24.3 percent of the British Columbia trees were under 10 years of age while Washington had only 7.4 percent. Their plantings of trees since that time have been triple those of the Washington apple growers. The British Columbia plantings are mostly of the Delicious variety which is now the largest single variety produced in the United States.

The British Columbia apples (and other fruits) are sold through one selling organization established by the Natural Products Marketing Act of 1937. This act creates a complete monopoly which is empowered to fix uniform prices and control shipments. The so-called "one-desk selling agent," British Columbia Tree Fruits, Ltd., exercises complete control of prices and may refuse to sell any distributive agency which does not maintain wholesale or retail prices at any point in Canada. The law has been held to be constitutional in both Provincial and Dominion courts. This creates a potential competitive situation against which the United States grower is practically helpless and which is, of course, illegal in the United States. It amounts to a State controlled cartel, which our Government has frowned upon in other British controlled cartels, notably rubber, but seems to accept or condone in our fruit trade relations with Canada.

Prior to World War II (1939), both Canada and the United States had exportable apple surpluses, most of it going to Britain, continental Europe, and Scandinavian countries. British Columbia exported between 40 and 50 percent of its production, heavily to Britain. Canada practically took over our large export business to Britain following the imposition of the Empire Preference policy and the high British tariff of 4 shillings 6 pence per hundredweight on United States apples in 1932. Canadian exports to the United States were negligible prior to 1940. The British and other trans-Atlantic markets were almost completely lost to both Canada and the United States following the 1939 crop season. Canada thereupon turned to the United States as their major export market. This situation has persisted and grown since that time. It is doubtful—in fact, practically a certainty—that exports to Britain and European markets will never reach the same quantities they did before 1939. This is due to two major reasons: First, because of the fast increasing production of apples in England in the European countries; and second, because of the economic effects of the war. It seems improbable that this situation will change materially for some years to come. In the meantime, as the production increases in British Columbia, the impact of its surplus, with increased United States imports, will grow and the competitive situation will be progressively aggravated. If the apple industry of the United States, and especially that large segment located in the Pacific Northwest, is not to suffer serious damage, then certainly some restrictive measures for control of imports must be instituted. At the present time there are absolutely no barriers or conrol measures in effect and no import regulations applicable to apples coming in from Canada other than the nominal duty. Canada on the other hand imposes a much higher duty and other import onerous regulations, and, while we do not look to Canada for any substantial apple exports, the wide discrepancy in the trading conditions offers an opportunity for a closer approach to equality of treatment in the forthcoming revision of the Canadian-United States trade agreement.

You will recall the statement made in Seattle by Mr. Shultz that in considering or attempting to evaluate the injurious effect of Canadian exports to the United States, the over-all figures such as are set forth in the tariff summary on fresh apples are misleading for the following reasons. First, approximately one-third of the total crop is processed annually. Another 10 percent is used on the farm, wasted, fed to livestock, etc. It does not get into fresh commercial channels. Exports have been limited to about 1½ to 2 percent in recent years. Fresh domestic use is therefore around 60 percent of the total crop. This 60 percent from a marketing point of view should be classified according to variety, grade, and size, and by localities where grown. The most important of these perhaps is variety. Different varieties have their own peculiar qualities and uses, as well as varying length of life. Price differentials of varieties vary from year to year, depending on the supply of each.

This fact is recognized both by the British Columbia sales agency and the marketing concerns in the Pacific Northwest and elsewhere, wherever apples are sold from point of production. It has been customary for the British Columbia representatives at the annual conference between the Canadian and United States apple industries to give an estimate of the probable movement of British Columbia apples to the United States by varieties and by months which they intended to export to the United States. The purpose of this estimate is merely informative and not agreed to and is in no sense binding on anyone. It is a recognition of the fact that varietal impact upon like varieties grown in the United States is a vital factor in the distributive process. The 1949–50 schedule as estimated in August was as follows:

[In thousands of bushels]

Variety	Sept. 15 to Oct. 31	Nov. 1–30	Dec. 1–31	Jan. 1–31	Feb. 1
Wealthy	20	-------	-------	-------	-------
MacIntosh	330	150	100	-------	-------
Jonathans	300	100	-------	-------	-------
Delicious	50	200	200	150	25
Rome	-------	-------	25	50	25
Newtons	-------	-------	-------	50	50
Miscellaneous	-------	50	-------	60	55
Total	700	510	325	310	155

This contemplated schedule was badly disrupted by actual marketing experience. The United States market on Jonathans and MacIntosh, due to a large crop of these varieties in our Middle West, plus the impact of Canadian imports, sank to a point that did not return freight and packing costs. Consequently, B. C. Tree Fruits, Ltd., largely discontinued the export of these varieties and substituted therefor heavy shipments of standard Delicious and Red Delicious due to a much more favorable market for these varieties. In fact, British Columbia exports of Red Delicious to the United States amounted to more than 10 percent of the Northwest reduction of this variety. Furthermore, it should be recognized that British Columbia will probably export to the United States about 2,000,000 boxes which compete directly on the fresh fruit market with the 26,000,000 produced in the Pacific Northwest of the same varieties and sold to the same wholesale and retail buyers. This increase in supply of an identical product is approximately 8 percent and an increase of 8 percent in years of surpluses causes a decline in prices of far more than 8 percent. The losses occasioned by a decline in price are also augmented by forcing the United States Northwest grower to hold back his Delicious and other fall varieties in cold storage at additional cost and also frequently causing loss of condition and repacking, as was the case this season. The losses occasioned by this factor alone probably equaled or even exceeded the decline in price occasioned by Canadian imports.

The Pacific Northwest apple crop this year has averaged considerably less than parity which, as of January 15, was $2.38 per bushel. And this despite the fact that the equivalent of well over a million boxes which would ordinarily be marketed were not packed and many were not harvested. Realizing there was a surplus production, growers were induced to leave certain varieties or uncolored apples on the trees or if harvested, were sold to byproduct plants at mere salvage prices. The preliminary average price of Washington apples as computed by the Seattle B. A. E. office is $2.12 f. o. b., whereas actual costs of production range around $2.55 to $2.58 f. o. b. cars, according to the best figures obtainable from large growers who keep accurate accounts.

This situation was recognized by the Department of Agriculture and the Northwest industry has been aided by PMA purchases for the school-lunch program, and by an export subsidy. The PMA purchases were at $1.70 and $1.80 f. o. b., far below costs of production or even much below parity. Similarly, some 420,000 boxes were exported to Britain through the use of CCC funds and ECA dollars. The prices, however, were also on a salvage basis and far below parity, being from $1.80 to $1.90 per box f. o. b.

The point was raised in your discussion with Mr. Shultz that, if importations of apples were stopped it might result in the consumer being gouged by exorbitant prices. The answer seems self-evident. We are a Nation which is geared to an historical record of apple exports. We have developed a national production which is dependent on an export market as a matter of calculated foresight and good business practice. It is only through the exigencies and disruption of normal and historical trade channels that we are not able to export an adequate portion of our production and have become an importing Nation. Our imports are not necessary to fill a void or a need for more apples but are forced upon our markets by international economic pressure despite our own surpluses created by our lack of exports. The proximity of British Columbia-grown apples to the United States markets, plus their loss of the British market and our nominal duty, makes a combination of circumstances which prompts them to look to the United States markets as a lucrative source of revenue. When, during the thirties, there were no apple imports and our exports were at the high point, prices in the United States were at the low point of history. While there were other factors affecting price, that of imports certainly had no bearing because there were none. It should be apparent to anyone attempting to analyze the price structure of apples that all other fruits are competitive to apples, especially bananas which come into the United States duty-free in quantities which have in the past exceeded in volume the entire fresh-apple consumption. The effect of apple imports on the United States consumer does not lie in a danger of exorbitant prices if they are discontinued but rather to the discouragement of the United States grower to the point of abandoning or being forced out of production, thereby leaving the market to a foreign monopolistic and State-controlled pricing system with which the United States grower cannot compete.

We trust this summary will give you a more realistic and down-to-earth viewpoint of the situation as we see it here in the Pacific Northwest. We shall be glad to amplify any particular point or points or furnish supporting statistical data on costs or crops by varieties, etc., should you so desire.

Very truly yours,

NORTHWEST HORTICULTURAL COUNCIL,
J. WALTER HEBERT,
Chairman, Import Committee.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I close by saying that I have heard with both regret and some puzzlement an argument which has been used on the floor this afternoon and which has been too oft repeated on the floor of the Senate during this session of Congress. I do not propose to quote verbatim, for the RECORD will speak for itself tomorrow, when I say that the argument has been made again this afternoon that this report was the best the conferees could do in face of a presidential veto which would most likely result if the Magnuson-Morse amendment were adopted by the conferees.

I do not like that argument, Mr. President; I do not like it at all. When I hear that argument, I want to ask this question: So what? Since when shall the work of the United States Senate in passing legislation which it thinks is sound and in the public interest be blocked by a threatening argument on the floor of the Senate that if we carry out what we think is right the President will veto it? It is never going to influence my vote, Mr. President. The President can veto all he wants to. That is his constitutional authority and right, and it happens to be his duty, if, as President of the United States, he differs in judgment with the Senate of the United States as to what the public interest is in respect to a given piece of legislation. But I cannot justify to my constituents or to the people of the rest of America my voting for a single piece of legislation, although I may think it is not as good as it should be, simply because the argument is made on the floor of the Senate that if I insist upon voting for what I think is right a presidential veto may be encountered. I shall cross that bridge when I come to it, and I shall do my best when we reach that bridge by urging an overriding of the President's veto. That happens to be our duty as Senators.

There is a growing tendency in the Senate of the United States, which has been all too apparent, particularly in this session of Congress, Mr. President, of advising us in the eleventh hour of debate, as though we were little school boys, "Now, if you do not go along with this the teacher will take you out to the woodshed and spank you with a veto." That is not my idea of living up to our obligations in the Senate of the United States.

The one question before the Senate in regard to the Magnuson-Morse amendment is a very simple one: Are the merits of the arguments and is the preponderance of the evidence on the side of the Magnuson-Morse amendment or against it? Believe me, Mr. President, if the argument is on our side, then each and every Senator in this body has the obligation of voting for what he believes to be right. Then, we shall meet the President on a veto message. We will hear his argument. That is the theory of that constitutional check that the President shall have his day in court; he shall have his veto forum, at which time he can make his argument as was intented by the Constitution. Then when his veto message comes to the Congress I shall study it, and if he can convince me by his message that he is right and I am wrong, then I shall vote to sustain his veto and not to override it. But I am not going to be influenced one whit, Mr. President, on this occasion or on any other occasion, by a threatening argument being used on the floor of the Senate that we have no choice, because if we do what we think should be done, the President will veto our action. To the contrary, I say it is our solemn duty, in keeping with the oath of office which we took, to act as independent representatives of the people, independent of the White House. Under our check-and-balance system it is our duty to pass legislation which we think is right, and then let the President of the United States exercise his constitutional power, as intended by the founding fathers of either signing or vetoing the legislation we pass. If he vetoes it then it becomes our duty to fight it out once again on the floor of the Senate when the veto message comes to the floor.

Let me say something in defense of the President, too. I do not think the argument to which I have referred is fair to the President of the United States. I do not think it is fair to intimate on the floor of the Senate that if we do what we think is right the President is going to veto it, because, again, as a constitutional liberal, I would take the Members of the Senate back to the procedure of the Constitution itself. The veto check was provided so as to check arbitrary or unsound action on the part of the Congress of the United States; but it also affords time for the President of the United States to reflect upon the judgment of the Congress. It affords time for the President of the United States to read the arguments made on the floor of the Senate and on the floor of the House in support of a particular bill. It affords the President time to study the transcript of the record of the hearings on the bill.

I have confidence in whoever holds the Presidency of the United States, be he from either party, because I think whoever holds that particular position will rise to great heights of public responsibility. I am satisfied that any President—and I am particularly satisfied that it is true of Harry Truman—would study the record before he sent any veto message to the Congress of the United States. If in the course of this debate, as I hope it is possible to do, we can make a record of argument and evidence so convincing as to show that we are right in our advocacy of the Magnuson-Morse amendment, I am satisfied that careful consideration will be given to those arguments by the President of the United States. I am convinced that he will keep himself free of mind to pass final judgment after the whole record has been made.

Therefore, I say in conclusion, Mr. President, I do not think it is fair to the Senate, and I do not think it is fair to the President to use the argument that I heard used this afternoon, that it is the best that could be done, because the conferees were satisfied that if the Magnuson-Morse amendment were left in the bill the President would veto it. I hope that such an argument will not be made again in the Senate of the United States, because I think the argument itself constitutes an infringement upon the independence of the Senate. If the time ever comes when Members of this body do not exercise an honest independence of judgment on the merits of issues in accordance with the facts as they find them, uninfluenced by any threat of a veto, this body will have ceased to be the great deliberative and independent body that the founding fathers intended when they created it.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I am wondering if the Senator will tell us whether or not he ever attempted in recent years to have section 22 revised in accordance with the provision in the original Senate bill which we passed some time ago. In other words, as was pointed out by the distinguished Senator, efforts were made to incorporate in other bills the provisions of section 22. For instance, we have it in the Commodity Credit bill. Does not the Senator think that it would be conducive to better legislation for a revision of section 22 to be discussed on its own merits, rather than to have it attached to a bill such as a bill to increase the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation?

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say to my friend, the Senator from Louisiana, that I think we ought to try to have this principle adopted in connection with every piece of legislation to which it properly applies. I have tried for some years, I may say to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, in connection with agricultural bills, to have the principle of this amendment placed in effect. We made some progress in the Senate in years gone by, but we have failed at other points. In regard to those failures I would say that I am always hopeful that a sound lesson, adequately taught, will finally be accepted by the pupil. We have been building up over the years our lesson in regard to this matter. I was hopeful that this year the State Department would see that they ought to agree with what we are seeking to accomplish. I was keenly disappointed that they were the ones who principally opposed the amendment again. I think this is the place to incorporate the principle of the amendment because it has direct application to the subject matter over which we are seeking to take jurisdiction.

Mr. ELLENDER. I can say to the Senator from Oregon that if a bill had been introduced in the early part of this session or last session, and had been brought before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, consideration could have been given to the merits of the bill itself. That would have been better than to attach it every now and then to other legislation. If the Senator will introduce a bill to carry out what the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment has in mind, as a member of the committee I will say to him that we shall give consideration to it and have it brought to the Senate floor at an early date. As the Senator knows, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has gone on record on two occasions in the last few years on this issue. The last time the committee was unanimous in its approval of the so-called Magnuson amendment. All members voted for it except the one member who was absent. All the members voted for the amendment as it was incorporated in the Commodity Credit Corporation bill.

Mr. MORSE. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Oregon being very good friends, I hope the Senator will not take offense if I discuss for a moment the parliamentary implications of his suggestion. He has made an argument which is frequently heard on the floor of the Senate when something is sought to be accomplished by an amendment which is germane. I submit to the Senator from Louisiana that the Magnuson-Morse amendment is germane to the legislation which is now before the Senate. When it is attempted to have it adopted as an amendment, the argument is frequently heard which the Senator from Louisiana has made: "Why didn't you try it another way? Why didn't you try it by a separate and independent bill?" Of course that is a matter of choice on the part of the authors of a bill. The Senator from Louisiana and I may disagree as to what the result may have been had we tried to do it in another way. The Senator from Washington and I were satisfied that we would get a much earlier consideration of our amendment if we followed the parliamentary channel which we followed this year. I think time has proved us to be right. We got it through the Senator's committee, and we thank him for the assistance he was to us. We got it through the Senate. We did pretty well. That is the choice we made.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Oregon would have had the same result if a bill had been introduced.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator and I disagree as to how well we might have done had we taken the course he now suggests. Our judgment is that we would not have done nearly so well. It is very reassuring for the Senator from Louisiana to tell us that we would have done as well but I do not know how we could have done better as far as the Senate is concerned. We did pretty well in getting the amendment attached to the bill as it passed the Senate. We followed that choice. I think it was a sound choice to make. At any rate that is the decision we reached. The amendment is germane. It is no rider. It is germane. Although there were alternatives, I confess that I am a little suspicious as to what would have happened if we had tried to accomplish the same result by a separate bill. Let me say that I have several bills sleeping on the calendar. I think those bills are very important. However, I do not seem to be able to induce the majority leader—in whose capacity my friend from Louisiana is now acting—to quite agree with me that it is important to take those bills up for formal action by the Senate. The Senator from Washington, [Mr. MAGNUSON] and I did not think we should take a chance on this issue. We succeeded in having it adopted as a germane amendment to the bill. I am now for taking the kind of action that we shall ask the Senate to take on Monday, and that is to send the bill back to conference.

EXTENSION OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA EMERGENCY RENT CONTROL ACT

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington wishes to offer two brief statements.

During the course of today several Senators who were not present late yesterday afternoon when the Senate took affirmative action on extending rent controls in the District of Columbia for a period of 6 months from June 30, 1950, have inquired of the junior Senator from Washington concerning whether they would be given a future opportunity to vote against any extension of rent controls for the District of Columbia. The Senator from Washington has suggested to these Senators that the Senate rent-control-extension bill for the District of Columbia would probably go to conference, and if this action takes place, all Senators will be provided with an opportunity to vote for or against the conference report as is their individual wish. The junior Senator from Washington wishes now to serve notice that he will request a yea-and-nay vote if or when a 1950 District of Columbia rent-control-extension conference report is before the Senate.

The Senator from Washington was pleased to have other Senators state to him this day that they wanted a chance to make it clear to the authorities and to the citizens of the District of Columbia that in their judgment they think it is timely to decontrol rents in the District of Columbia, and that some Senators who have recently voted in favor of decontrolling rents throughout the Nation, will not vote to continue rent controls in the District.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAIN. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. MORSE. I was excused by the Senate last week from attendance on the Senate, because of an election campaign in my home State in which I am vitally interested, and during my absence the conference report on the rent-control measure came before the Senate. I had left instructions to be recorded against the conference report. I find that those instructions did not, for some reason, reach the Secretary of the Senate—through no fault of his—so I am recorded as not voting.

I want the RECORD to show that I was opposed to the conference report. I want the RECORD to show also that I think that what should have prevailed in the country should have prevailed in the District of Columbia. I was likewise opposed to the continuation of rent controls in the District of Columbia. I was paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON] on the rent control bill itself, and paired against the bill. With the permission of the Senate and the Senator from Washington, I take this half minute to say, by way of reiteration, what I have said previously for the RECORD, that I was opposed to continuation of rent control, because of the inevitable answer I had to make to two questions, first, the question of fact: Did the evidence in the record show a national need, because of a Nation-wide housing shortage, for the continuation of rent control? I think the answer clearly was "No."

Second, Was the continuation of rent control justified as a matter of law? The Supreme Court has clearly held that Federal legislation in the field of rent control can be legally justified only on the basis of a national emergency. Having found as a matter of fact, by a preponderance of the evidence, a failure to establish a national emergency, because of a housing shortage, as a reason for a continuation of rent control, I had to answer the second question, so far as the matter of law was concerned, also against a continuation of rent control. I concluded that the proposed legislation could not be justified as a matter of law, on the basis of the decisions already handed down by the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, again I say that I am at a great loss to understand how any constitutional liberal, if satisfied that the evidence did not show the need for rent control on a Nation-wide basis, could justify a vote for a bill which provides for the exercise of Federal jurisdiction over a subject matter which, in the absence of a national emergency should be handled on a localized basis in whatever section of the country there may be a local need for a continuation of rent control.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington is only distressed that the Senator from Oregon has spoken so briefly on such a fundamental and interesting question. It happens that the Senator from Oregon was not among the several Senators who, during the course of this day, have inquired as to whether they might have a future opportunity to vote on the extension of rent controls within the District of Columbia. It is very good to know, I wish to say to my good friend from Oregon, that when that question comes shortly before the Congress again, as it probably will, those who share his views may look to him for an aggressive vote against accepting whatever the conference report may recommend.

Mr. President, I desire now to refer to another subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

EXTENSION OF THE SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1948

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, yesterday during the debate on the extension of the Selective Service Act in the Senate an amendment was offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] and other Senators. The purpose of the amendment was to place the authority for inductions in the hands of the Congress, rather than to have this authority remain with the President of the United States, as had been recommended by the Senate Committee on Armed Services.

The Watkins amendment was compromised by an amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL]. The amended amendment provided that both the Congress and the President would have the authority to require that inductions take place under the Selective Service Act. The Congress would assume this responsibility when it was in session, and the President would assume the resposibility when the Congress was not in session. The amendment in question was approved by the Senate, and the bill of which the amendment became a part was passed by the Senate and sent to conference.

The junior Senator from Washington, who is a member of the Senate Committee on Armed Services, opposed the Watkins amendment, and voted for the Saltonstall compromise with real reluctance. He considered the position of the Senate Committee on Armed Services to be sound and realistic. He now hopes, however, that the very least the conference committee will agree to do is to retain the Watkins-Saltonstall amendment. To reject this amendment in favor of the original House position would be, to my mind, to have no way of activating the Selective Service Act during those periods when the Congress was in adjournment or recess.

We can all hope that it will never be necessary to employ a manpower draft in America, but we will all agree, I think we must agree, that we must have a practical and daily means of utilizing selective service should a real need arise.

Mr. President, one thing became apparent to the junior Senator from Washington during the debate, which occupied most of Wednesday and Thursday of this week, and I wish to speak a word or two about it.

I believe it to be so that a number of Senators who are in favor of extending the Selective Service Act are in strong opposition to providing the President of the United States with authority to determine when inductions under the act ought to be made, because they do not trust the President, and they do not wish to provide him with the power recommended for fear that he will abuse it.

I ought to say, Mr. President, that the junior Senator from Washington has about as little confidence as anyone in the office of the President of the United States as it is now occupied and managed. He has, in fact, a deep distrust of that office. He feels that it will be good for the people of America when the present chief occupant of the White House is returned to private life.

But, Mr. President, the big question today before the Congress of the United States, and before the conference, which includes Members from both the House of Representatives and the Senate, is not my opinion or our opinion of the President of the United States, but, rather, the welfare and the good of the American people.

With reference to the Senate Armed Services Committee's recommended extension of the Selective Service Act of 1948, the advisers of the President in his capacity as Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the United States are Americans for whom the junior Senator from Washington has the fullest possible measure of respect, admiration and confidence. Had the Selective Service Act been approved as recommended by the Senate Committee on the Armed Services, the President of the United States would take his advice—from whom? From the Secretary of Defense, Mr. Louis Johnson, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Omar Bradley, the Army Chief of Staff, Gen. J. Lawton—called Lightning Joe—Collins, the Director of Selective Service, Gen. Lewis Hershey, the Secretary of the Army, Mr. Frank Pace, and the heads of several other services. These men, to my mind, would no more abuse and avoid the will and wish of the Congress of the United States and of the people of America, than they would be guilty of treason against the land of their birth.

The gentleman to whom I have referred will seek recourse to the Selective Service Act only if it turns out to be utterly impossible to secure the required number of enlistments from volunteers. These gentlemen, through their advice to the President, stopped using the Selective Service Act 18 months ago because volunteers were being recruited in sufficient number to maintain an adequate personnel strength in the several services.

The recommended Selective Service Act extension provides personnel ceilings beyond which no one, including the President of the United States, is authorized to go without additional authority to be secured from a future Congress. In addition to this worth-while and justifiable safeguard, the Congress will continue to limit the strength of the armed services through the appropriation which the Congress makes available for the care and maintenance of military personnel. These two safeguards, it seems to me, justify granting authority to the Chief Executive to activate the Selective Service Act within the limits defined by the personnel ceilings and by appropriations.

The Senator from Washington was strongly in opposition to the Watkins amendment and was strongly in support of the committee recommendation because he sincerely was convinced that the welfare and safety of every American would be the more fully protected and maintained had the position and recommendation of the Senate Committee on Armed Services been approved by the Senate on yesterday. But, Mr. President, because of what took place yesterday, because it was felt necessary to reach a compromise position, the Senator from Washington hopes that the conference will agree to have the President of the United States share a great and a serious responsibility with the Congress of the United States in determining when the Selective Service Act shall and must be invoked.

SENATE

MONDAY, JUNE 26, 1950

(Legislative day of Wednesday, June 7, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God our Father, in all the confusion and perplexity of these convulsive days, our faith looks up to Thee, who dost overarch our fleeting years with Thy eternity and dost undergird our weakness with Thy strength. Standing in these epochal days in the valley of decision, strengthen our will to choose that which is morally excellent rather than that which is politically expedient. May we never hesitate when the choice is between honor and calculation.

Our hearts in sympathy leap the seas this morning with the solemn realization that this very hour, under eastern skies, men are dying for freedom rather than to live as slaves.

"God the all-righteous One,
Man hath defied Thee,
Yet to eternity standeth Thy word.
Falsehood and wrong shall not tarry beside Thee,
Give to us peace—a righteous peace—
In our time, O Lord!"

Amen.

REPORTS ON DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

Mr. FREAR (for Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina), from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which were referred for examination and recommendation two lists of records transmitted to the Senate by the Archivist of the United States that appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted reports thereon pursuant to law.

(Mr. MAGNUSON introduced Senate Joint Resolution 192, to designate the lake to be formed by the waters impounded by the Chief Joseph Dam in the State of Washington as "Rufus Woods Lake," which was referred to the Committee on Public Works, and appears under a separate heading.)

REGISTRATION OF AMERICAN SHIPS UNDER FOREIGN FLAGS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I introduced for appropriate reference a bill. It is introduced on behalf of the Subcommittee on Merchant Marine of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an evil which has arisen in the maritime industry of the world, namely, the registration of ships under Panamanian and other foreign registries, which operates to the detriment of the employment of our seamen. It also involves a tax evasion on the part of many American citizens who build ships here, or at other places throughout the world, and then register them under the Panamanian flag. It is an evil which we hope we shall be able to eradicate.

There is a most difficult legal question involved, but it surely is one which must be dealt with if we are to keep an adequate merchant marine flying the American flag. I call attention particularly to the fact that the language of the bill is not entirely perfect, because of legal questions involved. However, we hope to have immediate hearings on the bill. We are open to suggestions. Our real objective is to eradicate the evil referred to.

The bill (S. 3823) to amend section 9 of the Shipping Act, 1916, relating to transfer of vessels documented under the laws of the United States to foreign citizens and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MAGNUSON, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT FINANCIAL CONTROL ACT OF 1950

Mr. FREAR. Mr. President, on behalf of the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide improved procedures with respect to the financial control of the Post Office Department, and for other purposes. In order to save the time of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill I have prepared, be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 3829) to provide improved procedures with respect to the financial control of the Post Office Department, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. FREAR (for himself, Mr. HUMPHREY, and Mr. THYE), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. FREAR is as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR FREAR TO ACCOMPANY INTRODUCTION OF BILL

It is the purpose of this proposed legislation to implement the Hoover Commission report on the Post Office Department with respect to the accounting and auditing recommendations. As it affects the financial control procedures of the postal service, the Hoover Commission recommends as follows:

"We do not recommend that the Post Office Department should be incorporated under that law (Government Corporations Control Act of 1945), as we consider that to be unnecessary. We do recommend that the provisions of that law in respect to business management, budgeting, accounting, and audit be applied to the post office."

The report further stated:

"We wish to emphasize our recommendations elsewhere that the Department should keep its own accounts and make its own disbursements subject to audit by the Comptroller General and in accordance with procedures determined by the Accountant General (not yet in existence), these procedures to be approved by the Comptroller General."

The task force for the Hoover Commission on the post office stated with respect to this problem that the final settlement of accounts of the Post Office Department should be made by the General Accounting Office.

The Post Office Department budget of this year has been prepared along functional lines and, in view of this recent change, it is not proposed to enact legislation which will again completely revise the budget system of the Department.

The proposed legislation carries out these suggestions of the Hoover Commission report and implements the new budget procedure by—

1. Transferring the administrative accounting and reporting functions presently performed by the Comptroller General to the Postmaster General;

2. Transferring the preaudit of expenses by the General Accounting Office to the Postmaster General;

3. Authorizing the Comptroller General to prescribe the principles and standards for the accounting system of the Post Office Department in accordance with certain requirements established in the bill;

4. Authorizing the Postmaster General to collect all debts, fines, penalties, and forfeitures and liabilities arising out of the operation of the postal service, but he may refer items which he cannot collect to the Comptroller General for collection;

5. Establishing a revolving fund for the Post Office Department;

6. Authorizing the Postmaster General to designate the places where administrative examination of accounts be made (now required to be made in Washington);

7. Authorizing and directing the General Accounting Office to audit the financial transactions of the Post Office Department. A less than 100 percent audit may be made at the option of the Comptroller General;

8. Providing for separately setting out in the annual statement of revenues and expenditures of the Post Office Department those items presently certified to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller General under the act of June 9, 1930;

9. Permits more flexibility in making leases for real estate;

10. Transferring to the Post Office Department such records, property, personnel, appropriations, etc., primarily connected with functions transferred under the bill; and

11. Rescinds specific laws which will no longer be necessary if the bill is enacted.

DESIGNATION OF RUFUS WOODS LAKE

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution which would provide for the designation as Rufus Woods Lake of the huge lake which is to be formed by the waters impounded by the Chief Joseph Dam, in my State, which is to be one of the largest hydroelectric power plants in the world.

The reason for that designation is quite obvious to those of us who live in the Pacific Northwest and who have been interested in the great development of the potentials of our hydroelectric reclamation and irrigation projects. Rufus Woods was one of the pioneers in the city of Wenatchee, Wash., and for many years he edited and published the Wenatchee Daily World. That newspaper, largely through the personal efforts of Mr. Woods, was primarily responsible for the early pioneering work of acquainting the people of the State of their vast potential resources. Mr. Woods was unceasing in his efforts. He kept hammering away at the facts, the ascertainment which led to much of the awareness, not only within the State of Washington and in the Pacific Northwest, but in the Congress, of the need for development of those great projects. He lived to see a substantial development of the Columbia River. However, unfortunately he passed away a few weeks ago, not living to see the culmination and fruition of his real dream, namely, the building of the Chief Joseph Dam, which is to supply power for the great Wenatchee Valley.

I think it only appropriate at this time, and I am sure it will meet with the approval of every resident of the State of Washington, that the great lake which is to be formed behind Chief Joseph Dam be named in honor of Rufus Woods. The large lake behind Grand Coulee has been named appropriately Franklin D. Roosevelt Lake, because, along with Rufus Woods and other pioneers, he had a great deal to do with the development of the Grand Coulee and the building of the power dam.

I hope the Senate and House will look with favor upon this joint resolution. If they do, it will meet with the gratitude of all of us who revere the memory of Rufus Woods.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a short observation?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I should very much like to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator regarding the very distinguished American, Rufus Woods, to whom all of us throughout the Pacific Northwest have reason to be grateful, and whom we shall miss in the years to come.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I thank my colleague.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 192) to designate the lake to be formed by the waters impounded by the Chief Joseph Dam in the State of Washington as Rufus Woods Lake, introduced by Mr. MAGNUSON, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Works.

REDUCTION OF EXCISE TAXES—AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8920) to reduce excise taxes, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

BOUNDARY AGREEMENT BETWEEN MISSOURI AND KANSAS—ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, Senate Joint Resolution 147, giving the consent of Congress to an agreement between the State of Missouri and the State of Kansas establishing a boundary between said States, was reported favorably today by the Senate Judiciary Committee. The joint resolution gives the consent of Congress to a boundary agreement between the States of Missouri and Kansas. The junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. DARBY] introduced a similar joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 181. That joint resolution was not acted on by the Judiciary Committee because it would accomplish the same result as Senate Joint Resolution 147. I ask unanimous consent that the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. DARBY], together with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], and the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. SCHOEPPEL] be recorded as joint cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 147.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, again recognizing the utmost importance of the enactment into law of Senate bill 3463, to make unlawful any strike or any lock-out by a carrier arising out of or in connection with any dispute falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an editorial entitled "Unions and Public Opinion," which appeared in the New York Times of Saturday, June 24.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIONS AND PUBLIC OPINION

Five of the Nation's key railroad systems were tied up from May 10 to May 15 by a strike of locomotive firemen. At 7 o'clock tomorrow morning another group of five roads is scheduled to be struck—this time by the A. F. of L. switchmen's union. And threats of strikes on a Nation-wide scale have been voiced by two of the carriers' Big Four brotherhoods—the Order of Railway Conductors and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Other railroad disputes, too, are reported to be moving toward the walk-out point. But these three have one important characteristic in common. In each case the union has carried the issue through the preliminary stages provided by the Railway Labor Act to the highest tribunal under that law, a Presidential fact-finding board. And in each case the union is striking, or threatening to strike, not because it hasn't had a fair trial but because an able, fair-minded and disinterested court has refused to concede its demands 100 percent.

For about a decade after it was passed, the Railway Labor Act functioned pretty much as its authors had hoped it would. Labor and management used its facilities sparingly because they preferred to settle their differences between themselves. When they took their disputes to the Mediation Board, it was because they believed that such a course might expedite a settlement. Then a development occurred which was to mark the beginning of the end of this period of the Board's successful operation.

This was the discovery by the railroad unions that by throwing their weight around politically they could, in a manner of speaking, make the railway labor law work for them. From that time forward they showed less and less interest in threshing out disputes with management and more in seeing what they could get from the Mediation Board in the way of compromise. Soon the Mediation Board, in turn, became only a whistle stop on the way to the fact-finding board, appointed directly by the President. And, finally, the day came when they found that if enough pressure were put on the White House they could often wangle something additional to what had been granted them by the fact-finding board.

When situations arise such as the walkout of last month and the three new walkouts now threatened, the stock defense of the union leaders is that there is "nothing in the Railway Labor Act" which compels them to accept a fact-finding board's recommendations. It is true the recommendations have behind them only the compulsion of public opinion. Unfortunately, it is equally true that the unions have been trading on this very fact now for a decade. They have recognized and exploited the fact that the railroads, being a public utility, cannot use the economic weapon of the lock-out against them and that by resorting to force they are dealing, therefore, with an antagonist who is unarmed. This may be "smart" tactics, but obviously it outrages the whole spirit of the Railway Labor Act, the basic purpose of which was to insure the uninterrupted maintenance of national transportation.

We think that in electing to circumvent the spirit of the Railway Labor Act the railway labor unions will find before too long that they have made a serious miscalculation. We think they will find that they have greatly underrated the power of public opinion, which their actions suggest they hold in very low esteem. Largely because they are so heavily fraught with public interest and necessity, the railroads are treated differently before the law than other corporations. A railroad may not cease operations at will, as an industrial plant may shut down. If a railroad defaults on its debts, its creditors may not descend upon it, break it up, and divide its physical assets among them. It must be preserved as a going concern, in the interest of public convenience and necessity.

The unions who operate these railroads are no less economically monopolistic than the carriers themselves, and they are under no less responsibility than railroad management to see that interruptions are prevented from occurring in the flow of goods from one area to another. If the unions persist in ignoring this responsibility, then the time will come—and it will come in the not too distant future, in our opinion—when the public and the Congress will take that choice out of their hands once and for all.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an editorial entitled "Dangerous Strikes," which appeared in the Washington Daily News of Saturday, June 24.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DANGEROUS STRIKES

The A. F. of L. Switchmen's Union has ordered a strike tomorrow by 4,000 of its members against five western railroads. The Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen and the Order of Conductors threaten a national strike by 250,000 members on July 15.

All three unions object to the recommendations of a Railway Labor Act fact-finding board appointed by the President.

They had demanded a 40-hour week, at the same pay now received for 48 hours, for some 80,000 members employed as railroad yard workers. The board recommended the 40-hour week with a wage raise of 18 cents an hour as a partial offset to the loss of 8 hours' pay. It turned down increases demanded for other members of the trainmen's and conductors' unions.

Presidents Kennedy of the trainmen and Nemitz of the conductors call the board's report "unjust, unfair, inequitable, and injurious." Rank-and-file workers, they say, are dissatisfied with the Railway Labor Act and feel that they can get more through direct negotiations.

The Railway Labor Act does not compel acceptance of fact-finding board's recommendations. So the unions are within their legal rights in threatening to strike, or actually striking, as a means of trying to enforce their full demands.

But, in this newspaper's opinion, the country would not tolerate strikes which deprived it of railroad services essential to national health and safety.

A certain result of such strikes would be immense growth of public demand for compulsory arbitration of railway labor-management disputes, as proposed by Senator DONNELL, Republican of Missouri, in a bill now before Congress. A quite probable result would be enactment of the Donnell bill.

Both labor and management have often complained against the workings of the Railway Labor Act. But if that law and its voluntary principles are destroyed by strikes, what replaces it will surely be far more unsatisfactory to the unions.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, an article entitled "Switchmen Strike, Halting Operation of Four Roads in West," appearing in this morning's New York Times.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SWITCHMEN STRIKE, HALTING OPERATION OF FOUR ROADS IN WEST—REJECTING PLEAS OF NATIONAL MEDIATION BOARD FOR DELAY, 4,000 QUIT ON FIVE RAILWAYS—EAST IS ESCAPING EFFECTS—TRAINS SHIFT TO OTHER LINES—ROCK ISLAND, WESTERN PACIFIC, DENVER & RIO GRANDE, GREAT WESTERN HIT

CHICAGO, June 25.—Four thousand members of the Switchmen's Union of North America, American Federation of Labor, walked off their jobs today on five midwestern and western carriers. The strikers demand shorter hours and more pay.

The strike was the second major railroad walk-out in 40 days.

Ignoring last-minute efforts of the National (Railway) Mediation Board to postpone the strike, the railroad yard employees, who for the most part operate manual switches, abandoned their posts at 6 a. m. central standard time.

As a result, all through passenger and freight trains on four of the roads involved were halted for the duration of the emergency when they reached their destinations.

The exception was the Great Northern Railway Co., on whose 8,000-mile system only 60 of 15,000 switchmen are members of the striking union. The rest are members of the Brotherhood of Trainmen.

The four other roads involved in the strike call issued on Wednesday by Arthur J. Glover, of Buffalo, N. Y., union president, are the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Co., the Chicago & Great Western, the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad Co., and the Western Pacific Railroad Co.

HUNDREDS OF CARS DIVERTED

There were indications tonight that eastern shippers and passengers would not be seriously affected by the strike. The struck lines, it was learned, are turning over hundreds of their cars for use by carriers unhampered by the walk-out. The Rock Island disclosed that all of its special trains assigned to carrying delegates to and from the Shrine convention in Los Angeles had been switched to operating transcontinental roads.

As the struck roads were taking steps to remove about 66,000 employees from their payrolls, steps toward a possible settlement were taken by the Mediation Board.

Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., Board Chairman, said this afternoon that Mr. Glover had agreed to return to Chicago from his Buffalo headquarters tomorrow morning for a meeting at 10 a. m. with the Board and the railroads. Mr. O'Neill disclosed that he had telegraphed Mr. Glover today and had expected him here today, but his arrival had been postponed.

Before the strike became effective, Mr. O'Neill and T. E. Bickers, secretary of the Board, had wired Mr. Glover urging postponement of the walkout.

SERIOUS INTERFERENCE CITED

Mr. O'Neill asked for postponement until Tuesday, when he has scheduled a meeting in Chicago with the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and the Order of Railway Conductors to discuss the recent Presidential emergency board's recommendation of a 40-hour week and 18-cent pay increase. Mr. Glover refused to agree to a postponement.

These two unions are currently negotiating with the Nation's carriers. Heads of the unions have called a meeting of their general chairmen here July 10. They are legally free to strike on July 15.

Mr. Bicker's telegram stressed that failure to postpone the walkout would "seriously interefere" with the Board's negotiations involving the trainmen and conductors on Tuesday.

To Mr. Bicker's request that the switchmen's negotiating committee resume concurrent mediation with the trainmen and conductors Mr. Glover replied:

"The railroads not only offered no solution to the dispute, but absolutely refused to bargain in the spirit intended by the Railway Labor Act.

"It is our position that no board heard our dispute in accordance with the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, consequently there could be no board recommendations that would apply to us."

The switchmen are asking a 40-hour week, equivalent to an hourly increase of 31 cents. The union recently won a contract with the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad providing 48 hours for a 40-hour week. This contract sets the daily pay scale at $13.06 to $15.67 for switch foremen or yard conductors; from $12.21 to $14.65 for helpers or yard brakemen, and from $10.71 to $12.86 for switch tenders.

LARGE TERRITORY AFFECTED

The western territory that faced disruption of travel and shipping is shown by the areas traversed by the struck lines. The Rock Island's 8,000 miles of trackage cross Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Tennessee.

The Great Western's 1,500 miles of tracks cross Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, and Minnesota.

The Denver & Rio Grande, operating out of Denver, crosses Oklahoma and Utah, where it terminates in Salt Lake City. In addition, it has a number of offshoots in both States.

The Western Pacific, starting at Salt Lake City, crosses Utah, Nevada, and has terminals in Sacramento and San Francisco in California.

The main terminal of the Great Northern is at the Twin Cities. From there and Duluth and Superior the vast system sprawls across the northern tier of States and has terminals at Portland, Oreg., Seattle, Wash., and Vancouver in British Columbia.

OPPOSING STATEMENTS ISSUED

During the day Mr. Glover and the railroads issued statements in which they clashed on the strike issues. Asserting that the walk-out of 4,000 of his union's 25,000 members would stay in effect until we win our objective, Mr. Glover added:

"The major issue in this dispute is the 40-hour week. Many of our switchmen now work 48 to 56 hours a week without overtime pay.

"Most of the industry has operated on a 40-hour week for years. There is no reason why the railroads can't put switchmen on a 40-hour week. Already more than 1,000,000 railroad employees work a 40-hour week.

"Our strike is a legal strike for legitimate demands. We are sorry if the strike causes inconveniences to the public, but the responsibilities for that strike rests entirely with the railroads."

Contending that the 44-hour week isn't an issue at all, a spokesman for the railroads said:

"They were offered the 40-hour week and an 18-cent hourly wage increase on recommendation of the Presidential Fact-Finding Board. Glover turned it down."

COMPENSATION CALLED ISSUE

"The real issue is compensation for the 40-hour week. The union is demanding 48 hours pay for 40 hours, or 31 cents in terms of hourly pay increase.

"As for the 50-hours-a-week work, there isn't a single switchman who is required to work 56 hours, or 7 days. Some of them do because they want to earn the extra pay it brings them."

Meanwhile, officials of the switchmen's union said that pickets had been stationed at yard offices and terminals of the five struck railroads. In Chicago one patrolman was assigned to strike duty at the Rock Island yards. He reported all quiet.

Two other strike threats confront the railroads.

The Railroad Yardmasters of America, A. F. of L., are legally free to strike on or after July 15. They have assailed as disgraceful the June 15 recommendations of a Presidential fact-finding board.

In addition, the Pullman conductors division of the Order of the Railway Conductors, numbering 2,200, have set a strike for 6 a. m. standard time, July 11. The legal machinery of the Railway Labor Act is expected to head off the walk-out for 60 days.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, it is my intention not to consume further time at this point, in view of the debate which is to occur on the conference report. However, later in the day I shall submit a request for unanimous consent to introduce various other articles on the question of the railroad strike.

Mr. DONNELL subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD certain editorials which I shall submit in a moment. My reason for making the request is the pendency of the switchmen's strike, now in progress on the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad; the Chicago Great Western Railroad; the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad; the Western Pacific Railroad; and the Great Northern Railway Co.; and also the other recent strikes or strike threats which have confronted the railroads.

Mr. President, not only do these strike threats concern the railroads, but, deeper and much more fundamental and of much greater importance, they concern the public of the United States.

There is now pending a bill, which I had the honor of introducing on April 21 of this year, Senate bill 3463, to make unlawful any strike or any lock-out by a carrier arising out of or in connection with any dispute falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act.

Mr. President, by reason of the pendency of the existing strike, by reason of the other strike threats which now confront the railroads and confront the public itself, and by reason of the tremendously urgent importance of the enactment by Congress of the proposed legislation embraced in Senate bill 3463, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated at this point in the body of the RECORD, as part of my remarks, first, an editorial entitled "The Donnell Bill," appearing in the Chicago Journal of Commerce of May 11, 1950.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE DONNELL BILL

The Donnell bill is strong medicine—but the patient is mighty sick. The measure offered to the Senate by the Missouri Republican would require compulsory arbitration in railway labor disputes. The voluntary method of settling labor disputes, set up in the railway labor act, has proved a dud. Indeed that entire statute, once regarded as a model of labor legislation, has come to look feeble and flabbly and futile.

The need for heroic measures is underlined by the strike of 18,000 members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen. In their fanatical fight to force the Nation's railroads to place an extra fireman—unwanted and unneeded—on multi-unit Diesels, the firemen have choked off operations on four major railroads. Presidents of three of those lines—Gurley of the Santa Fe, Metzman of the New York Central and Franklin of the Pennsylvania—have flatly declared that voluntary arbitration has failed.

The Nation's transportation system is suffering from union-made thrombosis. Talk and handwringing won't make it well. That's why we favor stronger remedies.

The phrase "compulsory arbitration" hasn't a pretty sound. Americans don't like compulsion in any form. Nevertheless, where the public welfare is closely and vitally affected, it appears the only swift and sure solution. The alternatives in this case are (a) continuation and broadening of the rail stoppage—a disaster that would cripple American business; and (b) capitulation to one of the most outrageous featherbedding demands in the history of labor relations.

Twice fact-finding boards have denied the union's contention that a third man was needed on Diesels for reasons of "safety." It is unthinkable that any fair-minded board of arbitration could find otherwise. The railroads can submit to arbitration—compulsory or voluntary—in serene confidence. The union, of course, cannot.

The Nation is faced with possible economic strangulation or cowardly surrender—or swift passage of the Donnell bill.

Mr. DONNELL. Second, Mr. President, an editorial entitled "Wheels A-Stopping," appearing in the Chicago Journal of Commerce of June 23, 1950.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHEELS A-STOPPING

Sunday morning, if his threat holds good, A. J. Glover will pull the switch and the light will flash red for scores of trains on five rail systems.

Mr. Glover is president of the A. F. of L. Switchmen's Union of North America, which has decided to ignore the recommendation of a Presidential fact-finding board. The board proposed that henceforth the switchmen, as well as unions representing trainmen and conductors, be awarded 44 hours' pay for 40 hours' work. The unionists, however, demand 48 hours' pay for 40 hours' work, plus a reduction of the basic workday in passenger service to 5 hours.

And so the switchmen will go on strike. The trainmen and conductors may also strike when their statutory cooling-off period expires on July 15. In any case some or all of the five struck railway lines will cease operations before 6 o'clock Sunday morning.

As usual everyone will suffer except the union leaders who called the strike. The rail systems and their stockholders will lose money. Shippers and passengers (including many Chicago suburban commuters) will be seriously inconvenienced. Four thousand switchmen and many thousands of nonstriking employees of the railway systems will find their incomes choked off.

Reason for the precipitate action by the switchmen's union, according to D. P. Loomis, chairman of the Association of Western Railways, is the fact that leaders of that union, although representing only 5 percent of the switchmen, entertain an ambition to get out ahead of the trainmen and conductors.

The prospect of this damaging and cynical strike could easily have been averted. On May 11 we editorially supported the Donnell bill, which would require compulsory arbitration in railway labor disputes. But on May 17 our Washington bureau reported that there was little chance of action in the Senate Labor Committee on the bill. By that time the firemen's strike had ended. And with that spur removed, the Senators had no wish to dabble with a politically touchy measure.

But by now it should be obvious that something very like the Donnell bill is the only visible means of immunizing the Nation against transportation paralysis. Where the United States economic health is involved, politics should take second place—and a poor second at that.

Mr. DONNELL. Third, Mr. President, an editorial entitled "They Offer Nothing," appearing in the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer of June 17, 1950.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THEY OFFER NOTHING

Those who bitterly denounce the bill introduced by Senator DONNELL, of Missouri, to prevent railroad strikes ought to propose a better way.

Testifying before the Senate Labor Committee, President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, denounced the measure as an attempt to establish a phase of Russian philosophy into American life, and a gratuitous insult because it assumes that labor would permit a real national emergency to develop.

He apparently wishes us to believe either that a strike that would paralyze the rail transportation system of the Nation would not create a national emergency or else that the railroad workers would never stage such a strike, even if called upon by their leaders to do so.

He said: "Any legislative assumption that the working people of this country are so lacking in patriotism and moral fiber is a sad commentary, not on the workers, but on the state of mind of those very legislators."

Green had the support of Senator NEELY, of West Virginia, who said "the Donnell bill would provide unlimited aid and comfort for every Communist recruiter in the country who seeks recruits in the ranks of labor."

But neither Green nor NEELY suggested any better plan for protecting the country against the national emergency of a Nation-wide railroad strike than the Donnell bill, which would prohibit rail strikes and require compulsory arbitration of railroad labor disputes.

It is based on the premise that the public interest is predominant to that of either labor or management in a dispute which threatens a national emergency.

But the opponents wish us to believe that the rank and file of railroad workers would never follow their leaders to stage a strike that would create a national emergency by paralyzing the Nation's railroad transportation system.

Mr. DONNELL. Fourth, Mr. President, an editorial entitled "Certainly Mr. Green Prefers Seizure," published in the Louisville Courier Journal of June 15, 1950.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CERTAINLY MR. GREEN PREFERS SEIZURE

Government seizure of strike-bound industries is one way to get them going again. In practice, however, it has amounted to a union victory more often than not. Because of that it is somewhat less than surprising to find William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, opposing the proposal of Missouri's Republican Senator DONNELL to outlaw railroad strikes.

Instead, Mr. Green suggested to Congress, Why not simply give the President authority to seize the railroads in critical labor disputes?

"We wouldn't object to that," assures Mr. Green in a small masterpiece of understatement.

The last time the Government seized a strike-bound industry was in 1946. The industry was coal. When the dust had settled the United Mine Workers had a healthy pay raise; their portal-to-portal day was cut from 8 to 7 hours; the employers were contributing 10 instead of 5 cents to the miners' welfare fund; paid lunch periods were longer, and the now-famous able-and-willing clause was tucked into their contract as a condition of work.

It was a total victory for John L. Lewis.

Since Government seizure in the past has meant that private ownership would get its business back with most of labor's demands agreed to, Government seizure has meant a collapse of collective bargaining in favor of the union. We have an idea that industrial management is not excessively opposed to this turn of events, because it may take the cheerful position that the settlement is none of its responsibility, and. whatever the cost, it may be passed along to the consumer.

Senator DONNELL's proposal would submit critical rail disputes to compulsory arbitration, which in his view is like submitting other disagreements to the civil courts. Mr. Green takes the somewhat extravagant position that the Donnell bill is flavored with Russian philosophy and is a gratuitous insult to all organized labor.

The Donnell plan needs further discussion, since if it were enacted as law it would have wide significance in organized labor outside the railroad brotherhoods, and since compulsory arbitration anyway is a subject of violent dispute. With no further discussion at all, however, Mr. Green's suggestion may be seen to offer no help.

(At this point Mr. DONNELL submitted nine newspaper articles on the railroad strike, which at his request were ordered to be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD, and appear there.)

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, in connection with these railway strikes—such as the one now in progress; such as the one we had a month ago; such as those which have been threatened; such as that in 1946, which tied up the Nation's network of railways, and resulted in an immediate paralysis of service; such as the strike which was threatened in 1948, and was prevented only by Federal injunction—again I make the point, Mr. President, as I have made it time and time again on the floor of the Senate and in the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, that the interest of the public demands that there be enacted legislation, as is proposed in Senate bill 3463, to make unlawful any strike or any lock-out by a carrier arising out of or in connection with any dispute falling within the purview of the Railway Labor Act.

CITATION OF SENATOR MAGNUSON FOR SERVICE TO THE MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an article entitled, "Events of Interest in Shipping World." The article refers to a distinguished honor which is to be given to one of our colleagues, the able and distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON].

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EVENTS OF INTEREST IN SHIPPING WORLD—SENATOR MAGNUSON WILL GET CITATION TODAY FOR SERVICE TO THE MERCHANT MARINE

Senator WARREN G. MAGNUSON, Democrat, of Washington, will be honored this morning by the Marine News Board of Awards with a citation.

Joseph F. Kelly, chairman of the board, said yesterday that the presentation would be made by Vice President ALBEN W. BARKLEY at a ceremony in the Senate Office Building.

Mr. Kelly said the Senator had been closely identified with virtually all the progressive maritime legislation now being considered by the upper House, and he paid particular tribute to his championing an adequate merchant marine.

This will be the eighth award made by the board, which was formed a year ago. Besides Mr. Kelly other members are George H. Palmer and W. P. Dodge.

Others honored by the board were Charles E. Wilson, president of the General Electric Co.; John G. Pew, president of the Sun Ship Building & Dry Dock Co.; William P. Roth, president of the Matson Navigation Co.; John M. Franklin, president of the United States Lines; George G. Sharp, of New York, the naval architect; William S. Newell, chairman of the board of the Bath Iron Works Corp. and head of the United Seamen's Service; and Le Grand Skinner, pioneer marine engineer and designer of the world's largest marine engine.

A special citation was also presented to Federal Judge Harold R. Medina of the southern district of New York.

ATTITUDE OF GREAT BRITAIN TOWARD WESTERN EUROPE AND EUROPEAN UNITY

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, last Friday, June 23, there was published an important letter from the British Ambassador, Sir Oliver Franks, to ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman. This letter was in response to an informal inquiry which Mr. Hoffman made at my suggestion.

The letter outlines the attitude of Great Britain toward western Europe and the contributions which Britain has made and hopes to make toward European unity. It goes further than any British statement I have seen in stressing British support for unity in Europe.

At the same time is was disappointing to me because my main concern was the obscure position of the British Government and the British Labor Party on the Schuman plan for a European coal-steel pool. I had hoped that some clarification would be forthcoming on this particular question, but it is understandable that since it is now in debate in the British Parliament no statement can be made at the moment. When that debate is concluded I hope that we may get more light on the British position, which may well be decisive for the success or failure of the Schuman plan.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the text of Mr. Hoffman's letter to Ambassador Franks and the text of the Ambassador's reply.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JUNE 19, 1950.

His Excellency Sir OLIVER FRANKS,
Ambassador of Great Britain,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: You will know that when I appeared before the Senate Armed Services and the Senate Foreign Relations Committees on June 15 I was asked for an informal statement clarifying British policy in relation to western Europe. I agreed that such a clarification was desirable at the present time and I should be very grateful if you, as British Ambassador to the United States, would give me a statement which serves this purpose.

Sincerely yours,

PAUL G. HOFFMAN,
Administrator.

BRITISH EMBASSY,
Washington, D. C., June 21, 1950.

The Honorable PAUL G. HOFFMAN,
Economic Cooperation Administrator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HOFFMAN: I am very glad to reply to your letter asking me for an informal statement on British policy in relation to western Europe. These are my views as British Ambassador to the United States.

The policy of the British Government is to cooperate with other western European countries and work with them for unity in Europe. This has been the policy of the British Government during the years since the war. It is so today. In virtue of history and geography alike such a policy is a vital necessity for Britain.

In carrying out this policy the British Government has worked and is working closely with other western European governments to develop and accomplish the common purposes which give increased strength and unity to all. The record shows the constructive and positive part Britain has played in the economic sphere, in matters of defense, and in the new political venture of the council of Europe.

The British Government took the lead in drawing up the convention under which OEEC was established in Paris following upon General Marshall's speech. The British Government has since worked in one team with the other democratic countries which are members of the OEEC, whether or not they differ in their domestic policies. This is the policy stated by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons on Tuesday, June 13, 1950, when he said:

"The Government has always made clear, both at the OEEC and elsewhere, that they are fully prepared to cooperate in the closer integration of the European economy with other countries which hold different economic views."

In the work of OEEC we have cooperated fully in the intra-European payments arrangements of the last 2 years and in connection with them have given further assistance in the form of credits to other participating countries. We were among the first to advocate and carry out the policy of liberalization of trade in western Europe. There has resulted a substantial freeing of trade between Britain and western European countries. It is a matter of record that total imports by Britain from other OEEC countries were £231,000,000 in 1947; £327,000,000 in 1948; and £448,000,000 approximately in 1949.

The European Payments Union which is now being worked out in OEEC will mark another major step in the freeing of monetary and trading conditions from which a further expansion of intra-European commerce will result. It has not been easy for Britain to offer to enter the European Payments Union as a full member. We have continuously exerted ourselves to do so, and now believe that, with the help of our European neighbors and the Office of the Special Representative, we have found the way to reconcile our membership of the Commonwealth with membership of the European Payments Union to the mutual advantage and prosperity of both these great trading areas. Britain is the focus of the Commonwealth, the maintenance of which we believe to be vital not only to its members but also to the free world. And it is only as the focus of the Commonwealth that the strength of Britain can make its full contribution to European recovery and unity. The long discussions which have taken place in Paris are evidence of the constructive and successful effort we have put forth to achieve full membership of the European Payments Union.

In recent weeks we gave an immediate welcome to the French initiative displayed in the Schuman plan. The Prime Minister said in the House of Commons on May 11:

"His Majesty's Government will approach the problem in a sympathetic spirit and desire to make it clear at the outset that they welcome this French initiative to end the age-long feud with Germany and so bring unity and peace to Europe."

Mr. Attlee again made the British attitude plain in the House of Commons on June 13:

"His Majesty's Government desire to help, not to hinder in this matter, and the manner in which they can best do so will only appear after the negotiations have begun."

In matters of defense, western union was a British initiative. Britain took the lead in negotiating the Brussels Treaty and establishing an integrated defensive system for the common defense of the territories of the five signatory countries—Belgium, Britain, France, Luxemburg, and The Netherlands. Under this system these five nations have made common arrangements for the build-up of land forces; backed by tactical air forces and a joint air defense system, and for the control and defense of vital sea communications. They are also cooperating in the production of equipment to support these forces.

Western union has now become one regional element in the wider North Atlantic Treaty organization. Britain has gladly played her full part in the wider integrated system and has, like the United States, backed up her willingness by making contributions of arms and equipment to her allies to the limit of what her financial and economic resources could bear without impairing her prospects of recovery. Since the end of the war Britain has contributed in the form of gifts, loans, or sales at greatly reduced prices well over $1,000,000,000 worth of arms and equipment to friendly countries, mainly to western European governments and Greece and Turkey.

Britain has also contributed positively to the idea of European unity in supporting the Council of Europe. Britain took a worthy part in the discussions which preceded the setting up of the Council and has been concerned throughout that its constitution should enable the Council to operate with real effect.

Britain is a power with world-wide interests, responsibilities, and commitments. Just as cooperation with her western European neighbors and the vigorous promotion of unity in Europe is a vital necessity for Britain so her associations in the Commonwealth and in the Atlantic community are also vital. The foreign policy of Britain rests upon and draws strength from these vital relationships with Europe, the Commonwealth, and the Atlantic community. It is the aim of British policy so to reconcile these relationships that they perpetually reinforce each other and by their complementary strengths add vigor and resource to the free world.

Yours sincerely,

OLIVER FRANKS.

CHARLES L. WATKINS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, in the Washington Star for today, June 26, there is an article entitled "Mr. Watkins is the Senate's Solomon." The article refers to our beloved Charles L. Watkins, whom we have the privilege of looking at every day. I desire to read from the first two paragraphs of the article:

Charles L. Watkins is a mild man who holds a job in which he's supposed to have the impartiality of Solomon.

He must be doing all right, because he's had his job a long time—

Mr. President, I shall not read the remainder of the paragraph; in fact, I would suggest that it be stricken out, because it says:

in a place where tempers are short and suspicions sharp.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. WATKINS IS THE SENATE'S SOLOMON

(By James Marlow)

Charles L. Watkins is a mild man who holds a job in which he's supposed to have the impartiality of Solomon.

He must be doing all right because he's had his job a long time in a place where tempers are short and suspicions sharp.

Mr. Watkins, who is 70, is the Senate Parliamentarian. In fact, he's the only full-time Parliamentarian the Senate ever has had.

In this job, he's supposed to walk down the middle, looking neither at the Democrats nor Republicans, while unscrambling the Senators from their own red tape, of which there is plenty.

Until 1883, the Senate had 44 rules. In that year, in what must have been an economy wave, the Senate reduced its rules from 44 to 40.

It still has the same 40, and it does its business according to those rules.

Any time a Senator acts contrary to what another Senator thinks one of the 40 rule means, his hand is called.

And since Democrats and Republicans are always pulling the rule book on one another, there's work for Mr. Watkins.

In short, he's supposed to help straighten them out on what the rules mean. At this point maybe you're thinking:

"Well, if there are only 40 rules, don't all the Senators know them by heart? Why do they need Watkins?"

In the first place, the 40 rules cover about 50 pages in a booklet called the Senate Manual.

It's safe to say no Senator knows the 40 rules by heart. Not even Mr. Watkins, who knows them inside out, can recite them word for word.

Further, there's a little thing, but a very important one, called precedent which concerns what previous Senates did about a certain rule.

Although all 40 rules have remained in force, down through the years, the various Senates have modified most of them by deciding a rule really meant this or really meant that.

So, when the present Senate gets into a dispute about a rule, if it knows the precedents on that rule it can follow them. Or it can shoot off in another direction, setting a new precedent.

Maybe here you say: "But can't the Senators keep a copy of the rules beside them, plus a copy of the precedents?"

The trouble is, those precedents never have been gathered together except in Mr. Watkins' head and in his own typewritten notes.

He has gone back to 1883 in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—the daily journal of Congress' doings—and read every page of every day the Senate has been in session since that time.

He had to do it that way, because every dispute about a rule was buried between tons of oratory, copies of bills, and the other stuff that gets printed daily in the journal.

Mr. Watkins took full notes on every dispute, and now has 10 fat volumes of them in his office. Even so, his records go only from 1883 to 1932. He hopes to bring the precedents up to date.

Then he expects the Senate will have this whole history of precedents printed by the Government Printer for the use of future Senates.

Mr. Watkins, born in Arkansas, got his first Senate job as a clerk on June 15, 1915. At that time the assistant Secretary of the Senate was doubling as Parliamentarian. For 8 years, Mr. Watkins sat beside him listening to him discourse on rules.

Then in 1923, when this man became sick, Mr. Watkins was made acting Parliamentarian. In 1935, the Senate made him official Parliamentarian, the first time that had happened. His assistant is Edward Hickey, who may succeed him some day.

The House Parliamentarian is Lewis Deschler. He's had the job since 1928. Being a much younger man than Mr. Watkins, he may wind up having been a Parliamentarian longer.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, it is my understanding of the parliamentary situation that we are to vote on the pending conference report at 4 o'clock, the time between now and then being equally divided between the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] and myself. Am I correct in that understanding?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In view of that, I yield 10 minutes of my time to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized for 10 minutes.

UNITED STATES FOREIGN POLICY IN KOREAN WAR SITUATION

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, this is a solemn hour in the history of the world. The free people of all nations are looking to the United States for leadership. The leaders of the slave nations also are looking to the United States. On our immediate actions will hinge the plans of the Kremlin for other conquests.

Mr. President, will we continue appeasement? Will we wait for the dust to settle? Will we discover 6 months, or 6 years from today what we should have done today?

I say that now is the time for decisive action. Now is the time to draw the line. Now is the time to tell all the world, unmistakably, that America will not surrender, equivocate, appease, or hesitate.

Yesterday, on Sunday, June 25, 1950, we learned of the dastardly, unprovoked attack on the Republic of Korea. From all the information at my command, I am amazed to learn that apparently the American Government was not apprised through our intelligence services of the proposed attack.

I supported unification of the armed services. I supported the creation of the Central Intelligence Agency, which was supposed to prevent another surprise such as the Pearl Harbor attack. Yet from all the information I can obtain neither the State Department nor the Department of Defense was informed by the Central Intelligency Agency of the impending attack. Both claim that neither had any warning of it. It was such a surprise that the head of our military mission was far away, in Tokyo. It came as a complete surprise, even though the North Korean Communist armies were at the borders of south Korea, and had been for some time.

This morning there appeared before the Senate Appropriations Committee Secretary Acheson and Secretary Johnson, of whom we inquired as to the reason for their failure to be informed. The answer we got was that we would have to talk to Rear Admiral Hillenkoetter, Director of Central Intelligence. We have requested the attendance of Admiral Hillenkoetter before our committee at 3 o'clock this afternoon, when we propose to go into the question in some detail.

The Communist satellite armies of North Korea have moved in on South Korea against a government and a territory nurtured by the United States.

A modern, fully equipped army—trained and supplied by Communist Russia at this very hour, overrunning the meager constabulary—the pitiful military force which we trained and equipped as a mere police force to maintoin law and order in South Korea.

As Americans we are shocked and horrified by this sudden and unprovoked breach of the peace. We are at a loss to understand how the Soviet Government, while brazenly branding the United States as an imperialistic warmonger and proclaiming various Communist peace offensives, can, in cold blood, order a satellite to march off to war. Americans cannot understand this kind of double dealing. Our State Department immediately calls on the United Nations to do something about it. A good many of our good but naive citizens are flabbergasted to think that "good old Joe Stalin" could do a thing like this when we are trying to cooperate with him to build the peace. I point out, Mr. President, that Mr. Hoffman has testified that since the end of World War II the United States has poured about $1,000,000,000 in various forms of economic and military aid into South Korea. I have in my hand the justifications for our economic aid to Korea, which show that in 1946, 1947, 1948, and 1949, $356,000,000 was poured into Korea. The point I am making is that economic aid by itself is not enough.

I point out also, that under a previous program authorized by the Congress, called the mutual defense assistance program, we provided funds for military aid to Korea. From the report of the Foreign Relations Committee, as of May 31, 1950, we find that but a very small part of that amount has been obligated or used in any way. Why?

We know that as late as 51 days ago the President of Korea, appealing for combat planes from the United States, held a press conference in Seoul in which he stated that the Communist regime had 195 planes, most of them Russian made. He included 70 new-type planes and 55 of the Yak type. His own air force, he reported, had 20 light observation planes and training planes. In other words, the assistance we have given is woefully small; woefully weak and, I am afraid, not in time. Is this another case of too little too late?

In my judgment, the time is here for us to draw a line.

What is running through the minds of the peoples of the free world? They are wondering when their turn will come. They are looking to the United States. They know we gave away Manchuria and found excuses not to intervene in China. They know we allowed Poland to fall. They know what has happened in Czechoslovakia, Rumania, and Bulgaria. They know the Russian military might. The free peoples know that Stalin's armies are poised on many frontiers. They weigh Stalin's success against our success. Forty-one times the Soviet veto has prevailed in the United Nations in effect to block peace. To the one-sixth of the world which Stalin ruled in 1945 he has added another one-sixth, until now he has one-third of the world in slavery.

It is not enough to fight communism with ideas and economic assistance as we have done in Korea. It is not enough to bring moral pressure to bear. The Soviets have no idea which can stand before our ideal of human freedom. The Cominform has no economic weapon to counter free enterprise. Communism offers no moral resistance to the concepts of Christianity. But these weapons are not enough. Communism is everywhere equipped with tanks, artillery, and war planes.

I realize that it is considered politically unwise to advocate a strong policy, because some people say that a strong policy might lead us to war. But the Cominform has thrown down the gauntlet. If we pick it up, there may be a risk of war. I realize it is politically smart to back away from international incidents, from situations which may lead to the loss of American lives. But let us be completely honest. Is there any way to avoid war with Soviet Russia? Is there any way to prevent armed conflict? Yes; I believe there are two ways:

First. We can continue our present course. It is the way of appeasement. It is surrender on the installment plan. We postpone war, and we finally become the largest slave state.

Second. We can call communism's bluff. I think it would work. I believe the Cominform is too crafty to risk a full scale armed conflict with the free world. But it is a calculated risk. Let us be frank. It might lead to war.

But it is the only course open to America is to preserve its freedom.

We should take a stand today firmly and forthrightly.

It is my wish today to invite attention to the desirability of taking a calculated risk, the desirability of establishing a line in the world. Beyond this line we should announce we shall not permit Russia nor the Communist satellites to penetrate.

Mr. President, we have the Korea war on our hands today, and some of our leaders appear not to be interested. Some shrug their shoulders. I know the attitude of some persons on the subject. It was the same before World War II. Hitler was a serious menace to world peace, but Hitler was never the menace in his day that Russia is today——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the junior Senator from New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, there are times for greatness. This is such a time.

I do not refer to individuals. I refer to all of us, collectively. I refer to all our people. I refer to our country. I refer to all countries.

The news of the past 48 hours has shocked us. We cannot doubt that the occurrence in Korea, the armed attack by prepared forces, is part of a pattern. It is a move, whose motive we can only guess. We cannot doubt that it was planned, or at least acquiesced in by the Kremlin.

I shall not discuss the strategic dangers to which we would be exposed if Korea fell to the Communists. This is not a time for amateur strategists. Our trust, today, must rest in those officials charged with the calculation of strategic factors.

Nor shall I look backward and speculate on where the fault lies, that today's happenings should have occurred. It is easy to simplify history and to rewrite it according to one's political tastes or prejudices. That is not called for today.

What we in the Senate are called upon to do today is to show the world our attitude and our reaction to the terrible events rushing upon us. Are we to be stricken by panic and confused by recrimination? Are we to think of what advantage this political party or that political party may take of the current situation?

No; this is not the course for the United States Senate. The role of the Senate today is to reflect for the people of the world what the American people are thinking of today. Our function is to be deliberative and to take counsel on what our general purposes are, and what principles this Nation shall be guided by in the hard days ahead.

I must warn my colleagues that although today's battles are being fought in far-off Korea, these battles are but one engagement in the much vaster struggle which is taking place today in Europe, in Asia and in Africa, and in this hemisphere, too. In shifting our attention suddenly to the Korean front, we cannot and dare not forget the other fronts. We dare not urge measures, however simple and direct they may seem, which may quicken the outcome in Korea, but weaken us on every other front upon which we are engaged.

We may be sure that what we do in Korea is being watched in India, in Indochina, in Malaya, in Siam, in Indonesia, in the Philippines, and behind the iron curtain in China, itself. Anxious millions, hundreds of millions, are watching what we do and are listening to what we here say.

They fear that they may be next on the Kremlin's schedule. Their reaction to this aggression in Korea may well be controlled by what we do or say in these historic hours.

Will they support us, or will they be neutral? That question may be answered by what we here in the Senate may say. If they can have confidence in our responsibility, in our motives, and in our purpose, they will certainly turn to us. Therefore let us guard our words.

The executive branch of Government must look to the Senate for support and strength, for sure guidance and helpful counsel. And the junior Senator from New York, as one spokesman of 15,000,000 Americans, must give voice to what he thinks we must say to our people, to our Government, and to all peoples of the earth.

Ten years ago Korea was a name unknown to many of us. It was a remote geographic area in the distant Orient. Today we feel it to be within gunshot. Today the city of Seoul, the capital of the south Korean Republic, looking out upon the Yellow Sea, and facing the great land mass of China, is the center of the world's fears and anxieties.

The Korean Peninsula, itself, lying geographically at the center of the Japan-Russia-China triangle, has suddenly become the battleground of the two conflicting worlds into which mankind has been unhappily resolved. The Koreans call their land not Korea but "Chosen," which means morning calm. But no calm prevails there today. No calm has prevailed there for many years.

Communist troops, led by tanks, are said to be striking for Seoul, the capital. This city, almost 2,000 years old, has a high wall almost completely surrounding it. But this wall will not stop the tanks of the Communist forces. The wall was built for wars of an age long gone by. It may be that tanks are outdated, too, for the war that might be fought today.

I hope and pray that this war will not come. I hope that this conflagration in Korea may be isolated and contained. I do not share the feeling of those who say, "Let us be done and have it over with. It is going to come some time. It might as well be now."

No, Mr. President, I hope with all my heart that the aggressors in Korea may be thrown back. I am willing to follow the leadership of the President, the Secretary of State, and their military advisors in taking all measures that are necessary to aid the authorities and people of Korea in repelling and pushing back the Communist thrust.

But my faith in the strength of our arms and my satisfaction at the rapidity with which we have already moved in this situation are subordinated to my faith in the will of the world's peoples to peace. We must not betray that faith. We must not weaken or compromise the efforts being made through the United Nations to dispose of this threat to the world's peace by collective measures. These measures are designed to show the leaders of the Soviet Union that the United States is moved to act not by its confidence in its armed might—although fortunately we have that might—but by confidence in the fact that all men are of one mind and will in demanding that the peace be preserved in justice and in honor, and in consideration of the rights of the weak as well as the responsibilities of the strong.

Exactly 5 years ago on this very day, the Charter of the United Nations was signed at San Francisco. That was a day of high hopes for the world: That was a day when men dreamed that war might forever be banished from among civilized men. Although those hopes have not been realized, we must cherish the organization which was born from so much suffering and sacrifice. We must give it every opportunity to mobilize the world's strength, both moral and physical, against this act of aggression in Korea.

We have every reason to maintain our faith in the United Nations. In Palestine, in Indonesia, and in Iran the United Nations has, in the recent past, performed its high functions with brilliant success. On those occasions, the peace was preserved. Thus far in the Korean situation, the United Nations organization has moved with a speed and determination which have left nothing to be desired. Let us continue to act under the United Nations Charter, and within the framework of that Organization.

Let us adhere to the means offered us by the United Nations. Let us exhaust every resource to keep the world from the calamity of war.

We must show strength, firmness, and courage. But let us, in this hour of danger, show that greatness to which destiny has called us. Let us avoid partisanship as evil, itself. In this hour, and on this question, let all Americans stand firm for justice but strive with all our hearts and all our souls to save mankind from the catastrophe of another world war.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask that the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] be recognized for 15 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President and Members of the Senate, the situation in Korea is of vital importance to the survival of the United Nations, the peace of the world, and the ultimate security of the United States.

On Sunday, June 25, at the request of the Government of the United States the United Nations Security Council met to discuss the active aggression of the North Korean Communist regime against the Republic of Korea. The statement of the American representative, Ambassador Ernest A. Gross, gives some interesting background and I ask unanimous consent that this be included in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At 4 o'clock in the morning Sunday, June 25, Korean time, armed forces from North Korea commenced an unprovoked assault against the territory of the Republic of Korea. This assault was launched by ground forces along the thirty-eighth parallel in the Ongjin, Kaesong, and Chunchon sectors, and by amphibious landings on the east coast in the vicinity of Jnagmung. In addition, North Korean aircraft have attacked and strafed the Kimpo airport in the outskirts of the capital city of Seoul.

Under the circumstances I have described, this wholly illegal and unprovoked attack by the North Korean forces, in the view of my Government, constitutes a breach of the peace and an act of aggression.

This is clearly a threat to international peac and security. As such, it is of grave concern to my Government. It is a threat which must inevitably be of grave concern to the governments of all peace and freedom-loving nations.

A full-scale attack is now going forward in Korea. It is an invasion upon a state which the United Nations itself, by action of its General Assembly, has brought into being. It is armed aggression against a government elected under United Nations supervision.

Such an attack strikes at the fundamental purposes of the United Nations Charter. Such an attack openly defies the interest and authority of the United Nations. Such an attack, therefore, concerns the vital interest which all the members of the United Nations have in the organization.

The history of the Korean problem in the United Nations is well known to you. At this critical hour I will not review it in detail. But let me recall only a few milestones in the development of the Korean situation.

A joint commission of the United States and the Soviet Union for 2 years sought unsuccessfully to agree on ways and means of bringing to Korea the independence which we assumed would automatically come when Japan was defeated. This 2-year deadlock prevented 38,000,000 people in Korea from getting the independence which it was agreed was their right.

My Government, thereupon, sought to hold a four-power conference at which China and the United Kingdom would join the United States and the Soviet Union to seek agreement on the independence of Korea. The Soviet Union rejected that proposal.

The United States then asked the General Assembly to consider the problem. The Soviet Union opposed that suggestion. The General Assembly by resolution of November 14, 1947, created the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea.

By that resolution the General Assembly recommended the holding of elections not later than March 31, 1948, to choose representatives with whom the Commission might consult regarding the prompt attainment of freedom and independence of the Korean people. These elected representatives would constitute a national assembly and establish a national government of Korea.

The General Assembly further recommended that, upon the establishment of a national government, that government should in consultation with the Commission constitute its own national security forces and dissolve all military or semimilitary formations not included therein.

The General Assembly recommended that the national government should take over the functions of government from the military command and from the civilian authorities of North and South Korea, and arrange with the occupying powers for the complete withdrawal from Korea of the armed forces as early as practicable and if possible within 90 days.

Elections were held in South Korea and the Commission did observe them. A government in South Korea was set up as a result of the elections observed by the Commission. The Commission was unable to enter North Korea because of the attitude of the Soviet Union.

The temporary commission in its report to the third session of the General Assembly stated that not all the objectives set forth for it had been fully accomplished and that in particular, unification of Korea had not yet been achieved.

Notwithstanding the frustrations and difficulties which the temporary commission had experienced in Korea, the General Assembly at its third session continued the commission's existence and requested it to go on with its efforts to bring North and South Korea together.

One aspect of the resolution adopted by the third session of the General Assembly should, I feel, be particularly emphasized.

The General Assembly declared that a lawful government had been established in Korea as a result of the elections observed by the Commission and declared further that this was the only lawful government in Korea. This is a most significant fact.

The General Assembly declared further that the Government of Korea was based on elections which were a valid expression of the free will of the electorate of that part of Korea and which were observed by the United Nations Commission.

In the light of this declaration, my Government on January 1, 1949, extended recognition to the Government of the Republic of Korea, and more than 30 states have since that time also accorded recognition to that government.

The United Nations Commission worked toward the United Nations objective of the withdrawal of occupation forces from Korea, the removal of the barriers between the regions of the north and south and the unification of that country under a representative government freely determined by its people.

In 1949, as in 1948, the Commission's efforts to obtain access to North Korea which included both direct intercourse with the northern authorities and endeavors to negotiate through the Government of the U. S. S. R. were fruitless. The Commission was unable to make progress either toward the unification of Korea or toward the reduction of barriers between the Republic of Korea and the northern authorities.

The Commission reported to the General Assembly that the border of the thirty-eighth parallel was becoming a sea of increasingly frequent exchanges of fire and armed raids, and that this constituted a serious barrier to friendly intercourse among the people of Korea. The Commission observed the withdrawal of United States forces, which was completed on June 19, 1949.

Although it signified its readiness to verify the fact of the withdrawal of Soviet occupation forces from North Korea, the Commission received no response to its message to the U. S. S. R. and therefore could take no action.

At the fourth session, the General Assembly again directed the Commission to seek to facilitate the removal of barriers to economics, social, and other friendly intercourse caused by the devision of Korea. The General Assembly also authorized the Commission on October 21, 1949, in its discretion, to appoint observers and utilize the services and good offices of persons, whether or not representatives of the Commission. The United Nations Commission on Korea is presently in Seoul and we have now received its latest report.

Mr. President, I have tabled a draft resolution which notes the Security Council's grave concern at the invasion of the Republic of Korea by the armed forces of North Korea. This draft resolution calls upon the authorities in the north to cease hostilities and to withdraw armed forces to the border along the thirty-eighth parallel.

The draft resolution requests that the United Nations Commission on Korea observe the withdrawal of the North Korean forces to the thirty-eighth parallel and keep the Security Council informed on the implementation and execution of the resolution.

The draft resolution also calls upon all members of the United Nations to render every assistance to the United Nations in the carrying out of this resolution and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Following discussion by its members the Security Council, by a vote of 9 to 0, with the Soviet Union absent and Yugoslavia abstaining, passed the following resolution which I ask to have included at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Security Council—

Recalling the finding of the General Assembly in its resolution of October 21, 1949, that the Government of the Republic of Korea is a lawfully established government "having effective control and jurisdiction over that part of Korea where the United Nations Temporary Commission on Korea was able to observe and consult and in which the great majority of the people of Korea reside; and that this Government is based on elections which were a valid expression of the free will of the electorate of that part of Korea and which were observed by the temporary commission; and that this is the only such government in Korea";

Mindful of the concern expressed by the General Assembly in its resolutions of December 12, 1948, and October 21, 1949, of the consequences which might follow unless member states refrained from acts derogatory to the results sought to be achieved by the United Nations in bringing about the complete independence and unity of Korea; and the concern expressed that the situation described by the United Nations Commission on Korea in its report menaces the safety and well-being of the Republic of Korea and of the people of Korea and might lead to open military conflict there;

Noting with grave concern the armed invasion of the Republic of Korea by armed forces from North Korea,

Determines that this action constitutes a breach of the peace;

1. Calls for the immediate cessation of hostilities; and calls upon the authorities in North Korea to withdraw forthwith their armed forces to the thirty-eighth parallel.

2. Requests the United Nations Commission on Korea (a) to communicate its fully considered recommendations on the situation with the least possible delay; (b) to observe the withdrawal of the North Korean forces to the thirty-eighth parallel; and (c) to keep the Security Council informed on the execution of this resolution.

3. Calls upon all members to render every assistance to the United Nations in the execution of this resolution and to refrain from giving assistance to the North Korean authorities.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yugoslavia has been poorly advised in this show of disinterest. There is no nation which by its geographical location has more to gain by the establishment of a system of international law and order and the discouragement of overt aggression than does Yugoslavia. Her failure to arise to the occasion may turn up to plague that nation at a not too distant date. I will have more to say on this subject at an early date.

The Republic of Korea is not likely to be saved by a United Nations resolution alone.

No competent observer of the world scene can believe that the satellite north Korean regime took this major step of a full-scale overt aggressive action without prior consultation and approval of the Soviet Government. It is not likely that they will be too impressed with resolutions alone.

Time is of the essence. We must constantly keep in mind that Holland was overrun by Nazi Germany in 5 days and Denmark in 2. The Security Council meets again Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock.

If there is any prolonged debate or if obstructionism is practiced by the Soviet Union and its satellites the free people of Korea may lose their liberty while diplomats are talking.

Mr. President, at this point in my remarks I wish to insert the latest Associated Press dispatch from Seoul dealing with the Korean situation. It reads in part as follows:

A Communist northern spearhead swept within 9 miles of Seoul tonight and fears were expressed it may reach the city before dawn.

Southern resistance at Uijongbu, only 12 miles away, collapsed before the Russian-backed forces hammering at them with tanks and artillery.

The American Embassy burned its important secret papers in a huge bonfire. The air raid sirens screeched. The city was buzzing after four northern planes strafed downtown streets.

I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the dispatch be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection the remainder of the dispatch was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

The flying column rushed toward here from the Uijongbu Valley. A southern counteroffensive there failed miserably during the day. Heavy artillery softened up the Uijongbu defenders and the tanks pushed them out of town after savage street fighting.

Two southern divisions totaling 20,000 men dug in outside of the town of Uijongbu. But the determined onslaught of heavy tanks pushed them aside and the northern invaders, who were halted temporarily yesterday, rolled on toward the capital.

President Syngman Rhee and his Cabinet were in emergency session at midnight. They were reportedly discussing the Ongjin Peninsula front, where southern forces were reeling or knocked out.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I was in Korea last November, and I went up to the 38th parallel. Historically, Mr. President, he who controls Uijongbu controls the capital city of Seoul. A wide open valley, excellent for armored divisions, leads directly to the nation's capital. I think the free world must be prepared to accept the possibility that Seoul will fall even as we are discussing the situation today.

The first requisite of a free people is to be willing to fight and die for their freedom. From having been in Korea last November I am convinced that the people of the Republic of Korea will do this. I do not believe they are going to be the push over that international communism believes they will be.

Gen. W. L. Roberts, until recently chief of the American military mission training the Korean troops, told me in Seoul that in his judgment the Korean troops that had gone through the complete training cycle would prove to be as courageous and as competent as were the Nisei Japanese who fought in the American Army during World War II. Having personally inspected their soldiers at the thirty-eighth parallel, I also have a high opinion of the soldiers of the Republic of Korea.

But no matter how courageous or well trained troops may be, it will be difficult for them to withstand an invasion by forces twice their number supported by tanks and planes supplied by the Soviet Union.

Mr. President, at this point in my remarks I wish to point out that on March 5, 1949, Kim Il Song, chief of the North Korean puppet government, with his attendants, left for Moscow for the purpose of drawing up a military aid program.

On March 18, 1949, the program was agreed upon. Following are some of the more important points agreed upon:

Russia was to make a loan of 1,800,000,000 won, based on an exchange rate of 7 won to 1 ruble.

Russia was to furnish equipment and arms for six new infantry divisions. This was to be in addition to the three existing divisions and the one separate brigade.

Russia was to furnish sufficient arms and equipment for seven constabulary units, one battalion for each province and a larger unit for the city of Pyong Yang.

In addition to that, while in Moscow, Kim Il Song conferred with Lim Ho, the commanding general of the Communist forces in Manchuria. During this conference, another agreement was concluded. Following are some of the points covered:

Both forces would, for the common cause, fight any imperialistic invasion against Manchuria or North Korea.

The Chinese Communist Party would furnish both men and equipment to North Korea during the period July 1, 1949, to August 31, 1949.

North Korea would get a high priority on the Japanese technicians and Japanese war materials still remaining in Manchuria.

A barter trade system would be entered into by both parties in accordance with their economical necessities.

The most important part of the agreement between the Korean Communist regime in North Korea and the Manchurian Chinese Communists was that mutual assistance in the way of troops, arms, ammunition, and equipment would be forthcoming.

It was also determined at that meeting that if North Korea should decide to attack South Korea a mere request for assistance would bring forth aid from the Chinese Communists in North Korea.

The government of the Republic of Korea has repeatedly asked for some armored equipment and for fighter planes to offset the ranger of bombing attacks upon their centers of population and upon their troops in the field. For some reason which I cannot understand this request for fighter planes has not been complied with. Press reports today indicate that a few planes will now be turned over to Korean pilots in Japan. It may be another case of too little and too late.

Press reports from Taipeh also indicate that Clair Chennault has offered to organize a 1950 version of the Flying Tigers. It seems to me that every effort should be made to expedite this offer of Clair Chennault.

We have with wide publicity hurried shipments of such planes to Europe where the immediate danger was not as pressing. It but underscores the fact that the whole Far East has been given a much lower priority than many of us have felt is wise. Far East funds in the pending arms implementation bill are less than 10 percent of those allotted to Europe and the Middle East.

The immediate need is to get the equipment needed to the Republic of Korea at once. It can be done if there is a will to do it by the executive branch of this Government. They need no legislation or appropriations at this time for this purpose. In addition to the funds provided in the arms implementation bill of last year, and in the pending legislation, Korea is also eligible to receive excess equipment, not only under the $450,000,000 excess aid section of last year's act but also under the measure now the unfinished business before the Senate.

Korea today stands in the same position as did Manchuria, Ethiopia, Austria, and Czechoslovakia at an earlier date. In each of those instances a firm stand by the law-abiding nations of the world might have saved the peace. Procrastination, timidity, or lack of unity among the powers lost the opportunity, and with the lost opportunity went the hope for peace.

If Korea is not supported and maintained there is no place on the Continent of Asia that can be ultimately supported or maintained. From this statement I exclude neither India nor Pakistan. The Soviet Union through its satellite the Communist regime of North Korea has deliberately chosen a test case by attempting to liquidate the free people of the Republic of Korea. Here there exists a nation with whom we have had friendly relations from 1883 until the occupation of that country by the Japanese in 1910. During the 35 years of Japanese occupation the people of Korea and their leaders who planned for eventual independence had the friendly interest of the Government and people of the United States. This Nation joined with others at the Cairo conference, prior to the close of World War II, in promising independence to Korea. The United Nations sponsored the establishment of the Republic of Korea and supervised its first election. The government of the republic has been recognized by 30 nations, including all of the great powers except the Soviet Union.

Here is a nation with no colonial ties and with strong national aspirations. Here is a nation reestablished under the auspices of the free nations of the world. Here are a free people whom we have endeavored to help because we recognized that we had a responsibility when we permitted the line of demarcation at the thirty-eighth parallel to be drawn. Such an artificial line handicapped her economic recovery, and made much more difficult her political problems.

If international communism can destroy this free people, what hope is there that the chaotic condition in Viet Nam can be stabilized, or that world opinion can be mobilized to support the colonial areas of Hong Kong or Malaya, the chaotic internal conditions of a disunited Burma, or the Kingdom of Siam, which would be almost completely surrounded, or even India and Pakistan, with international communism already pressing in along a wide and difficult front.

The destruction of the Republic of Korea would be catastrophic. It is my belief that Korea and the other nations I have just mentioned must be looked upon as a unit. If this nation is allowed to succumb to an overt invasion of this kind, there is little chance of stopping communism anywhere on the continent of Asia.

Time is rapidly running out. Difficult decisions cannot be permanently pushed aside. In these closing days of June 1950, the Congress, the American people, and the free world, must be prepared to make a prompt decision.

The peace of the world will not be saved by abject surrender to the pressures of international communism any more than it was at Munich 12 years ago. Appeasement then, as now, is but surrender on the installment plan.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask that the distinguished senior Senator from Texas be allowed 10 minutes of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). The Senator from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have listened to the addresses of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND]. The subject they have discussed is, of course, of transcendent importance to the United States, and, for that matter, to the peace of the world. It involves questions which we cannot solve at the moment. We cannot settle here and now exactly what we should do, but I wish to say that the United Nations Security Council has acted with promptness, and I hope with decision. We should wait until all the facts have been disclosed, and we should take counsel with the United Nations without unduly seeming to arrogate unto ourselves authority to settle the problem here at home.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The able chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee does not believe, does he, that the North Korean troops are going to be stopped merely by a resolution of the United Nations?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. I have not said that. That question certainly implies that the Senator from Texas at least thinks that it might be done by a resolution. But we have set up the United Nations, and when it decides upon the course that ought to be pursued, we will then be in a better position to judge our responsibility, and what we should do, than we are today. If it takes more than resolutions, the United Nations can take action beyond resolutions.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I should prefer to wait a minute. I should like to answer one question before I get shot in the ribs with another question. [Laughter]. I know the astuteness of the Senator from California. I know how many questions he has concealed about his person, and how prolific he is in expressing his own views upon every question that attracts any attention whatever.

Mr. President, some will say that the advice from Northern Korea cannot be stopped by resolution of the United Nations. That is very true. Others will say the United Nations has no armed forces which it could call into action. That is true. But the United Nations in its over-all power and in its over-all authority would have authority and would have power to call upon any nation or any group of nations that are members of the United Nations to supply troops if the United Nations determines that the use of troops is justified and is necessary.

I now yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Has the Senator explored the fact that when the United Nations Security Council meets tomorrow afternoon, if any action is proposed forthwith, the Soviet Government might return just long enough to exercise its veto against any action, and then does the Senator from Texas believe that we should sit back and twiddle our thumbs and do nothing?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that I do not undertake to anticipate all the possibilities. Of course, the veto is involved somewhat, but some of the nations other than Russia might do a little vetoing themselves. If the United Nations cannot act, they might together pursue a course over and above the powers of the United Nations. The freedom-loving people of the world might agree among themselves that we shall not permit this palpable breach of the peace; that this overt attack, without provocation and without justification, upon a free people and a free republic will not be tolerated by other free governments in the world. That is a possibility. I ask the Senator from California if he does not agree that that is a possibility. Does the Senator answer the question or not?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes; that is a possibility.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not appreciate the Senator from California sitting in his seat in violation of the rules of the Senate and answering an inquiry addressed to him by another Senator on the floor. I suppose that, other than the Senator from California, we are merely a lot of school boys or office boys.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not care to yield to the Senator again in view of his conduct.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I merely want to say I apologize. There was certainly no attempt on my part to be discourteous to the Senator. He was, in the course of his discussion, asking a question, and I tried to nod and to indicate to him that I felt there was a possibility.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes. That is all right.

Mr. KNOWLAND. And I will say that I do not think the able Senator from Texas contributes to the bipartisan cooperation that is necessary by his continual attempts to throw harpoons into Members on this side of the aisle. I think he makes no contribution to bipartisan cooperation at this desperate hour in our Nation's history.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from California has certainly never made any contribution that I know of, of any great consequence, to the bipartisan situation. I will say to the Senator from California that the Senator from Texas has been in conference already with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], who is the ranking minority party member on the Foreign Relations Committee, and assured him—and I mean it—that I shall not conceal from him any information I may acquire with regard to this situation in the Far East, and I shall not conceal it from any other Senator. I did take offense at the conduct of the Senator in sitting in his seat and nodding his head and not making a respectful reply to an inquiry which I propounded to him, and he understood, of course, that I was yielding to him for the purpose of making a reply.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one short observation, and then I promise not to disrupt the Senator again.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In answer to the statement of the Senator just made that the junior Senator from California has never contributed to bipartisan cooperation in the Senate——

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not say that.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say that I supported the United Nations, I supported the North Atlantic Pact, I supported the arms implementation bill, I supported the Marshall plan and the ECA, and I defy the Senator from Texas to point out a time during the 5 years I have been a Member of the Senate of the United States, since I came back from overseas, when I have not recognized the fact that we live in the age of the airplane and the atom, and that we can no more return to isolation than an adult can return to childhood.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am very happy to hear the Senator make that statement. I probably—and I apologize to the Senator—I probably made a somewhat extravagant statement. I did not say quite what the Senator says I said. I do know, however, that the Senator has on many occasions attacked our policy toward the Chinese situation, et cetera. I can refer to the RECORD without referring to my memory. I apologize. I want foreign relations to be bipartisan.

If I may be permitted a little personal reference in connection with the bipartisan foreign policy, the Senator from Texas—I hope with not undue pride—points out that when Secretary of State Hull was first negotiating about the formation of the United Nations, Dumbarton Oaks, and other conferences, he and I discussed the question, and he suggested that there be designated a committee from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and a group of distinguished citizens to attend a conference with the Secretary once a week to work out a plan for the United Nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Louisiana if he will yield me 5 minutes more.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield eight more minutes to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. In a moment. I should like to finish my statement, if the Senator will bear with me.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; I am glad to.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggested to the Secretary of State that that would be a fine arrangement. What happened? As chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee I appointed a subcommittee. Did I appoint all Democrats? Did I appoint a majority of Democrats, which is the custom of all committees when the Democrats are in power and a similar custom prevails when the Republicans are in power? I appointed four Democrats and four Republicans. There was no partisanship in it. We attended the conferences with Secretary Hull and with other distinguished men who were considering the formation of the United Nations. There was never a partisan idea suggested. We worked as Americans. That is where the bipartisan foreign policy originated. That is where it was first put into operation. There are still Members of the Senate who were on that committee, and they will bear out the statements I have just made.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. The question is——

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well, ask a question. I do not want a speech. I will be glad to have a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. I do not intend to make a speech. I will ask a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right.

Mr. FERGUSON. The distinguished Senator from Texas has said that he has conferred with the Senator from Wisconsin and would be glad to give whatever information he had to the Senate. The question is, Could the Senator advise the Senate as to whether or not our Government has any commitments at the present time with the Government of South Korea, in case of an invasion?

Mr. CONNALLY. Has the Senator finished?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; that is the question.

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot tell the Senator in detail as to what our commitments are. The Senator knows the history of our association with Korea. We were in occupation in Korea; we kept an army there. We had a military mission there, until we withdrew our forces some several months ago.

We still have a military mission there. The Senator knows that we are friendly with Korea; we have aided her; in the present arms implementation bill, which is before the Senate, we are appropriating money for Korea; that bill carries funds for the aid of Korea. I do not know that there is any black and white detail as to how many troops will be furnished at any one time or how much money we will give them at any one time; but essentially the United States is pledged in its good will toward Korea.

We helped form Korea. In the conferences which occurred following the war, the United States insisted upon the recognition of Korean independence and freedom, and that resulted in the agreement upon the thirty-eighth parallel, whereby Russia would be in occupation in northern Korea and the United States in southern Korea.

Mr. President, why all this splendid attitude of doubt and of suspicion that something is wrong and something is dark and behind cover? So far as I know, there is nothing. The United States stands today just where it has always stood; but the United States does not want to act precipitously.

The President of the United States is considering this question. He flew back to Washington, as Senators know, from Missouri, to meet the problems which the Korean situation has presented. He has had the Chiefs of Staff, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of Defense in constant communication. They spent almost all last night, the entire night, considering all the angles of this question, seeking to solve it—seeking to solve it, if possible, in peace, but seeking to solve it firmly and with insistence upon the rights of the United States and upon the rights of a free republic whose sovereignty and sanctity have been challenged and whose soil has been invaded by troops from North Korea. That shall continue to be our policy.

Mr. President, some Senators speak as if they wanted to declare war tomorrow. The Senator from New Hampshire said we could not depend on other courses, and that there was only one course left to us. He did not say "declare war," but the clear implication of his remarks was that we could not go any further, that we had to make a stand and, if necessary, we had to make an armed stand.

Mr. President, those questions are being considered. The Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense this morning were before the Appropriations Committee. I was there as an observer. They were not permitted, because of instructions by higher authority, to discuss such questions before that committee at this particular time, because, after all, the responsibility does not rest upon the Chiefs of Staff, the responsibility does not rest on the Secretary of Defense, but the responsibility rests upon the President of the United States; and the President of the United States does not want to take a course which might involve the people of the United States in war until all aspects of the matter have been considered.

The responsibilities of the United States shall be considered. The safety of free peoples shall be considered, and the national security and the national interest of the United States must be considered.

I feel sure that Senators need not become unduly alarmed. The President of the United States is not going to neglect the interests of the United States or its people. He is not going to tremble like a sycophant before the Russian power. He is not going to surrender our rights or the rights of free peoples.

This is a plain and an aggravated case. The United Nations was created to prevent just such occurrences as this one, to prevent armed aggression by one nation upon the territory or the sanctity of another nation. Of course, we have seen in the press statements to the effect that North Korea claims that South Korea provoked this incident. However, that claim will not stand the light of examination, it will not stand any investigation or examination, because it is not true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, because of the importance of this matter, I shall be glad to yield an additional 5 minutes to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. One additional minute will be sufficient, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes additional.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, this is a matter of tremendous importance. We want to solve the problem presented; but we want to solve it after we know all the facts; we want to solve it in the light of our obligations and duties; we want to solve it in the light of our own safety and national integrity and national security.

If Senators will be patient a little while, we will come to just decisions, we will come to decisions in which Senators on the Republican side of the Senate can have just as much voice and just as much influence as any Senator on this side of the aisle.

I beg the Senator from California to recall what I am saying now, as I have undertaken to be fair to the Senator in the past. I have already apologized for using language which probably was a little strong in one respect. However, the Senator from California himself uses rather strong language when he speaks—for instance, when the speaks about the wreckage of Chiang Kai-shek and about how we just threw him in the wastebasket—after giving him $2,000,000,000 and after giving him arms and ammunition which wound up in the hands of the Communists and enabled them to conquer the rest of China. The Senator from California is rather rough on some of the rest of us at times. However, I do not want to have any friction with the Senator from California, because he has an abrasive way of wearing down, by constant repetition; he simply keeps on wearing down those he opposes or the views he opposes, until finally, after a while, he makes an impression.

No, Mr. President; I want Senators to know that those of us who are directly responsible, through the committees of this body, are giving this matter attention. Already this morning I have had considerable of a conference with the Secretary of State. He advised me that he would keep the Committee on Foreign Relations advised as to every aspect of this question and as to every development regarding it.

I have assured the Senator from Wisconsin—although he does not need any assurance from me, when I tell him something—but I have given every assurance to him that when I receive information about this matter, he shall know it, and know it in full; and all other members of the committee shall know; they shall counsel with us.

That, Mr. President, is what I care to say at the moment. Later on I may be provoked to add some other remarks; but for the moment that is all I care to say.

I thank the Senator from Washington and I thank the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask that the Senator from Wisconsin be recognized for not more than 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, now that everything has been smoothed out in such a lovely fashion between the two distinguished Senators and love once more rules on the floor of the Senate, I feel that perhaps, in view of the fact that my name was brought into the discussion and since I am, as the result of the illness of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I should say a few words.

In my opinion, the real concern of the people of America is to get an answer to the question, "Where do we go from here?" Is it a crisis of major or minor importance? Does it mean war? Personally, when the attack on South Korea became known yesterday, and I was questioned by newspapermen, I felt that I had to say, "Let us wait until we get all the facts before we go off the deep end; let us know what the situation is." I may say that I personally had the assurance to which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has referred. I have also been in contact with the Secretary of State, and I feel that the thing for all of us to do is to remain calm, so that when the facts are submitted to us, we of the Senate at least will be able to give proper advice to the Executive Officer who is the constitutional spearhead in the situation which confronts the Nation.

We may ask ourselves the question, Will the invasion of South Korea provide another proving ground, as Spain did when two forces tested and proved their weapons? That is one question. Is Russia bluffing? is another question. Should we call her bluff? I think we have, in part. We have spoken to MacArthur, who is sending munitions and provisions into South Korea. We have instigated action within the United Nations. We have at least gotten things started. We are now at least indicating a positiveness of character which I think is admirable. I do not think that the practice of examining into the past and of constantly dwelling on mistakes is going to be of assistance at this particular moment, in this particular crisis, unless we can profit by our mistakes and can determine how best to meet the present situation.

One thing we want to make sure, and that is we do not focus all our attention on Korea, important as that may be. The Russian technique has always been to divert attention.

It is a serious situation, this Korean crisis, and it requires earnest and sincere consideration to the end that we act with judgment and with our eyes open to consequences. It was a mistake to divide Korea. Let us profit by that mistake and by others we have made. But dwelling on the past, with the present so full of challenges, does not get the job done that is before us.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator has indicated that we should not think of what happened in the past. But the division of Korea presented a situation, did it not, as a result of which we should have anticipated exactly what happened on Saturday evening? Is not that a fact? And, having anticipated it, should we not have been in position to act?

Mr. WILEY. I stated that the only reason for dwelling on the past is that if mistakes have been made in the past, it might enable us to profit from them. But "let the dead bury their dead." In that sense, let us go on to meet this challenge as men, with adequacy, with fervor, and, if necessary, with strength.

But I question the advisability of habitually looking at the mistakes which have occurred in the past. I do not think that habitual retrospective inquiry is calculated to make one competent to meet the problem of today, except as it leads to an avoidance of the previous mistakes.

I know our people are concerned, and they have a right to be concerned, as well as we of the Senate do. We ask ourselves, is this another spark to ignite a powder keg? Are we adequately prepared? In February, 1941, I asked that question on the floor of the Senate. I at that time asked that the President and the Secretary of State supply us with information as to how well prepared we were in Hawaii and in the Philippines. No information was received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. WILEY. I thank the Senator from Louisiana for yielding to me.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, since no other Senator apparently wishes to speak on this very important matter, I shall presently request that we return to the pending business; but before returning to the discussion of the conference report I should like to add a few remarks. The Senator from Wisconsin has just asked the question, Are we prepared? I may say there have been many of us in the Senate and in the other branch of the Congress of the United States who have had great concern during the past 2 or 3 years regarding the defenses of the country nearest to what might become the tinderbox of Asia. I refer to Alaska.

I am able to report a great deal of progress made by the Department of Defense, through appropriations of the Congress, in strengthening the defenses of Alaska. In Alaska we have a fine bastion of defense, both in the air and on the land; perhaps not so much as might be desired, but there has been great improvement, so that the American territory which is nearest to what may become—and which I hope will not become—a tinderbox in Asia has been rapidly developed and stands ready to serve not only as a listening post but as our farthest outpost of defense.

INCREASE IN BORROWING POWER OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6567) to increase the borrowing power of Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement on the measure now before the Senate, namely, the conference report on the bill (H. R. 6567). I have prepared a statement, which I want to read, but before doing so I wish to preface it with a few observations The so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment is quite technical, and I want to be sure the RECORD is correct. The bill before the Senate proposes to extend the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation. As passed by the House the bill did not contain the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment. The Senate added to the simple House bill, extending the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation, this amendment. It is an amendment which was also added last year by the Senate to the agricultural bill. It is a very simple amendment. As I shall show later in the discussion, it is an amendment with a very technical meaning, yet its wording is very simple. In my opinion it would clarify the situation regarding the price support of agricultural products in relation to so-called reciprocal trade agreements concluded by the State Department.

Last year, when the amendment was adopted by the Senate by a very substantial vote and sent to the House for conference, it was there thrown out by the House conferees. The suggestion was made by those representing the White House that, should the Magnuson amendment be kept in the bill, the agricultural bill would be vetoed. That presented a very serious problem, because we had a bill that went into all phases of agriculture, including the matter of price supports themselves. The possibility of the whole thing being lost if the so-called Magnuson amendment were written into the bill surely should have been the subject of careful consideration by the conferees. I can see how the Senate might have yielded to the House conferees on that occasion because of the threat of a Presidential veto. I do not believe that we should legislate in that manner. But the truth of the matter is that we were nearing the end of the session. We needed an agricultural bill, and it appeared as though this amendment might have the effect of killing the bill.

But we are faced with a much different situation today. The pending bill provides a mere expansion of the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The Commodity Credit Corporation has the money anyway. It will have no effect upon the power of the Commodity Credit Corporation, should this bill be returned to conference through an insistence by the Senate upon this amendment. The Corporation will proceed with its business in the interests of American agriculture and in the interests of the stability of the American agricultural economy, regardless of how long it may take a conference to agree upon this amendment. So we are faced with a much different legislative situation at the present time.

Some intimation was given last Friday by the distinguished senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] that we may be faced with another Presidential veto, should the Magnuson-Morse amendment remain in the Commodity Credit Corporation bill. I do not know about that, but it seems to me that those in the State Department and in the White House, since the adoption of the amendment last fall, probably should have profited by certain of the things which have happened in relation to price support of agricultural products in relation to imports.

It is my definite opinion, Mr. President, that had this amendment been in the agricultural bill a year ago we would not have experienced the so-called potato scandal. Many other problems affecting agricultural production would have been solved had this amendment been in effect.

Let me also invite attention to the fact that last year we were approximately in the middle of our normal 3-year trade agreements. Ninety percent of them expire at the end of this year, and we are now in the process, through reciprocity committees, the Tariff Commission, and the State Department, of attempting to negotiate new trade treaties with all nations which signed the Geneva Conference report. So it is very important that we insist upon this amendment as it affects reciprocal trade agreements and new trade treaties. It is much more important at this time. Our experience in the past should certainly show the necessity of such an amendment; and the fact that we are about to negotiate new trade treaties makes the situation more important to meet than it was previously. Were we not in that position, I probably should not insist upon the amendment and that the conference report be sent back.

Mr. President, before presenting further arguments for rejecting the report I want to clarify two important points which are involved. The so-called commodity credit bill, House bill 6567, as passed by the House, was a very simple and short bill. It merely increased the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation by $2,000,000,000. Sections 1 and 2 of the Senate bill conform exactly to the House version, both in language and in purpose.

The question of increasing, by $2,000,000,000, the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation, therefore, was not in controversy when the bill went to conference. Both House and Senate were in complete agreement that the CCC's borrowing authority should be increased.

In consequence, any Senator who votes with me to reject this conference report cannot be accused, by that action, of being against the farmers of this country. Irrespective of whether we send this bill back to conference, a $2,000,000,000 increase in the CCC's borrowing authority is assured.

The only question before the conferees had to do with section 3 of the Senate version of House bill 6567. Section 3 is the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment. In reality, section 3 is in the nature of a substitute for section 22 of the Agriculture Adjustment Act as it now stands. If we reject the conference report today, section 3, the Magnuson-Morse amendment, again will be the only issue before the conferees.

I now undertake to demonstrate that failure on the part of the Senate to reject this report will jeopardize two major programs vital to the welfare of our Nation. Failure to reject this report will jeopardize our price support and related farm programs. It will also jeopardize the reciprocal-trade program.

To understand what the conferees have done we need to review briefly the intent and purpose of section 22 of the Triple A Act and the intent and purpose of the Magnuson-Morse substitute for this section.

Section 22 of the AAA Act was designed to provide a means of protecting domestic agricultural producers—under certain circumstances—from ruinous imports. As a corollary, it was designed to insure that the taxpayers and the Treasury of this country would not be required to support the price of foreign production of commodities, enjoying price support in this country. It was designed to insure that our farmers who agree to measures designed to protect their domestic market would not be penalized twice over—I say "penalized twice over" because the more successful our farmers and this Government are in stabilizing domestic prices at a decent level the greater will be the attraction for imports—the greater will be the incentive for the foreign farmer to attempt to break into this market.

Some reasonable machinery for preventing the destruction of domestic farm programs must be assured, otherwise the taxpayers of the country will resist and ultimately eliminate both the farm program and the reciprocal-trade program.

The Magnuson-Morse amendment seeks to make section 22 an effective tool. It consists of two somewhat separate but closely related parts. Subsections A, B, C, D, and E contain the machinery for dealing with imports which threaten to destroy the effectiveness of a marketing agreement, price support, school lunch, export subsidy, domestic diversion, acreage allotment, or similar farm program.

Under section 22 as it existed prior to the Eightieth Congress the President was authorized, if circumstances warrant it, to impose an import fee up to 50 percent ad valorem, or to proclaim a quota limiting the amount of the imports to not less than 50 percent of the imports during a representative period in the past.

To assist in discharging this responsibility the President issued Executive Order No. 72, dated November 23, 1935. Section 22 has been the law of the land since that time. In this order the President delegated to the Secretary of Agriculture authority to make a preliminary investigation of alleged interference by imports with a domestic farm program authorized under the Triple A Act.

The theory was that the Secretary of Agriculture would make a preliminary investigation. If this investigation convinced the Secretary that imports were creating a serious problem, particularly with reference to farm surpluses, he would recommend to the President that the machinery of section 22 be set in motion.

The President would set the machinery in motion by instructing the Tariff Commission to make a thorough investigation of the alleged destructive impact of imports. The Tariff Commission would then make its investigation and would report back to the President.

The President would then have to decide what, if anything, should be done. He might proclaim an import fee on the troublesome commodity, or he might impose a quota, or he might take no action whatever. As the chief executive of this country he would make the final decision. His authority was permissive, not mandatory.

What did the Magnuson-Morse amendment propose to do about the mechanics of section 22? I preface this by saying that experience has shown that in the case of a perishable crop, the season is over before the relief provided under section 22 can be made available. By the time the Secretary makes an investigation, reports to the President, the President orders the Tariff Commission to investigate, the Tariff Commission reports back to the President, and the President makes up his mind, the season is over; the damage is done.

I might add that the same is true with reference to nonperishable crops. The procedure requires months, and sometimes decisions are delayed as long as 17 or 18 months or 2 years. So section 22, which has been the law of the land and designed to protect our agricultural economic stability, has had practically no effect with reference to ruinous imports.

Our amendment seeks to streamline this procedure. It transfers to the Secretary of Agriculture full and final responsibilities for investigating the alleged injurious effect of agricultural imports upon the farm program. My amendment streamlines section 22 so that only one investigation is necessary. Under it, the Secretary of Agriculture would hold a public hearing, determine the facts, and transmit his findings to the President. The President would either proclaim an import fee of not more than 50 percent ad valorem, proclaim a quota, or would do nothing, depending upon the circumstances in the particular case. Under our amendment, the Secretary of Agriculture is made the investigator, the collector of facts. He does not make the final decision. As is the case under the present law, the President himself has the final word.

Let us see how this would work. Last year, in the case of imports of potatoes, which did not directly cause the trouble we had with potatoes, but seriously aggravated the trouble, the procedure could have taken place within 2 or 3 days. I am sure if the President had had this authority a great deal would have been done immediately to take care of the troublesome potato problem. Under section 22 it would take months to take any action. All this amendment does, in one respect, is to streamline the procedure.

I have gone into the mechanics of section 22 at some length because there was a great deal of confusion in the House on this score when this conference report came up over there for debate a few days ago. As a matter of fact, anyone who reads the five or six pages of colloquy between the House conferees and House Members seeking information can hardly escape the conclusion that the House conferees were themselves confused with respect to the real significance of their action. For example, on page 8924 of the June 20 RECORD the chairman of the House conferees said:

> What does the Magnuson amendment do? The Magnuson amendment places the responsibility in the Secretary of Agriculture. He not only makes the complaint, he tries the case, and he renders the verdict. You talk about the administration wanting more power. Where could the administration have more power than that?

Actually, as I have already stated, the Magnuson amendment does not give the Secretary of Agriculture responsibility for making the complaint, trying the case, and rendering the verdict. Under the Magnuson-Morse amendment the Secretary would collect the facts, but the President would render the verdict. They have that power now, except that it involves a very cumbersome procedure to arrive at.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not a fact that the sole purpose of the Magnuson-Morse amendment is to make certain that the money which the Department of Agriculture would spend under the support program would be spent for the benefit of the American farmers and not for the purpose of setting up a world-wide agricultural support program?

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct. Furthermore we seek to protect the Department of Agriculture itself so that they would stay within the framework of the intent of Congress. In other words, we would not have the situation of the Department of Agriculture taking the taxpayers' money out of one pocket to maintain the price-support program and the State Department spending money out of the other pocket by allowing imports to come in under trade agreements, with the result of wrecking the price-support program.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Without this amendment in the bill we would be supporting agricultural products throughout the world. Is that not correct?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course; and that is what we have been doing, because under section 22, the procedure is so cumbersome that by the time they get around to it, even if the President did make a decision which he thought should be made under the circumstances, the damage is done and we have poured out taxpayers' money to keep an agricultural product at an economic stable level.

If the President wishes to call the Tariff Commission in to advise him, there is nothing to prevent that in section 22 as we propose to amend it. Under our amendment, however, the Tariff Commission would not be brought into the problem except on an advisory basis and at the request of the President.

The Congress has placed responsibility for administering the price support program in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture. He should have parallel authority over imports, subject, of course, to the limitations of section 22 itself. In supporting prices the Secretary has to deal with the "total supply in the market place." The total supply is made up of domestic shipments plus imports.

I want to make just one more point with reference to the streamlining provisions of the Magnuson-Morse amendment. A subcommittee under the able chairmanship of the senior Senator from Louisiana held hearings on this amendment on Tuesday, March 21, 1950. Not a single witness from the Department of Agriculture appeared before the subcommittee to testify against the Magnuson-Morse amendment. This is significant because in the House debate conferees asserted that the Secretary of Agriculture is opposed to our proposal. If this be true, he missed an excellent opportunity to make his views known when he failed to appear either in person or by representative before the subcommittee headed by the Senator from Louisiana on March 21 of this year.

I believe that the streamlining provisions of the Magnuson-Morse amendment are a tremendous improvement over the present cumbersome machinery and should be adopted.

Let us now turn to the more controversial subsection of section 3 of H. R. 6567. I remind Senators again that section 3 is the Magnuson-Morse substitute for the existing section 22.

The Eightieth Congress added a subsection (f) to section 22. As a practical matter this action nullified section 22. The most important single provision of our amendment, therefore, relates to existing subsection (f).

This is a very technical matter, and the House conferees were confused by it. I quote subsection (f) of section 22 of the Agricultural Act, as follows:

> No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or other international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party.

In other words, by section 22, which is the law of the land, we sought to protect the price-support program, but under subsection (f) the intent of Congress is completely nullified, and in effect we say to the State Department: "You can run willy nilly to England and make all the trade agreements you want, and allow to come into this country all the agricultural imports you want to allow to come in, despite the fact that it is going to cost millions of dollars of taxpayers' money to support the price of the product which is jeopardized by the imports." Mr. President, I say that does not make sense. Either we should repeal section 22 and subsection (f), which are now the law of the land, or we should adopt the Magnuson-Morse amendment. The two are completely inconsistent.

The State Department keeps coming to Congress and insisting it has that power, in contravention of the intent of Congress when it passed the original Agricultural Act, and in contravention of the interests of the taxpayers, who have to pay for the price-support program.

As the Senator from Oregon has stated, I, too, as a long-time supporter of reciprocal trade agreements, having voted for their extension during my 14 years of service in Congress, think that leaving this authority in the State Department does more harm than any other one thing I can think of. Hence the suggested amendment. Subsection (f) of our amendment reads as follows:

> No international agreement hereafter shall be entered into by the United States or renewed, extended, or allowed to extend beyond its permissible termination date in contravention of this session.

In other words, we say to the State Department, "When you make these agreements, pay attention to this fact, and place in the agreement the authority of the President of the United States to have a flexible jurisdiction over any type of ruinous imports which affect the price-support program."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLELLAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator from Washington agree with the junior Senator from Oregon that in essence what the Magnuson-Morse amendment seeks to accomplish, and probably will accomplish, is that it will make available to the administration the facts they need, in advance of any damage being done to the agricultural industry of this country, whereas the conferees' report has the bad defect of permitting the damage all to be done in the first instance, and then trying to lock the stable door after the horse is gone?

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is exactly what has happened in many cases, and the most crying example was afforded by the potato crop last fall. The amendment protects reciprocal trade agreements within the framework of what we are trying to have. The Geneva agreement took cognizance of the fact that there were governments which had government-supported agricultural programs, and the nations agreed in Geneva that in making trade agreements that should be taken into consideration, and there could be no objection on the part of any signatory nation to the inclusion in our trade agreements of such a provision as the Senator and I propose.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator from Washington agree with the junior Senator from Oregon that at least in our conversations with the State Department officials we have a great deal of difficulty in getting them really to raise any objections to the purposes which we seek to accomplish, but that their general attitude is, "We do not need to have this safeguard put into the law"?

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is it; they say, "We will take care of it," and, of course, they do not take care of it. They go to trade conferences, but they have never paid any attention to having any trade agreement written in accordance with our price-support program. They have allowed agricultural imports in some cases to result in greater costs to our Government. In Geneva we agreed, and all the signatory nations agreed, to what we are proposing.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I am trying to analyze the attitude of the State Department. I desire to be fair to them, but I am going to insist that they in turn be fair to the agricultural interests of the United States.

Does the Senator come away from some of those conferences with State Department representatives with the feeling which the junior Senator from Oregon has, that apparently what they want is a law so broad that there are not written into it any legislative checks imposed by Congress which will in any way slow them down at the trade conferences, but will leave them free really to bind this country in the first instance at the conferences, expecting, of course, that once they enter into an agreement, we will rubber stamp it when they get back?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course, that is exactly their attitude. They like to go to the conferences with a blank check, and make such agreements as they desire. Then they say to themselves—I do not know, but I imagine this is their thinking—"Perhaps we can agree with some country on olive oil, or citrus fruit, or apples, or wheat, and we might as well let them bring in more, because it will not make any difference, the Agricultural Department will have to pay more for price supports." Thus they can take care of some of their favorite subjects in the trade agreements.

I would not propose any free trade, but I have been for a Government support program. The State Department represents one arm of the Government, the Secretary of Agriculture represents the other arm.

I agree with the Senator from Oregon, and I said the other day, when appearing before the Reciprocity Committee, in connection with our plywood problem, that if they keep up their endeavors to such a point that they are ruining industries in geographical areas, where there is not a great spread, they are going to create a sentiment in this country which will ruin the reciprocal trade program, and put us back under the tariff wall program, which neither the Senator from Oregon nor I desire.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator from Washington find himself in somewhat the same position in which the junior Senator from Oregon has found himself, so far as political campaigning has been concerned, when he has answered questions from the economic reactionaries, who would take us back to a Smoot-Hawley situation, to a tariff that would result inevitably in war just as surely as we stand here today? The junior Senator from Oregon finds himself as a defender of reciprocal trade in the position of having such reactionaries say, "Look at what it is doing to the fruit industry of the Pacific Northwest, look at what it is doing to the lumber industry of the Pacific Northwest, look at what it is doing to America in general," leaving us only with the argument, "I hold no brief for the abuses of the reciprocal trade program, but I am trying to iron out those abuses." That is why I have joined with the Senator from Washington in the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment to the bill. Does the Senator find himself in that position?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I imagine we have both found ourselves in that position, and even though I cannot defend some of the things done, I am a great supporter of reciprocal trade. The real danger is that if this tendency continues, and the officials of the State Department will not accept arguments such as those now being made here, when they come before Congress next year and ask for an extension of reciprocal trade agreements, they will find those who must represent their districts in opposition, saying, "This agreement has ruined an industry in my area, and I cannot vote for its extension," and we will go back to the old protective tariff situation. As the Senator has said, I know of no quicker road into world war III than going back to the Smoot-Hawley tariff, which some of our enemies would like to see happen.

Reciprocal trade agreements do not mean free trade, they mean working out protection for certain industries within the framework of the law. The amazing thing is that the State Department knows that at the Geneva Conference, where 60-some nations signed their names to the pact, in article 11 they agreed to recognize the fact that we did have some Government-supported programs, and they said, "They must be fools if they would allow us to bring in imports which would wreck the Government-support program." And I think we are. But the State Department seems to want the authority to go to England next fall and dicker all over again, and bind us to the principle of trade treaties, which is all right, but it will have the effect of costing the American taxpayers—all the taxpayers, not only the farmers, but all of us—more money, because we are going to have to support agricultural prices. This amendment offers a simple way to protect us, to protect the farmer, and all the taxpayers. It offers a very simple way to put into the minds of the American people a reaffirmation of faith in reciprocal trade agreements which we can negotiate and at the same time protect ourselves, to the mutual benefit of both parties to the agreements.

Mr. President, I read section (f) of section 22, which gives the power and the authority the administration of which the Senator from Oregon and I criticize. I also read the proposed amendment, which just reverses the procedure. That is what it does.

As to subsection (f) of section 22, we merely say that in the future when the Department makes trade agreements it must take into consideration the fact that we do have a price-support program.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MALONE. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Washington just what it is he thinks this amendment will do and what effect it will have on the State Department when they make these so-called reciprocal trade agreements. As the Senator knows, the two words, "reciprocal trade" do not appear in the 1934 Trade Agreements Act at all, and it is not the intention of the State Department to bring about reciprocal trade. It is a one-way street in leveling our standard of living with the nations of the world through an arbitrary lowering of the tariffs and import fees without regard to the differential of the standards of living between this country and the competitive nations. Will the Senator tell the junior Senator from Nevada just what he thinks will be the effect of the amendment?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I will read again the language of the amendment. We say:

> No international agreement hereafter shall be entered into by the United States or renewed, extended, or allowed to extend beyond its permissible termination in contravention of this section.

Section 22 with respect to a price-supported agricultural product merely sets up a procedure whereby, when the Secretary of Agriculture certifies that there is a surplus, and that there is need to support the prices, the President can add a 50 percent ad valorem tax or establish quotas which will bring the exports down to the point where they will not be injurious to our agricultural products. That is the procedure, but subsection (f) nullifies it. We streamline the procedure, because even if we were to go back to section 22 it would take months and months and months to accomplish what section 22 provides. So we say that when the Secretary of Agriculture, who is in charge of the agricultural program, who must determine price supports, who must determine marketing agreements affecting the things that relate to the farm program and its economic stability, who is a fact finder in this case, finds that an import is injurious to a Government-supported agricultural product, commodity, or program, he shall report that directly to the President, and the President can act immediately by adding 50 percent ad valorem tax or establishing a quota. It is as simple as that.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. Just what crops does the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Washington include?

Mr. MAGNUSON. It includes all crops under our so-called farm program. That would be price-supported crops, crops under quotas, under acreage allotments. That would be crops under marketing agreements. That would be crops that might be purchased by the Government for various reasons, school lunches, and things like that. It would include such crops. It would include practically the main substance of our agriculture, I would say.

Mr. MALONE. The entire range of crops that are supported under the price-support program?

Mr. MAGNUSON. It includes those definitely. Those under marketing agreement, those under any Government program which costs the Government money to maintain.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. MALONE. Then it puts definitely into the hands of the Department of Agriculture, or the Secretary of Agriculture, the complete judgment? It is up to his judgment entirely for decision? The decision rests upon no one else's judgment as to when these quotas and corrections shall be invoked? It is entirely in the power of the Secretary of Agriculture?

I agree with the senior Senator from Washington that a tariff or import fee should make up that differential of cost of production between this country and the competitive nations; flexible and in the hands of a nonpartisan authority.

It would be administered on a basis of fair and reasonable competition; there would be no question of a high tariff or a low tariff; but would represent the difference in the wage standard of living.

Mr. MAGNUSON. No. Let me answer the question. The Senator remembers that we have two purposes in the amendment. One is to put a check on the State Department in making the agreements. I think the Senator agrees with that provision. The other is the procedure when it is found that an import is injurious to a Government-supported agricultural-crop commodity program. In section 22, which has been the law of the land since 1935, a procedure was set forth. There was no check on the State Department, but there was a procedure established. That procedure was that the Secretary of Agriculture should make a determination that an imported product, such as that on which the Government was supporting a surplus, became injurious to that program. Then he would send that finding to the President. Then the President would send it to the Tariff Commission, which would hold hearings—maybe. I do not whether they would. Sometimes they do not even hold hearings. Then the Tariff Commission would report back to the President, and the President would have the authority to establish a quota or to add 50 percent ad valorem tax. That procedure required months and months. The damage was already done before action to prevent it could be taken. In the case of perishable crops, two seasons could go by before something would happen to protect us from injurious imports.

Under our amendment, we do two things. We say to the State Department, "When you make these international agreements, you shall have a clause in them which provides that when the Secretary of Agriculture, as a fact finder alone, determines that imports are injuring a program which he must administer with taxpayers' money, he shall report it directly to the President of the United States, and then the President can either do what he is allowed to do under section 22, directly add 50 percent ad valorem, or establish a quota, and do it immediately.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Is it not a fact that after the findings are made by the Department of Agriculture the President may by proclamation impose fees, and so forth?

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct. It is permissive.

Mr. ELLENDER. The present law says it shall be done. Is that not a fact?

Mr. MAGNUSON. No.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let me read to my good friend section 22 in that respect.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let me interrupt my friend. Section 22, yes; but section 22 has been nullified by subsection (f), and the President has never taken such action.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thought my good friend from Washington admitted last Friday in debate that as to any crops which can be controlled either through marketing agreements or any other production controls, the conference provision will be as effective as section 22 under the amendment of the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Oh, I think it would be as effective if section (f) were knocked out, but the conference procedure will have no effect at all.

Mr. ELLENDER. Is not the difference in procedure only this: under the conference agreement the Secretary of Agriculture initiates the matter?

Mr. MAGNUSON. The same as under section 22.

Mr. ELLENDER. No. Under Section 22 the President does it, and then the second step, as to who shall carry on this investigation, the Senators' amendment provides that the Department of Agriculture shall make the investigation——

Mr. MAGNUSON. The investigation shall be made by the fact finders.

Mr. ELLENDER. Whereas under the conference agreement it remains as it is.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It is with the Tariff Commission. They are the fact finders.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. The essential difference from that point between the Senators' amendment and what the conference report proposes is that if the Secretary of Agriculture makes a finding, the President may exercise a certain right given to him under section 22. Whereas under our compromise agreement the President shall by proclamation impose such fees and so forth as are provided under the law.

Mr. MAGNUSON. After the finding by the Tariff Commission.

Mr. ELLENDER. Certainly.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is my point.

Mr. ELLENDER. And after the finding by the Department of Agriculture, the President may invoke section 22. The point I am urging upon my distinguished friend is that under the Senators' amendment the President may do a thing, but under the conference report provision he shall do it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That would be the case if the Tariff Commission agreed.

The point I wish to make to my distinguished friend is this: I do not know whether he has had any experience with trying to invoke the provisions of section 22, which was nullified, insofar as efforts of the State Department to make agreements are concerned. However, even if we tried to invoke section 22 or the procedure suggested by the conference report, I guarantee that that procedure would take no less than 12 months. By that time the perishable crops would be off the market and another crop would be coming on. The procedure in the Tariff Commission is very cumbersome and slow. The Commission holds hearings, but that procedure takes a very long time.

Under our amendment action can be taken very quickly.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator mean that under the amendment action could be taken without having investigations?

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Secretary of Agriculture will be the fact finder, under our amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. But would he not be obliged to go into all the facts to the same extent?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes; but he could do that easily, because under the price-support program he is the administrator, and from week to week he knows what the facts are.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Would it not be necessary for the Secretary of Agriculture to have a large corps of employees to make the investigations?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Oh, no. I can go to the telephone in the cloakroom now and telephone the Department of Agriculture, and in 1 hour the Department of Agriculture will give me an answer as to how many potatoes, for instance, are coming in and how they will affect the crop the Department estimates for this year; or in equally quick time the Department of Agriculture can give me the corresponding information in regard to citrus fruits or other agricultural commodities. The Department has all the information at its fingertips.

However, the procedure by means of the Tariff Commission is cumbersome. The Tariff Commission is not at all conscious of the price-support situation. That procedure will take months, and that is what we are complaining about.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator show me what provision of his amendment would change the procedure as to the fact finding, except that under the present law it is to be done by the Tariff Commission, and under the Senator's amendment it would be done by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. I say that either one will have to go through the same procedure in order to arrive at an understanding of the over-all situation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. No.

Mr. ELLENDER. How would the Department of Agriculture act otherwise?

Mr. MAGNUSON. They do not have to obtain anything except a picture of the Government's price-support situation. That has nothing at all to do with imports or with trade treaties. If the other part of my amendment carries, the law then will be that if the State Department makes trade treaties, it must make sure that they carry out the provisions of section 22, which was nullified by the Eightieth Congress by the adoption of subsection (f).

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I should like to call to the attention of the Senator the language of his amendment which, I may say, is no different from the language of the present law.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wish the Senator would consider the over-all situation in this respect. He agrees with me, I am sure, that there are two parts of my amendment. One part deals with the making of international trade agreements. The other part of the amendment deals with the procedure to be followed if the amendment is invoked.

Mr. ELLENDER. But the law would not be changed in any respect by the amendment; under the amendment, the law would be identical with the law as of the present time. The only change the Senator's amendment would make would be that the Department of Agriculture would make the finding, instead of having the Tariff Commission. That is the only difference. The procedure in regard to obtaining the results would be the same. If that is not so, I wish the distinguished Senator would explain to me the difference between the present law and his amendment. The language of each is the same throughout.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Except that we would reenact the language of section 22, which was practically nullified by the language of subsection (f), because subsection (f), which was adopted by the Eightieth Congress——

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I am talking about procedure, not about subsection (f).

Mr. MAGNUSON. I agree with the Senator from Louisiana that the procedure would be the first point to be considered; and under the procedure, the matter would go first to the Secretary of Agriculture, and then to the President, and then to the Tariff Commission; and the Tariff Commission would make a report to the President; and then the President could act if he wished to do so.

Mr. ELLENDER. In other words, that is the procedure which would be in force under the Senator's amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. No; that procedure would be in effect under any amendment, because the President can evaluate the report of the Tariff Commission in any way that he wishes. We cannot force the President to act. We may say that he shall act, but he does not have to act.

Mr. ELLENDER. I had in mind the findings. Under the Senator's amendment, after the findings are made by the Secretary of Agriculture, the President may act. However, under the findings made by the Tariff Commission, the President, must act, according to the provisions of the conference report.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That would depend upon what language the Tariff Commission used in its report to the President. I do not think the President need act under either provision; but by means of our amendment we would simplify the procedure.

I cannot understand why the conferees were not willing to simplify the language and the procedure. What was the objection?

Mr. ELLENDER. We were trying——

Mr. MAGNUSON. Of course I appreciate the position of the Senate conferees, but my question is in regard to the House conferees.

Mr. ELLENDER. The House conferees took the position that inasmuch as the Tariff Commission was more or less of a bipartisan body and was in a position to study the over-all picture, it would be better to leave the procedure as it is, rather than to place the responsibility on the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Very well. What was the objection to changing the language from subsection (f), which gives the State Department unlimited power to make agreements in contravention of a price-support program, as against the language of our amendment, which the Senate adopted, under which no international agreement shall hereafter be entered into or renewed, and so forth, in contravention of this section.

Mr. ELLENDER. The House conferees felt that if the language thus proposed remained in the bill, it would do violence to our trade-agreement program. That is what they said.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That was the position of the State Department, was it not?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; that was the position of the House conferees. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Well, that is the State Department's position.

Mr. ELLENDER. However, the conferees finally agreed to a report which would make it impossible, as it were, for the President to enter into any future trade agreements unless article XI and XIX of GATT were taken into consideration. In other words, the President today cannot bypass those provisions of GATT in future agreements.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I understand that. However, title 11 is not sufficient.

I do not want the President or the Secretary of State or the trade negotiators to bypass the avowed intent of Congress, as set forth in section 22, that imports shall not be allowed under trade agreements, if such imports will injure the price-support program.

In other words, the conferees shifted over to GATT. Article 11 is rather flexible; and the representatives can go to England this fall and can do a great many things. That is my point.

I agree with the Senator that perhaps there is some argument as to the merits of the procedure. I was simply trying to streamline the procedure, and I was trying to make it easier to be used, so that the President of the United States could act quickly.

In other words, if action were taken to begin to engage in dumping operations under the Canadian trade agreement, in the case of deciduous fruit, by the time the Tariff Commission was appealed to and by the time the Tariff Commission went all through its procedure, the situation complained of would have ceased to exist; it would be over. The crop would have been marketed; or, if the Government was supporting the price, the Government would have to dig down into its pockets and pay more money.

This amendment provides procedure by which action can be taken quickly; but under the amendment the final decision still will rest in the President of the United States.

Mr. President, there has been some discussion as to the meaning and effect of the present subsection (f) and as to what the conferees did.

Let us consider the present language. When we say that this section shall not be enforced in contravention of any international agreement, we are simply saying, in effect, what has been done all these years, namely, that no part of section 22 may be enforced if such action conflicts with general agreements on tariffs and trade, as negotiated by the State Department.

To put the matter in another way, subsection (f), as adopted by the Eightieth Congress, subordinates section 22 to existing and subsequent agreements.

By means of the Magnuson-Morse amendment we seek to preserve the integrity and intent of section 22, by saying to the State Department, "Here is exactly what we do: We say you cannot enter into any new trade agreements or you cannot extend existing agreement when they terminate, 2 or 3 years hence, if such action will be in contravention of section 22." Congress adopted section 22. Congress did not adopt article 11, and it should have no part in the agricultural program.

To put it another way, subsection (f) as adopted by the Eightieth Congress subordinates section 22 to existing and subsequent agreements.

In the Magnuson-Morse amendment we seek to preserve the integrity and intent of section 22 by saying to the State Department, "You cannot enter into any new trade agreements, or extend existing agreements, when they terminate 2 or 3 years hence, in contravention of section 22." We are saying, "unless, and until section 22 is written off the books, you must observe it in writing trade agreements."

Why should the State Department object to that? Does it want to proceed further and make trade agreements in contravention of the laws of Congress? The Department representatives came here to try to convince the Senate committee that that should be done. The Senate committee did not agree with them. But apparently, the House conferees think it is all right for the Department to make international trade agreements in contravention of the laws of Congress, and that they should be given that authority. I think it is time we put this check upon it, particularly in those instances where the taxpayer is paying for the agricultural support program.

This then, was the intent of subsection (f) of the Magnuson-Morse amendment as contrasted with present language.

The amendment was adopted unanimously by the Senate Agriculture Committee as section 3 of H. R. 6567. Not a single voice was raised against it here on the Senate floor. Last year it was adopted by a vote of 44 to 28 as an amendment to the Anderson bill. Last year the Senate conferees on the Anderson farm bill deferred to the House conferees, and the amendment was lost.

I pointed out previously that in the colloquy which took place on the floor of the House recently no one seemed to understand what was being sought to be done. The State Department seems to have confused everyone about it.

This year the amendment was taken to conference and what happens? The conferees agreed to so-called compromise language, which compromises the Magnuson-Morse amendment out of the bill entirely.

The language of subsection F, agreed to by the conference, is worse than no language at all—is worse than the language we seek to eliminate. In about three times as many words the compromise section again nullifies section 22 and again subordinates it to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Furthermore it is highly significant that the language agreed to by the conferees is precisely the language recommended to the Senate Agriculture Committee, in March, by the State Department.

I hope the Senator from Louisiana will bear with me while I repeat that statement. It is highly significant that the language agreed to by the conferees is precisely the language recommended to the Senate Agricultural Committee, in March, by the State Department.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator is correct. That was by and with the consent and approval also of the Senate Committee on Finance, as well as of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I appreciate the fact that the Senate approved it.

Mr. ELLENDER. All those interested in the subject had their representatives present, and an effort was made to use language which would be acceptable to all concerned.

Mr. MAGNUSON. What I am trying to point out—and it is somewhat more than significant—is that the opposition to this came constantly from the State Department, which wants authority to make trade agreements in contravention of the laws and of the intent of the Congress. If it is desired to give the State Department that authority, let us repeal section 22 to allow the Department to proceed to make agreements to permit the importation of agricultural products, and forget about section 22.

I say it is somewhat significant that the language agreed to by the conferees is precisely the language recommended to the Senate Agricultural Committee, in March, by the State Department.

Reference to this fact is on page 6 of the Committee report on H. R. 6567. Let me read the most pertinent paragraph. I am reading now from page 6 of the committee report dated March 30:

> In accordance with this understanding representatives of the State Department met on March 27 with staff members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and Senate Agriculture Committee and an attorney from the office of the Senate legislative counsel. The following amendment to the language of the pending bill has been suggested as a result of this meeting which your subcommittee submits to the full committee without recommendation.

There follows then, the full and exact text of subsection (f) adopted by the conferees.

When the question of adopting this proposal came before the full Senate Agriculture Committee, it was rejected unanimously—the Magnuson-Morse language was adopted unanimously.

The Senate is asked now to agree to a proposition which its own committee has already considered and discarded.

Let me read the conference language, omitting some of the excess verbiage, so its full import may be more readily understood:

No proclamation under this section shall be enforced in contravention of any treaty or international agreement to which the United States is or hereafter becomes a party—

Up to this point the language is exactly the same as subsection (f) adopted by the Eighteth Congress. It continues:

but no international agreement or amendment to an existing international agreement shall hereafter be entered into which does not permit the enforcement of this section * * * to the full extent that the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, * * * permit such enforcement.

Now what does that language mean? If I understand English correctly it means that any action taken under section 22 against imports must be in conformity with action permitted under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The language of the conferees simply means that the President can take no action under section 22 in contravention of General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

In one sense, adoption of this conference report will constitute ratification of article II of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. From this point of view, the language of the conferees is even more objectionable than subsection (f) as it now stands.

Boiled down to its essence, the language agreed to by the conferees subordinates section 22 to existing and future agreements.

If we adopt this language we will be saying to the State Department, "We forgive you all past transgressions upon section 22. We authorize you to go your way and sin some more—as long as your future transgressions make no greater inroads on section 22 than those of the past."

I return to the thesis I have expounded on this floor for the last 2 years—either make section 22 an effective tool or take it off the statute books. Either give the President workable authority to deal with imports that destroy the effectiveness of a domestic farm program, or repeal the program itself. In my judgment, the American people will not long consent to a course of action which requires them to support both domestic and world prices.

I urge the Senate to reject this report, thereby indicating to our conferees, that the Senate wishes them to insist upon its amendment.

I remind the Senators again that a vote to reject the conference report cannot be interpreted by anyone, by any stretch of the imagination—as a vote against the $2,000,000,000 increase in the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation. A vote to reject the conference report is a method of serving notice upon those who have responsibility for trade-agreement programs, that they cannot by executive action nullify the law of the land. I repeat, that by rejecting the conference report we shall in no way be jeopardizing the extension of the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The langugage on that subject is the same in both the House and Senate versions, and is not in dispute. I have talked to officials of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and I have asked them frankly, "Would a delay in this matter affect the operations of the CCC?" The answer was that it would not, that the Corporation has the money, anyway. We do not need to rush this matter, which is one of extreme importance.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Will the Senator tell us from whom, representing the Commodity Credit Corporation, he obtained that information? I have received information to the contrary.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Does the Senator refer to information to the effect that it would stop the operations of the CCC?

Mr. ELLENDER. No, no—that the CCC did not need it immediately, that it could wait, and wait, and wait. To whom did the Senator talk?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I talked to the secretary. I said, "Would this affect your operations, if it went on?" I was under the impression that if the CCC did not get this by June 30, it might make some difference. But the Commodity Credit Corporation can continue for the next 2 or 3 weeks without any trouble whatever. That is my information. If the Senator has information to the contrary, I do not know of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I agree with what the Senator has said. There is no rush about the enactment of this proposed legislation. The Commodity Credit Corporation has adequate funds with which to carry on its duties at this particular time.

Mr. ELLENDER. It has a little money on hand, but it cannot announce its program on basic crops for 1950. What I am saying is that the Commodity Credit Corporation must in the near future announce a program as to what it will do in the future with reference to crops now growing. That is why it is necessary to have $2,000,000,000 available at an early date.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I disagree completely with what the Senator from Louisiana has said. There is nothing in the law which would prohibit the Commodity Credit Corporatoon from announcing its program.

Mr. ELLENDER. How can it be done unless money is available?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The money is available.

Mr. ELLENDER. Suppose the Senate should not permit an addition of $2,000,000,000 in borrowing power?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The corporation has one and a quarter billion dollars of borrowing authority which has not been used. That is a great deal of money. Besides, the books of the corporation have not been brought down for 2 years, and we do not have the slightest factual idea as to how much money it has available——

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate in going into details. The Senate had before it all the facts, presented by my distinguished friend from Delaware, and $2,000,000,000 was authorized. That is all I have to say.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In any event, Mr. President, the matter of a few days is not going to make any difference in the operations. The Corporation can announce its program.

I should like to add before I yield to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] that I am a supporter of the Trade Agreements Act, and I know the Senator from Louisiana is also a supporter of it; but if the State Department continues in the way it has been going, particularly with reference to industries in certain geographical areas, and if it continues to make agreements containing no escape clause, and allowing agricultural imports to come into this country, wrecking our farm program, we shall find that the whole reciprocal trade program will be wrecked.

I think the amendment protects the State Department from its own evils; it protects it in spite of itself. Next year, when the Trade Agreements Act comes up for extension, Congress may refuse to continue it if the State Department continues such tactics as it has been employing. It is high time for the Department to know that if its devotion to reciprocal trade agreements is what it says it is, it had better make some concessions, because the American taxpayer will not stand for such tactics much longer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wish to finish my statement, and then I shall yield the floor.

We may have to go back to protective tariffs, and I heartily disapprove of protective tariffs. I think that would be the most disastrous thing that could happen to this country. That would be the quickest way to world war III. I think that even some Republicans would agree to that.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. In just a moment.

Mr. President, every farm organization in the United States is in favor of this amendment. I do not want to clutter the RECORD with their statements, but two typical ones are from the National Council of Farm Cooperatives and the National Grange. There are many others.

As a matter of fact, I do not know of anyone who opposes this amendment, with the exception of the State Department. Every farmer, taxpayer, and American citizen, who understands it, is in favor of it.

In closing I read two telegrams I received this morning from two great farm organizations:

National Council of Farmer Cooperatives strongly urges your support of original text Magnuson amendment to CCC bill when it reaches Senate floor. We believe language suggested by conferees is not adequate to give United States farmers protection they urgently need against injurious imports.
NATIONAL COUNCIL OF FARMER COOPERATIVES,
JOHN J. RIGGLE, Assistant Secretary.

The National Grange appreciates and hopes you will continue to insist on the Magnuson amendment in the CCC bill. We feel it is vital to any program of price supports.

THE NATIONAL GRANGE,
ALBERT S. GOSS, Master.

Mr. President, I yield as much time to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] as he may wish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has 10 minutes time remaining.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, continuing the observations made along the same lines, which have been so forcefully presented by the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the junior Senator from Nebraska, last February, sought to have adopted by the Senate an amendment to restrict the importation of Irish potatoes when the supply of potatoes in this country is in excess of the goal of production or national production allotment as set by the Secretary of Agriculture.

When my amendment was before the Senate there were cries that it would upset the broad over-all policies of the Department of State, just as has been so dramatically set forth by the Senator from Washington.

Again we are confronted by language in the pending conference report, the ultimate effect of which will be to subordinate recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture to the global planning of the Department of State, and its goal to fill every dollar gap around the free world, real or fancied.

That is why the farm organizations are opposed to the conference report. They want the Department of Agriculture, which is a fact-finding agency of government, to be the Department to determine whether there is an impact upon the agricultural production of the United States. Why leave it to a political agency, the Department of State, to make the determination while it writes its agreements with foreign countries?

The rights and interests of our farmers should be fostered by the agency of the Government created for that purpose, the Department of Agriculture, and not be left to the political global planning of the Secretary of State.

Again the junior Senator from Nebraska arises in support of tariff protection for American industry, agriculture, and labor.

The Senate-House conference report, now before the Senate, deals with the tariff on agricultural commodities, and procedures for protecting United States producers of agricultural commodities against loss of their American markets, the domestic markets, to importations from other countries.

The junior Senator from Nebraska is hopeful that, before the present session of the Congress adjourns, there will be passed a broad, general amendment to the Trade Agreements Act, to provide protection for all American producers, all industries, and all agriculture, against further reductions in tariff schedules below peril points for our own producers.

A start toward this wholesome, necessary action can be taken by the Senate on the pending conference report dealing with the tariffs on agricultural commodities.

The evidence in support of this action is abundant and conclusive.

The forthright, sensible, sound action taken by the Senate in adopting the Magnuson-Morse amendment to House bill 6567, the Commodity Credit Corporation bill, has been revised in conference.

As it stands before the Senate, it would provide so much red tape and duplication of investigation and finding of facts, that it would be next to worthless. The relief against ruinous imports, to which the farmers of the United States are so justly entitled, would be long deferred if it should ever come.

The Senate amendment, which the conferees revised into a merry-go-round of investigations, was adopted unanimously by the Senate Agriculture Committee, and subsequently adopted by the Senate.

Last year, in a 3-day floor debate, in which all the issues were thoroughly discussed in this body, the amendment was adopted, 44 to 28.

This section, as it went to conference with the House, provided for simple, direct, effective procedure, under which the Secretary of Agriculture would make the finding of fact, if imports or threatened imports of a given commodity seriously affected or threatened to affect American farmers and processors.

Then the Secretary of Agriculture was to submit his finding to the President.

The President would still have discretionary authority given to him in the Trade Agreements Act, to put the recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture into effect in foreign-trade agreements, or he could reject them.

But the voice of agriculture would be heard through the Secretary of Agriculture. And there is no better agency for passing upon purely agricultural tariff matters than the Department of Agriculture. All of the organizations of farmers are supporting this procedure.

Many letters have already been introduced into the RECORD, and no doubt more will be introduced, confirming that observation. They know that the Department of Agriculture knows more about the facts and the impact of the wholesale importations of agricultural products into this country than does any other governmental agency, especially the Department of State.

The conference report now before the Senate would retain initiative for the Secretary of Agriculture, in posting warning signs against tariff slashes on agricultural commodities, but have them referred to the United States Tariff Commission for further investigation, further study, more hearings, and more reports.

Section 22, as adopted by the Senate, provided clear, unmistakable language regarding treaty obligations. For obvious reasons it is not desirable to revise tariff schedules, in contravention of existing treaties. To do that would be an act of bad faith. The amendment as originally adopted by the Senate covered the situation in this language:

No international agreement hereafter shall be entered into by the United States or renewed, extended, or allowed to extend beyond its permissible termination date in contravention of this section.

That was forcefully pointed out a few moments ago by the senior Senator from Washington.

When the Senate adopted the Magnuson-Morse amendment, its purpose was to establish a procedure by which tariff protection could and would be provided for the American farmers, and to accomplish that purpose in the most direct and effective way possible. The conferees have injected into this clear, straightforward amendment detours, if's and's, and but's.

Mr. President, today's news—the hostilities in Korea and fast-moving events around the globe—which disturbs the yearning of our people for lasting peace, should remind all of us of the paramount importance of keeping the United States strong—strong financially, strong economically, and strong spiritually. Much as we all desire to help other countries to get on their feet, so they can resist communism, we must be prudent about it and not sap the strength of the United States by opening the floodgates for importations of agricultural commodities. Every economist will tell us that agriculture is the foundation for national prosperity. Sixty-five percent of our wealth comes out of the soil.

There is abundant evidence that our farmers are beginning to feel the impact of imports. Canned meats, fresh and frozen beef, fresh eggs, dried eggs, potatoes, tree nuts, and other commodities, even including corn and wheat, are coming in to compete with our own American producers. Certainly there is no sound thinking in permitting importation of commodities which are in the Commodity Credit Corporation's price-support operations. I ask the question: Is there? The end result of such a program is to have the Government—all the taxpayers—maintain price supports for importers to take advantage of. For the producers of commodities which are not in the price-support program to face the loss of their domestic markets to foreign producers, is to advocate, if you please,

"Buy foreign," instead of "Buy American."

Mr. President, what is the use or purpose of extending the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation, which is the primary purpose of this legislation, if at the same time we permit unrestricted imports of products in direct competition with supported domestic production? Without such protection, we shall continue to take it out of the American taxpayers' hide, coming and going. For that matter, Mr. President, what is the use of maintaining high wage levels in this country, and other high standards of living, if we are to let those standards be imperiled by imports produced by slave labor, and under conditions with which the American farmer and the American producer cannot compete?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFARLAND in the chair). The time of the Senator from Nebraska has expired. All time of the opponents has expired.

Mr. WHERRY. I wonder whether the Senator from Louisiana would be kind enough to grant me 3 minutes in order that I may conclude my statement.

Mr. ELLENDER. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. Either our own agriculture program must receive first attention, or foreign agriculture programs will be given priority. I wish every Senator would remember that fact, not only now, but especially in the future, when it is proposed to extend trade agreements. In the future, trade agreements should not be made with a view to expanding foreign agriculture at the expense of our farmers and our American economy.

These questions are now before the Senate to decide. The junior Senator from Nebraska is supporting the Magnuson-Morse amendment because it offers an approach to protection for American farmers against ruinous foreign competition. It is to be assumed that the President, confronted by evidence submitted by the Department of Agriculture, will recognize its validity in the interests of the United States. It has been suggested that the Senate conferees obtained the best in conference that was possible. This the junior Senator from Nebraska does not question, for he believes the Senate conferees were true to their trust, and did all they could to have the Senate provisions adopted in conference. But, the legislative process is still underway. The normal course of submitting the conference report to the Senate is now being taken. It is quite within the rights of the Senate to review its position, and, having found that its original action is more practical and feasible than the compromise reached in conference, the Senate has the right to insist upon the original language. The junior Senator from Nebraska submits that by rejecting the conference report, and insisting upon the language so overwhelmingly adopted by the Senate, the hands of the Senate conferees will be strengthened when they go back to conference the next time. Fortified by Senate reiteration of its position in support of the Magnuson-Morse amendment, the Senate conferees can resume meeting with the conferees on behalf of the House of Representatives confident of success in persuading them of the wisdom of the Senate's position.

Mr. President, for all the reasons I have given in the very brief time available to me, I urge rejection of the conference report, and, if it succeeds, insistence upon the clear, workable, and effective procedures already approved by the Senate.

Mr. President, once more I thank the distinguished Senator from Louisiana for the courtesy he has extended to me.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I do not have much new material to add to what I have already presented to the Senate, but I should like to emphasize a few of the points which I made last Friday. At the outset I wish to say that the conferees met on two occasions, and every effort was made by the Senate conferees to have the Senate version of the bill adopted. However, we were met with most strenuous opposition on the part of the House conferees. The House conferees were positive in their assertion that if the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment were adopted in its present form it would do much violence to our future trade-agreements program. After considerable debate in conference the conferees finally agreed to report what is now before the Senate. I may say that the more I study the compromise report the better I like it, and under it, we should come considerably closer to settling the problems which have been discussed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] than if we permitted the law to remain as it now stands. As I pointed out Friday we are placing mandatory provisions as to what should be done by the Secretary of State and the President in carrying out our trade-agreements program, instead of making them permissive.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Senator made the statement that the House conferees thought the amendment, if adopted, would do violence to the trade program. I am wondering whether the Senator could inform the Senate in what specific respects they thought violence would be done.

Mr. ELLENDER. It would be done by striking the present subsection (f) from section 22. As the Senator well understands, the President need not take into consideration section 22 in executing trade agreements in the future.

Mr. MAGNUSON. How did they say specifically it would do violence? I cannot see how it would do violence.

Mr. ELLENDER. For the simple reason that the language in the Senator's proposal is so broad that any commodity with respect to which there is a purchase agreement, a loan, or any kind of program—whether or not that commodity is produced in excess of our requirements, could be excluded from future trade agreements; that is, such a commodity could be made the subject of an investigation by the Department of Agriculture, whether or not an effective program to curtail production or limit the marketing thereof, were possible.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Oh, no.

Mr. ELLENDER. I know the Senator does not agree with that, but, as he has admitted, there must be a program in effect. Where we differ is as to the effectiveness of such a program in limiting production or curtailing its disposition through marketing agreements.

As I started to say, all the conferees on the part of the House, as well as all the conferees on the part of the Senate—with the exception of one—signed the conference report. The exception on the Senate side was the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], who did not feel that he could sign the conference report because he was not in full agreement with what could be done under the new proposal.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let me ask the Senator another question. Is it not correct that in accepting the House version, which is the State Department version, the Senate conferees accepted an amendment which they had unanimously rejected in the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry? It is exactly the same language.

Mr. ELLENDER. I will not say it was unanimously rejected. We considered it, but the Senate committee at that time thought that the Magnuson amendment, which was before us, was couched in better language and would do more to accomplish the purpose than what was proposed.

Now let me state to the Senator, as I mentioned last Friday, that the conference report agreed upon is effective with respect to our basic crops, or, for that matter, any crops which we produce and on which we can control overproduction by marketing quotas or acreage allotments. I am sure my distinguished friend from Washington will not disagree with that. Under his own amendment, before it could be effective as to any commodity it would be necessary that some form of control be in effect. The Senator admits that.

What I am saying is that with respect to the conference report, that is, the language which has been agreed to by the Senate and the House, the language with respect to our basic crops, and any crops on which marketing quotas can be imposed, or which can be controlled by acreage controls, would be as effective as that of the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Washington. The only difference, as he pointed out, would be with respect to procedure.

I wish to point out to the Senate that the procedure outlined in the present law is not changed one iota from the procedure indicated in the amendment of the Senator from Washington, except that, instead of the President initiating any action, the conference agreement would place this responsibility on the Secretary of Agriculture, who would report to the President, and who in turn would have the Tariff Commission investigate the facts. Under the Senator's amendment, the Department of Agriculture would initiate the machinery, and the Department of Agriculture itself would then hold hearings and determine the extent to which certain commodities are coming in, and are, in a measure, doing violence to or affecting adversely the producers of similar commodities in this country.

Mr. President, after the findings are made by the Department of Agriculture, in the case of the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Washington, the President may by proclamation impose such fees, "not in excess of 50 percent ad valorem or such quantitative limitations on any article or articles which may be entered," and so forth. The present law states that if a finding is made, and if that finding shows that the entry of any commodity into this country will do violence to the producers of similar commodities here, the President shall impose such ad valorem fees. The conference report makes it obligatory on him to do it, whereas in the case of the Magnuson amendment he is not obligated to do it. That is why I am saying to the Senate that the more I study both proposals, the greater is my conviction that a more effective method can be worked out under the agreement reached by the conferees than under the Magnuson-Morse amendment, insofar as our basic crops are concerned, or insofar as concerns any other crop, the production of which the Department can successfully curtail by means of acreage controls or other methods.

Mr. President, I repeat, the same line of commodities which could be affected under the pending proposal agreed to in conference could also be affected under the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment. In other words, there is absolutely no difference in what can be done as to our major crops, except that in the method of attaining the goal the Magnuson amendment treats the matter differently. That is the only difference, as I am sure the Senator from Washington will admit. He is of the opinion that because the Department of Agriculture can initiate the procedure, because the Department of Agriculture can itself hold hearings and make the findings, it stands in a better position to have things done which would benefit agriculture than if we let the Tariff Commission do it.

Let me point out to the Senator that the Tariff Commission, as the distinguished Senator knows, is a bipartisan commission, composed of Republicans and Democrats. This Commission has to do with our trade as a whole, and is not relegated merely to dealing with agriculture, or with the production of steel or any other commodity. It has experts to make studies of all the proposals brought before it, in the light of an over-all picture, and I contend that it is in a better position to make findings than would be the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. President, a question arose as to the position of the farm organizations throughout the country. As the distinguished Senator pointed out, there are several farm organizations, I know, which are strongly in favor of the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment, and do not agree to what the conference report proposes. For instance, a letter from the National Milk Producers Federation addressed to me today states:

> We wish to indicate the position of the National Milk Producers Federation concerning that part of the conference report on H. R. 6567 relating to section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. President, the letter expresses a contrary view to my feelings in this matter and the way I think about it. I want to be perfectly fair with the Senate, however, in presenting the views of those who are opposed to my position as well as those who are in favor of it. This morning I had my secretary telephone the heads of various farm organizations in Washington, five of them, and I am glad to say that all responded either by telegram or by letter. The letter I am reading, from the National Milk Producers Federation, as I stated, takes a position contrary to mine. I continue to read:

> At the thirty-third annual meeting in November 1949 the federation adopted a resolution with respect to import controls which reads in part as follows:
>
> "We recommend as permanent legislation the repeal of subsection (f) of section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the enactment of legislation to provide that no international agreement shall hereafter be entered into by the United States, or renewed, or permitted to extend beyond its earliest permissible termination date, which would be in contravention of said section 22."
>
> The present law, because of subsection (f) in conjunction with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, does not provide adequate protection for our agricultural programs. Recognition of this fact has given rise to the present move to amend section 22.
>
> The conference report insofar as it relates to section 22 does not accomplish the desired objective nor correct the present unsatisfactory condition. The legislation therein recommended would merely prevent the United States from entering into future trade agreements containing provisions more harmful than those already contained in the general agreement.
> To this extent the proposed legislation may be some improvement over the present law, but it does not solve the basic problem.

As has been stated here, insofar as the milk producers are concerned, the provision proposed by the conferees is not entirely acceptable, but it is a move in the right direction, and in my opinion will correct many of the discrepancies which now exist.

The National Council of Farmer Cooperatives in a letter addressed to me today had this to say:

> We appreciate your efforts to make section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act effective in the protection of our various farm programs.
>
> Our people believe the original language of the Magnuson-Morse amendment accomplishes the original objective of speeding procedure, and yet safeguarding it in the hands of the Agriculture Department which is informed and prepared to act as rapidly as inquiries into the problem may indicate.
> On the other hand, we believe the conference report version is not clear enough for us to predict the interpretation which may later be put on paragraph (f). And we also feel that the procedure under paragraphs (a) and (b) provide unnecessary delay in obtaining the facts and in reaching a decision thereon.

In other words, the chief objection by that organization is with respect to questions of procedure. In the letter from which I have just quoted, they refer to one of them. In my humble opinion, the method of procedure by which the Department of Agriculture should make the over-all study would run into serious difficulties. The study cannot be confined merely to milk or to cheese, or to any particular farm commodity. The Senator from Washington knows that in making a trade agreement we cannot satisfy everyone. We are bound to trample on the toes of some. Unless an over-all study is made of the situation by a bipartisan group which is familiar with all phases of our foreign trade, a good job cannot be done that will treat everyone as equitably as he should be treated. The Senator knows that to be so.

It will not, in my opinion, be as simple for the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct the hearings as the Senator has indicated. The Department of Agriculture cannot solve the problem by a study with respect to what effect a certain amount of wheat coming into this country would have on the wheat producers; it would also have to study the benefit that an agreement in which wheat is involved would bring to the producers of other commodities throughout the country. That over-all picture would have to be considered by whoever is designated by the Congress to make the study that is called for in section 22. I maintain that the department of government best able to make that study is the Tariff Commission. It has experts in every line, and they can do the work much more quickly, and to the better advantage of everyone concerned, than can the Department of Agriculture which would be the prosecutor, the judge, and the jury if the Magnuson-Morse amendment were adopted.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That may sound all right, Mr. President, but the actual experience we have had in connection with this matter is that there are too many experts in the Tariff Commission. I can tell the Senator what has happened time after time, in many instances, when an agricultural product is coming into this country which is ruinous to a Government-supported program. I speak of the result to the taxpayers not to the producers. When the cumbersome procedure of the Tariff Commission is followed, by the time the hearings are ended, and the recommendation is made, months and months have passed, and the damage has been done. The Tariff Commission does not consult with anyone. It has its own experts. They do, as the Senator says, look at the over-all picture. The experts of that agency are adept; they study and study and study the subject, and by the time the recommendation is finally made, the damage is done to, let us say, perishable agricultural products involved. If they would act with due dispatch, very well; but we have never had the experience with them that they do act with due dispatch.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let us assume that the Department of Agriculture makes the investigation. The facts and the findings must then be submitted to the President. If the Department of Agriculture cannot show the President how its findings or recommendations, if it makes recommendations, will affect other commodities, the President would have to go to the Tariff Commission before reaching a final decision.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If he wished to do so; yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course. That is where he would go. That is where he has to go. I do not believe the Department of Agriculture is equipped with the proper staff to make an over-all study of how a certain commodity affects other commodities throughout the country. Yet before the President acts on any proposal concerning trade agreements he has to know how his action will affect the producers of other commodities.

When the proposal embodied in the Magnuson-Morse amendment was first submitted to the Congress, the Department of Agriculture suggested then that the best agency of Government to make this over-all study was the Tariff Commission. The reason for the Agriculture Department's recommendation was that the Tariff Commission had the necessary experts, who had devoted years of study to the subject, that they had most of the facts at hand, and that therefore they could work more rapidly than could any other agency of Government.

Mr. President, a moment ago I was discussing the position of the farm organizations.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt, inasmuch as I have to go to the telephone in a moment, I should like to ask him a question: Is it not a fact that every farm organization, so far as the Senator knows—including the so-called Big Five, to which we have referred—would like to see the Magnuson-Morse amendment adopted?

Mr. ELLENDER. I shall read statements giving their views. I think the Senator was a little in error in saying that all of them are opposed to the conference report and in favor of the Magnuson-Morse amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think all of them endorsed the Magnuson-Morse amendment. There may be some who say, as the milk producers do, that "Although we are not getting the whole loaf, this will be about one-tenth of a loaf for us."

Mr. ELLENDER. Exactly. I say to my distinguished friend that if the agreement reached in the conference committee were thoroughly understood by the various farm organizations, then, instead of preferring to have no law at all on the subject, I believe they would prefer to have the conference report, for the reason that it is a step in the right direction, and it will tend to ameliorate many of the difficulties which give rise to the Magnuson-Morse amendment.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEFAUVER in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I should like to say that a few minutes ago Mr. Sanders, of the National Grange, called me into the reception room and expressed the view that he certainly had no fear that harm would come to the farm program as a result of returning the conference report for a further conference.

Later in the afternoon I shall insert in the RECORD a letter which the head of the Grange, Mr. Goss, has written, and his letter certainly expresses their position on this matter.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the Grange, dated today, June 26, reading as follows:

> It is our opinion that the conference report on the Commodity Credit Corporation bill still leaves any tariff adjustments to the discretion of the President. Unless clear-cut authoritative interpretation can be approved by the Senate, we believe the report should be returned to conference for clarification.
>
> A. S. Goss,
> Master, the National Grange.

I pointed out in particular to the Senator that in his letter, Mr. Goss says that in their opinion—

> The conference report * * * still leaves any tariff adjustments to the discretion of the President.

Certainly that is true, regardless of whether the conference report is adopted or whether the Magnuson-Morse amendment is adopted.

Mr. MORSE. There is a difference between the exercise of the checks under the two proposals.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let me point out that after the findings are made by the Secretary of Agriculture, under the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment it is not obligatory on the President to impose ad valorem fees.

Mr. MORSE. There is no attempt on the part of the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Washington to make that obligatory, because we are satisfied that if we can adopt a timing schedule which will make it possible for us to get the facts to the administration in advance of the doing of damage, the damage will not be done.

Mr. ELLENDER. Under the conference report, when the Tariff Commission finds that the facts warrant action by the President, then the President must act. In that respect, the conferees have followed the law which now exists. Section 22 as now written provides that—

> If, on the basis of such investigation—

That is, if an investigation is made by the Tariff Commission—> and report to him of findings and recommendations made in connection therewith, the President finds the existence of such facts, he shall by proclamation impose such fees not in excess of 50 percent ad valorem—

And so forth. But with reference to the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment, the word "shall" is changed to "may." I think that change constitutes a significant difference, especially when we view that language in connection with the proposal, as I shall read it in a few minutes, which has been submitted to the Senate by the conference committee, namely, that insofar as the basic commodities are concerned, and insofar as is concerned any commodity on which we have effective limitations on marketing or production, the steps which will be taken will be as effective as those which could be taken under the Magnuson-Morse amendment. The only difference would lie in who shall make the findings—whether the Department of Agriculture or the Tariff Commission.

Mr. President, I repeat that it would be unfair to the producers of other commodities to permit the Department of Agriculture to make the investigation and be the judge of everything in that connection, because necessarily, in the making of trade agreements, we must take into consideration the producers of commodities other than those directly affected by the agreements. For instance, we must determine the extent to which the manufacture of automobiles will be affected and the extent to which the manufacture of other commodities will be affected by the various trade agreements into which we enter.

The Senator from Oregon knows that, regardless of what agreements we make, we are bound to trample on the feet of some while we help others, or vice versa.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say that I respect the views of the Senator from Louisiana regarding the conference report, but our difference is rather fundamental. Our difference is over the question of who will make the investigation, and when the investigation will be made.

I wish to say that the conference report fails miserably to place any effective check on the trade agreements' section of the State Department, which to date have shown that they have failed to have any sound understanding of the problems of American agriculture.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, the Tariff Commission is a fact-finding body.

Mr. MORSE. But its findings are made too late to be effective or to do any good.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Tariff Commission bases its findings on the facts presented to it, and then the Tariff Commission advises the President that such and such should be done.

I repeat to my good friend, the Senator from Oregon, that if the investigation is made by the Secretary of Agriculture, then in order to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to have an over-all picture in regard to how the entire program affects the producers of other commodities, either the Secretary of Agriculture will have to go to the Tariff Commission or he will have to have a force of his own to look into all these devious problems, if he is to obtain an over-all picture.

Regardless of whether this matter is submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture or not, the President would finally have to go to the Tariff Commission, in the event the Secretary of Agriculture could not give him the over-all picture.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana that under the Magnuson-Morse amendment the department of the Government best qualified to advise the President of the United States in regard to the effect of a proposed agreement on the American farmer will have its day in court, which is not possible under the Senator's proposal.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I have to differ with my good friend the Senator from Oregon, because the proposal the conference committee has made is that the Secretary of Agriculture shall initiate these proceedings.

Mr. MORSE. What good does it do to initiate a proceeding if there is inability to conduct the investigation and to make the findings of fact on the basis of having the department best qualified make the findings of fact?

Mr. ELLENDER. I believe that a great deal of good will be accomplished by making the Secretary of Agriculture responsible by law to initiate the proceedings.

Mr. MORSE. What the Senator is doing is passing the buck to another agency of the Government which experience has shown has not protected the American farmer. That is what the Senators from Oregon and Washington are trying to prevent. The conferees are merely continuing the evil we are seeking to remedy.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am sure my good friend from Oregon would not state to the Senate that if this matter were put entirely into the hands of the Department of Agriculture, that Department would be able to say what effect it would have on the producer of automobiles in Michigan, upon a tire producer in Ohio, or upon other people who are interested in trade agreements. In other words, in order that the President may be able to make up his mind and to follow the suggestions made to him by the Department of Agriculture, he will have to have before him a study of the over-all picture, not merely a statement of how a certain agreement affects wheat, corn, and other things.

Mr. MORSE. We do not seek to prevent that.

Mr. ELLENDER. But it would be prevented if the Tariff Commission is bypassed completely.

Mr. MORSE. We do seek to guarantee to the American farmer that his interests shall be protected as they have not been protected under the administration of the reciprocal-trade agreement program now for some years past.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let me state to my good friend that the Department of Agriculture has made a close study of this matter. The Magnuson-Morse agreement has been before the Department for study for quite some time, and the Department itself is opposed to it. The Department thinks that the agency which ought to perform this function is the one which is equipped to do it, namely, the Tariff Commission.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. MORSE. I am sure the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is perfectly well aware of the fact that when a department is advised as to what an administration policy is, it is not inclined to go against the administration's policy. Of course, we know that the administration is opposed to the Magnuson-Morse amendment. But for the Senator to quote as his star witness the Department of Agriculture itself, does not carry any weight with the Senator from Oregon. But place the power there, and I am satisfied that then for the first time we shall get from the Department of Agriculture the independence of conduct which we ought to get from it.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I am not going to argue further with my good friend on that subject. Before I was interrupted, I was trying to show the position of the various farm organizations on the question of adoption of the conference report. I was reading from a letter addressed to me today by the National Grange. The letter reads as follows:

NATIONAL GRANGE,
Washington, D. C., June 26, 1950.

Hon. ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ELLENDER: It is our opinion that conference report on the Commodity Credit Corporation bill still leaves any tariff adjustments to the discretion of the President. Unless clear-cut authoritative interpretation can be approved by the Senate giving assurance that such adjustments are mandatory, we believe the report should be returned to conference for clarification.

Yours sincerely,

A. S. GOSS,
Master, the National Grange.

I may say that the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment does not make these adjustments obligatory upon the President. Under the conference committee's proposal the President, after the facts are found, after the report is made, must adjust the tariffs, and the extent to which he must adjust them depends upon the findings, of course, whereas under the Magnuson-Morse amendment he does not have to act if he does not want to.

I should like to quote from a telegram that I have this day received from the American Farm Bureau Federation:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 26, 1950.

Hon. ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.:

In compliance with your request concerning the views of the American Farm Bureau Federation relative to the conferees' action on section 22 of H. R. 6567, they are as follows: Section 22 was designed to protect United States agriculture from imports when such imports would cause undue hardships to domestic producers of like commodities. The proposed conference amendment to section 22 does not accomplish the original objective of section 22 to which we are committed by American Farm Bureau Federation resolution.

I invite special attention to this:

If the Congress accepts the conference report, the situation will be improved if the legislative history includes an interpretation of the conference amendment showing it was the intention of the Congress that under the conference amendment section 22 could be invoked when acreage allotments, marketing quotas, or marketing agreements are in force with regard to any agricultural commodity or when surpluses of agricultural commodities are being used for school lunch and other domestic consumer programs.

J. DON PAREL,
Associate Director, American Farm Bureau Federation.

I think I have made that very plain in the debate heretofore, but in order to make it doubly certain, I requested the office of the Secretary of the State to submit their views on this matter.

This is what was said in a letter addressed to me by the Department's Deputy Legal Adviser, Jack B. Tate:

JUNE 26, 1950.

The Honorable ALLEN J. ELLENDER, Sr.,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR ELLENDER: You have asked the opinion of the Department as to what type of measure would be considered sufficient to justify an import quota under the general agreement on tariffs and trade, referred to in the conference report on the proposed amendment to section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

In the opinion of the State Department, the basic question is one of fact. Import quotas would be permitted under the general agreement on tariffs and trade in any case where there is an effective limitation on domestic marketing or production.

That is the point I emphasized previously and on many occasions, particularly last Friday and also here today. The letter continues:

A farm marketing quota, if not set so high as to exceed what the farmers would ordinarily market, would, for example, constitute an effective restriction within the meaning of the agreement. Marketing agreements and orders and farm-acreage allotments are other devices which might also constitute effective restrictions.

Sincerely yours,

JACK B. TATE,
Deputy Legal Adviser.

In other words, there is no doubt that it is the understanding of the conferees on the part of the Senate that farm-marketing quotas constitute effective restrictions on production or marketing. It is also understood that marketing agreements and orders and farm-acreage allotments may also constitute effective restrictions on marketing or production, and that the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture will be accepted as the authoritative judgment with respect to whether a marketing agreement and order or farm-acreage allotments are effective restrictions.

So you will see that that is in line with what the Farm Bureau desired. In other words, the Farm Bureau states that if that interpretation can be made, it would have no objection to the conference report.

I am saying that, with this language and with this interpretation of the language which I have just quoted, the conference report makes it as effective with respect to all of the basic crops and others crops with which it is possible to have effective marketing controls or acreage allotments, as would be the case under the Magnuson-Morse amendment to section 22.

The fifth farm organization consulted by me was the National Farmers Union. As of today, I have received a telegram from the union as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 26, 1950.

Senator A. ELLENDER,

Senate Office Building:

The National Farmers Union strongly urges the adoption this afternoon by the Senate of the conference report on the bill increasing borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation. While we did not favor the adoption of the Magnuson amendment and would prefer that the bill not deal with foreign trade matters, we feel the conference report has modified sufficiently the original Magnuson amendment so that the report should be adopted as it stands. In any case, the provision of the additional price-support monetary authorization is of the utmost gravity to farmers. Commodity Credit needs the additional loaning funds at once if it is to carry out congressional commitments.

RUSSELL B. SMITH.

Mr. President, I feel doubly certain that if all our great farm organizations understood the report which is now before the Senate, and if they knew it was going to be given the interpretation which I have just indicated as coming from the office of the Secretary of State, as well as the interpretation placed upon it by the conferees, they would conclude that the report made to the Senate will be as effective with respect to all our commodities which can be controlled either through marketing agreements or acreage allotment, as would be the case under the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment.

Mr. President, one of the points made by the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] was that a great deal of time would be required for the Tariff Commission to make its investigation. I have before me a few examples of the time required to submit to the President certain findings.

On November 20, 1940, the Chairman of the Advisory Committee to the Council of National Defense recommended to the Tariff Commission the suspension of import quotas on long-staple cotton of one and eleven-sixteenths inches and longer for the duration of the emergency. The committee pointed out that this cotton was urgently needed for the manufacture of balloon and airplane fabrics but was in short supply in the United States. The Tariff Commission ordered an investigation on December 4, 1940, held hearings 1 week later, and issued a report to the President on December 13, 1940. The Commission recommended the suspension of quotas on cotton one and eleven-sixteenth inches and longer. The President issued a proclamation to this effect on December 19, 1940, effective immediately.

In other words, Mr. President, from the time the Commission was asked to make the investigation until the procedure was completed, less than a month transpired.

I have before me quite a number of such examples, but I have only 7 minutes remaining, so I shall ask that there be inserted in the RECORD the rest of these examples showing the time involved by the Tariff Commission in its investigations.

There being no objection, the examples referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

3. SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

Until the proclamation of September 5, 1939, it had been possible for United States cotton that had been sold to Canada and rejected by the purchaser, to be returned to the United States for resale. As a result of the proclamation it was not possible to do so and apparently American cotton exporters had suffered losses. On October 27, 1941, the Under Secretary of Agriculture requested the Tariff Commission to investigate this situation. An investigation was ordered on November 12, 1941, hearings held on December 10, and a report made to the President on February 20, 1942. The report recommended the suspension of quotas on American cotton returned to the United States upon rejection by foreign importers. It was also recommended that the quota be suspended on commercial samples of cotton and cotton waste. The President accepted the report and issued a proclamation on March 31, 1942, effective immediately.

4. THIRD SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

As a result of the trade agreement concluded with Peru on May 7, 1942, it was understood that country quotas on long-staple cotton would be changed to a global quota equal to the total of the country quotas. This change would permit the United States to import the same amount of long-staple cotton despite the adverse effects of the war on certain producers. A request for this change was made to the Tariff Commission by the Secretary of State on May 9, 1942, and an investigation was ordered on May 12. No hearings were held. A report recommending the change was sent to the President on June 8 and a Presidential proclamation embodying this recommendation was issued on June 29, 1942, effective July 29.

5. FOURTH SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

The Secretary of Agriculture requested the Tariff Commission to investigate the situation with regard to harsh or rough cotton under three-fourths of an inch which, as noted above, had not been covered by the President's proclamation of September 5, 1939. An investigation was ordered on September 17, 1946, hearings held on October 14 and 15, and a report issued to the President on December 31, 1946. The Commission recommended a global quota of 70,000,000 pounds on this type of cotton. A Presidential proclamation to this effect was issued on February 1, 1947, and made retroactive to September 20, 1946.

6. FIFTH SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

At the request of the American cotton-textile industry an investigation was ordered on January 23, 1947, to determine whether or not a supplemental quota should be established for long-staple cotton. Hearings were held on February 18, 1947, and a report issued to the President on April 21, 1947. The report recommended a supplemental quota for cotton 1⅜ inches or more but less than 1⅛ inches of 23,094,000 pounds for the quota year ending September 19, 1947. The President issued a proclamation on June 9, 1947, embodying this recommendation; the proclamation became effective on June 14.

7. SIXTH SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

The American cotton-textile industry requested the continuation of a supplemental quota on long-staple cotton for the following quota year. An investigation was ordered on January 15, 1948, hearings held on February 17, 1948, and a report issued to the President on May 14, 1948. The report recommended that no quotas be placed on cotton 1⅜ inches or longer and that a supplemental quota of 18,300,000 pounds be established for cotton over 1 11/16 inches but less than 1⅜ inches. The report was not accepted by the President because of the passage in the interim of the Agricultural Act of 1948. It was requested that the Tariff Commission reconsider the matter.

On July 14, 1948, a revised report was sent to the President, recommending a supplemental quota of 18,000,000 pounds for cotton 1⅛ inches or over and less than 1 11/16 inches. In addition it was recommended that licenses be issued to individual cotton-manufacturing concerns on the basis of their essential needs for the remainder of the quota year ending September 19, 1948. A Presidential proclamation to this effect was issued on July 20, 1948, effective immediately.

8. SEVENTH SUPPLEMENTAL INVESTIGATION

The cotton-textile industry requested a further continuation of a supplemental quota as well as a change in the quota year to permit them to obtain foreign long-staple cotton under the quota under more favorable conditions. An investigation was ordered on June 9, 1949, hearings were held on July 7, 1949, and a report was issued on August 11. The report recommended changing the beginning of the quota year to February 1 each year for cotton 1⅛ inches or more but less than 1 11/16 inches and establishing an interim quota of 16,487,042 pounds for the period September 20, 1949, to January 31, 1950. The President's proclamation which accepted this report was issued on September 3, 1949, effective September 20, 1949.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, some investigations, of course, necessarily require more time than do others. They involve many more problems which might affect many more commodities throughout the country. But I want to stress the point that irrespective of whether the investigations are made by the Secretary of Agriculture or by the Tariff Commission, the study and final action would have to incorporate an over-all consideration of the whole category of problems, and not only the specific article or commodity in question.

I wish to repeat by way of emphasis that if the conference report be adopted section 22 will remain now as law with the exception of several changes that I have previously mentioned. Primarily, instead of the President being responsible for initiating the hearing, the Secretary of Agriculture will be designated by law to do so. If the Secretary of Agriculture believes action should be taken, he shall so advise the President, and if the President agrees that there is reason for relief, the President submits the matter to the Tariff Commission, and the Tariff Commission proceeds, under the law as it is now written, to make its findings.

As I pointed out a while ago, the Tariff Commission covers in its findings not only the commodity in question, but the effect of the proposed change upon other commodities.

That is, if we let a basic commodity come in from a foreign nation, it may be that by allowing its importation in a quantity in excess of what it should be, American producers of that commodity may be seriously affected; but, on the other hand, we must also look into the beneficial effects which might result to the producers of other commodities, such as our manufacturers of automobiles and other goods which are sold in large quantities abroad.

I repeat, that a study as to the general effect can best be made by the Tariff Commission rather than by the Department of Agriculture, which is interested primarily in agriculture.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. What the Senator says in analyzing the differences between the conference report and my amendment is correct as to procedure; but does not the Senator agree that my amendment would streamline that procedure and make it less cumbersome?

Mr. ELLENDER. I cannot agree with my distinguished friend in that respect, because I am convinced that the study must be a broad over-all study. The Department of Agriculture would simply confine its study to agriculture—for example, to the effect of permitting a few more apples to come into this country, and what the result would be with regard to the apple growers of Washington or Virginia. It would have to do something it is not equipped to do, make an over-all study to find out how the agreement as a whole affects the producers of other commodities, and other goods and manufactured products.

We all understand that in entering into an agreement with another nation we are bound to trample on the toes of some of our producers. We cannot escape that. But the over-all results have been good in the past. The Senator knows that. That is why the Senate of the United States has gone on record on several occasions in renewing the President's power to enter into trade agreements, namely, because of the over-all good it does to our entire national economy.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let me ask the Senator this question: There is, of course, is there not, a distinct difference between the conference report and my amendment as to procedure?

Mr. ELLENDER. Not as to procedure, but as to who shall do it; that is all.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The real meat of the coconut is not contained in the conference report at all. I refer to the elimination of subsection (f).

Mr. ELLENDER. But in place of subsection (f)——

Mr. MAGNUSON. Article XI is substituted.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is generally correct. As to the basic crops or any other commodities, on which there can be imposed production or marketing restrictions, the conference report will be as effective with respect to those commodities as would be the Magnuson-Morse amendment.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I do not admit it would have that effect. What we are now doing is to let the State Department accept——

Mr. ELLENDER. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. Under the present law the State Department can enter into an agreement or can amend an existing agreement and it does not have to pay any attention to articles XI and XIX of the general agreement on tariffs and trade, but by the conference report we make the State Department pay attention to it. In other words, the President through the State Department could agree with any foreign nation that section 22 can never be invoked. The conference report will prevent that from happening.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. MAGNUSON] had intended to yield 15 minutes in order that I might speak with reference to the amendment, but because of the lack of time, I ask unanimous consent that the statement which I prepared on the question be made a part of the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, Mr. CAIN's statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Washington wishes to support the Morse-Magnuson amendment to House bill 6567.

Its laudable purpose is one which I have supported for quite some time, but the presence of the amendment today somehow seems to have conveniently coincided in some minds with a year that finds elections taking place. I wish to support the amendment while pointing out that agriculture is but one of the important segments of our Nation's economy. If the amendment is finally made a part of law, and I hope that it will so become, all of us ought to understand that our work of securing reasonable protection for American industry, business, and agriculture has just begun.

Apparently the purpose in taking investigations of injury to domestic farm programs, because of excessive imports, away from the Tariff Commission is that the Department of Agriculture is much more favorably inclined toward home production and fewer imports.

It would not be flattering to any Senator to say that he or his party had just discovered that Agriculture was being seriously set back by excessive imports of some product and that a mistake had been made when the State Department was granted too much power over our farmers.

One can only assume that some among us have been prompted by the obvious needs of the moment to take a very small step in the opposite direction from that consistently taken in earlier tests of our farm and foreign-trade policy.

We had a vote late in the last session of the Congress on a proposal to limit the imports of furs from Russia, and other no-cost or low-cost nations, because literally thousands of our own fur farmers were being ruined by millions and millions of dollars worth of imports.

That amendment would only have given the President authority to impose a quota if domestic fur farmers were being seriously injured by excessive imports.

That vote was so close that just one switch from "nay" to "aye" would have allowed it to clear the Senate.

The same situation occurred on an amendment to limit the imports of oil.

The same thing occurred on the famous peril point amendment, except that the margin was larger, for on September 15, 1949, the amendment was defeated by a vote of 43 to 38.

As far back as you want to investigate, some Senators have consistently voted to increase the power of the State Department to lower tariffs, increase imports, and decrease American output, with the old threadbare, wornout, and completely discredited theory that to do so would be an inducement to foreign nations to reduce their limitations on shipments of goods from the United States.

Almost every country of the world has increased restrictions on imports of American farm goods—not only once, but many times. Not only by increased barriers, but by discriminatory licenses for imports, absolute embargoes, and hundreds of bilateral trades that completely eliminated United States products. Everyone knows it is becoming harder and harder to ship American goods abroad—especially farm goods.

You may be surprised at this information. I was; but it is good evidence of what I have been saying. In 1947 we exported millions of dollars worth of farm products more than we imported. In 1948 we shipped millions of dollars more of agricultural products abroad than we purchased; in 1949, although the margin was much narrower, we still sold more than we imported. Then what happened. All at once we discovered that the tariff give-away program had caught up with us.

In January 1950 we imported $68,000,000 worth of agricultural products more than we exported and if the trend continues, as it is expected to do, we will import this year over a million dollars more of agricultural products than we will export.

Now the American farmer is finding this out, and people in political life are discovering the same thing and are anxious to do some small bit of retracting that will indicate to the voter and the taxpayer that improvements are in sight.

Now there is another important point connected with this effort to reverse the free-trade trend. As was to be expected the State Department sent one of its American representatives up to try to "scotch" the amendment in committee hearings. Mr. Winthrop Brown, whose principal job is to deal with foreign representatives and who is not too interested in the problems of the farmers in our own country, naturally asked the Committee on Agriculture to reject the amendment. The reasons were that it would interfere with our foreign policy.

Mr. Brown was unwilling to admit that any part of the amendment was good, but objected most strenuously to the section that would require the alteration or renegotiation of any agreement containing features repugnant to our farm policy or programs. He said it would be a great blow to this country's prestige to have to nullify any parts of our trade agreements, even though congressional action in the establishing of farm programs had been contradicted in those agreements.

Now it couldn't be any plainer to me that the State Department is worried that it will need to take back some of its concessions if this amendment, as originally proposed, carries.

I want to make this point clear now, why did Mr. Brown object so strongly to this section, unless some of those agreements did contain concessions that were contrary to our internal farm policy? It is a frank admission that the State Department negotiators did offer and did give to foreign nations concessions that contradicted our farm policy.

Now how could this be? I know that paragraph (f) of section 22, which the amendment before us very laudably reverses, does state that no farm program shall be adopted which would contravene any foreign commitment. I know that this carte blanche authorization to our negotiators was slipped into the farm bill by the State Department over the objections of Agriculture and without the knowledge of many legislators. But this was done only a year or two ago—and only one trade agreement has been negotiated since that clause was put into the law—and under that law only one agreement could legally have contained anything that ran contrary to established internal laws.

The State Department, I am told, objects to the amendment because it might require the renegotiation of agreements which contain concessions that obstruct and negate our agricultural program. When the agreements were negotiated there was absolutely nothing in any actual or implied delegation of power to any of our negotiators to make foreign commitments that would run contrary to our farm program. Any commitment so made must have been qualified or it was illegally done and any such agreements should be renegotiated.

It is my information that most trade agreements do contain qualifying sections which allow the United States to make such adjustments as are necessary to enforce and operate its agricultural programs. If this is so, then Mr. Brown is dragging the biggest red herring the administration has yet been caught with, and that is going a long way. If no foreign agreements would need to be altered if this amendment is adopted, then State Department objections are without meaning and indicate only a desire to put something over. If they did actually go beyond their authority and make trade agreements that diametrically oppose domestic legislation, then they should be censured and investigated thoroughly.

I stated that I intended to support the amendment—and that goes for the reversal of paragraph (f) of section 22.

It is indeed a paradox that anyone who opposed the fur amendment and the peril point amendment when the trade agreements law was extended last year should now propose and support a proposition so nearly akin to it.

The peril-point amendment defeated so narrowly last fall was even less of a protective device than this one.

It was a simple requirement that a qualified and expert agency of the Government should give to the President its best judgment concerning how low a tariff might be reduced without seriously injuring a domestic industry.

The report was to be kept secret by the President, even from Members of Congress, and no part of it was to be divulged to anyone unless the President saw fit to cut a rate of duty below the minimum mentioned. Then, and only then, was he to tell Congress what that particular minimum was and give his reason for ignoring it.

How could anything be more fair, simpler, or easier to administer? How could it be as restrictive on our negotiators as this amendment before us? Yet those who are urging that this amendment be adopted did not all vote for the peril-point amendment, not by any means, and the farmers and workers and industry owners who are being accused of a lack of patriotism because they continue to urge "buy American when it is available" are not likely to be fooled by a reversal of policy just before election time.

The proposal of this amendment to H. R. 6567 is a frank admission that its sponsors do not trust the State Department to refrain from injuring domestic farmers and making foreign deals that interfere with the operation of farm programs.

It is a plain, unvarnished invitation to our diplomats to stick to their negotiating and stay within the bounds of their authority. It is a proposal that we turn our agricultural programs over to our agricultural experts and delete them from the category of pawns in the international game of politics.

I am for it, and I congratulate those who have seen the light and seek some reversal of our Nation's free-trade policies.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an insertion in the RECORD?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the shortness of the time, that a statement which I have prepared on the same subject be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, Mr. BUTLER's statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUGH BUTLER

Mr. President, I intend to support the move to send this bill back to conference, because I believe that the Magnuson-Morse amendment is essential to prevent our farm price-support program from being destroyed by imports of surpluses from abroad.

In fact, in my opinion, the Magnuson-Morse amendment does not go far enough. It provides a method of keeping out agricultural imports when those imports are damagaing the domestic program, but the method provided is unfortunately a slow and uncertain one. When we have a control program on any domestic product, we should have promptly and automatically a program of control on imports of the same commodity. It is no use controlling domestic producers if we do not also control imports. In other words, import controls should be just as strict as domestic controls and should go into effect just as promptly.

During the last few years, there have been far too many cases of imports of farm products coming in at such a time and in such a way as to sabotage our efforts here to maintain farm prices at a reasonable level. Millions of pounds of potatoes have been shipped in by Canada at the very same time the Government was buying up millions of pounds of domestic potatoes and destroying them to hold them off the market. Millions of pounds of dried eggs have been shipped in from China during the same period when the Government was purchasing eggs here for drying and storage. Millions of bushels of rye and other grains have been shipped here from Canada, although we have tremendous stocks of these grains in the warehouses bought or taken over by the Government to hold them off the market.

It seems that everyone realizes the absurdity of these contradictory policies except the State Department. Sometimes it almost seems that the State Department wants to sabotage our farm programs. At least it is evident that the State Department does not care very much if the domestic program is damaged by agricultural imports. That is the impression that is given by the record of past attempts to handle this problem.

As stated above, Mr. President, I feel strongly that the Magnuson-Morse amendment does not really go far enough, but it is certainly the minimum that we have a right to insist on if we intend to protect our domestic support programs from interference by these agricultural imports. I very much hope that if this bill is sent back to conference the Senate conferees will be firm and will be able to persuade the managers on the part of the House that we must have this amendment in order to have any effective farm-support policy.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE] who is absent by the leave of the Senate is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] who is also absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea," and the Senator from North Dakota would vote "nay."

The Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] who is necessarily absent is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. If present and voting the Senator from Maine would vote "nay," and the Senator from Georgia would vote "yea."

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS]. If present and voting the Senator from Iowa would vote "nay," and the Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "yea."

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 35, nays 35, as follows:

PROMOTION OF VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II IN FIELD SERVICE OF POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—VETO MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 627)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
June 26, 1950.

The House of Representatives having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 87) entitled "An act relating to the promotion of veterans of World War II in the field service of the Post Office Department," returned by the President of the United States with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was—

Resolved, That the said bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the message from the President of the United States, which was read by the legislative clerk.

(For President's message, see today's proceedings of the House of Representatives on p. 9193.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the message from the President and the bill will lie on the table, and the bill will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That classified postal employees or classified substitute postal employees who are in the postal service on the date of enactment of this act, or who shall enter such service after such date but prior to July 1, 1950, and subsequent to service in the military or naval forces of the United States during World War II, terminated under honorable conditions, who have not reached the maximum grade of salary shall receive credit for time served in the military or naval forces to the extent that they have not already received credit for such military or naval service in determining their salary grade. Such credit shall be on a pro rata basis for each year served in the military or naval forces. On the basis of such credit, each employee to whom this section applies shall be promoted to the grade to which such postal employee or substitute postal employee would have progressed had his original appointment been to grade 1.

SEC. 2. Substitute postal employees who failed of promotion to regular because they were in the military or naval forces during World War II shall, for the purpose of determining their postal salary, be held to have been promoted to such regular position as of the date a vacancy, to which they as senior substitute could have been promoted, occurred.

SEC. 3. No person shall, by reason of the enactment of section 1 of this act, be entitled to any compensation for any period prior to the effective date of this act.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this act, the term "World War II" means the period beginning September 16, 1940, and ending June 30, 1946, both dates inclusive.

ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT SENATE AND HOUSE RECORDING FACILITY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 332) providing for the establishment of a joint Senate and House recording facility, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. BENTON, Mr. GILLETTE, and Mr. MUNDT conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, June 26, 1950, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2269. An act to provide for the enlistments of aliens in the Regular Army; and

S. 3771. An act to provide transportation on Canadian vessels between Skagway, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, between Haines, Alaska, and other points in Alaska, and between Hyder, Alaska, and other points in Alaska or the continental United States, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the transportation.

AMENDMENT OF MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

Mr. McKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, it is now my purpose to ascertain whether there will be objection to a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the unfinished business, Senate bill 3809, next Wednesday at 4 o'clock. That is the bill to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to state to the distinguished acting majority leader that in view of the statement made by several witnesses for the Administration before the Appropriations Committee this morning it seems to me it would be preferable to withhold the unanimous-consent request, if the Senator is going to offer one, until at least tomorrow. I shall be glad at that time to try to work out a unanimous-consent agreement. If the request were put over until tomorrow it would give us time to contact members on this side respecting their wishes in the matter. I believe tonight would be too early to make such a request. I shall be glad to cooperate and try to secure a unanimous-consent agreement later on, possibly tomorrow, when debate is continued on the measure.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement of the distinguished minority leader. I should like to suggest, however, that it is very important to obtain a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the measure, particularly in view of the conditions in the world today, and also in order that Senators may know how to govern themselves in line with the legislative program. During next week will be the Fourth of July. While it is not planned to have any particular vacation at that time, Senators will want to know what measures will be brought up and what measures will be voted upon. I respectfully suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that it is important to come to a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the measure on next Wednesday, if possible. If we cannot have an agreement to vote on Wednesday, let us have an agreement to vote on Thursday. But an agreement to vote on any later date would probably inconvenience many Senators.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to ask the distinguished acting majority leader, now that he has mentioned it, what the plans will be for the Fourth of July and the day prior thereto, which will be Monday? Is the acting majority leader in a position to state that there might be a recess for a period running from possibly Friday to Wednesday; or does the acting majority leader now announce that there will be a session of the Senate on Monday?

Mr. McFARLAND. I would prefer that the majority leader make an announcement as to that matter for himself when he returns. He is absent now because of illness in his family. I understand he has previously stated that there would be no recess except over the Fourth of July, and only for that day.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. So it is now contemplated that there will be a session on Monday the 3d of July?

Mr. McFARLAND. Unless the majority leader announces to the contrary.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that I think it is well at the earliest date to fix the time to vote on the mutual-defense assistance measure. I believe it will be in the interest of those who want to debate it to know when it will be voted upon. If a date for voting is not fixed Senators will delay presenting their positions with respect to the bill. If today we fix the time for voting on the bill the Senators can guide themselves much better than if a definite time is not fixed. I hope the Senator will agree to a vote being had sometime tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to try to work out a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the military-assistance bill. I do not believe that tonight is the time to make that unanimous-consent request, but I will cooperate and will endeavor to find out what are the wishes of all Senators on this side. The suggestion for a unanimous-consent request comes at a very late hour today. I desire to contact several Senators on this side of the aisle, particularly one or two of them who are away. If the unanimous-consent request is presented tomorrow, I shall be very glad to try to work out a program satisfactory to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The only thing is that if we wait until tomorrow, and agree to vote tomorrow——

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, Mr. President, I am quite positive the distinguished Senator from Texas does not feel we should vote on the bill tomorrow. It has scarcely been debated.

Mr. CONNALLY. I meant Wednesday.

Mr. WHERRY. The distinguished acting majority leader has made the point that by Friday several Senators will want to leave, to make some speeches perhaps in advance of the Fourth of July, even though a recess is not taken over Monday, and that possibly it is best that we vote before those Senators leave. I agree with that suggestion. But in view of the importance of the measure and in view of the fact that statements have been made that recommendations might be coming forthwith from the President, I feel that tomorrow is the earliest time we should consider a unanimous-consent request for a vote.

Mr. CONNALLY. I feel sure that Senators on the other side of the aisle will agree that we ought to vote on the measure at the earliest possible date.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The bill was reported from the committee unanimously. I do not think much time will be occupied in discussing it. The longer the time for voting is put off, the longer Senators will wait and put off their presentations, and then at the last minute they will not be able to present their views.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I believe the distinguished Senator from Texas will agree with me that I am in favor of obtaining unanimous-consent agreements providing for votes as expeditiously as possible. The Senator knows he will have my cooperation in attempting to secure a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the pending bill, but I feel that tonight is too early a time to make the request. I am not prepared now because I have not even contacted Members on this side of the aisle relative to their wishes. I certainly will do so, and if the unanimous-consent request is presented tomorrow we will be able to give the information the acting majority leader is now seeking.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No request has been submitted, and the Chair understands objection has been interposed. Therefore there is nothing before the Senate on the subject.

Mr. McKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment so I may submit a request?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield if it will take only a moment.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, my request is that I be recorded as voting affirmatively on the last vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is out of order. The Senator cannot be recorded as voting after the result of the vote has been announced.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS, 1950—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on House bill 8567, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see pp. 9191–9192 of House proceedings for June 22, 1950.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Tennessee please inform the Senate what is at issue in connection with the conference report and whether the appropriation under the conference report is larger or smaller than the appropriation under the bill as passed by the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall do so.

Mr. President, under the rules, certain amendments made by the House of Representatives to amendments adopted by the Senate have come back to the Senate and will have to be voted on by the Senate. Three other amendments will have to be voted upon by the House. I think all Senators understand that procedure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. First the Senate must act on the conference report, and then the amendments will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that is the point. At this time I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Tennessee whether he will give us the information I have requested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are three or four House amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand; but I think an outline of the amendments should be given to us now.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to do so. The amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, and 24 have been agreed to by the House of Representatives, which makes an amendment to each one. The only matter in controversy, not yet agreed to, is the action of the Senate in voting an appropriation of $2,000,000 for disaster relief for the Senator's section of the country.

Mr. WHERRY. That was reduced from $2,000,000 to less than $1,000,000, was it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; to $750,000.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Tennessee whether I am correct in understanding that the item of $750,000 as an emergency appropriation needed for the repair and restoration of the levees around Lake Okeechobee is still in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was in the bill as it came to us from the House of Representatives, and the Senate did not touch it. It is still in the bill. If the Senate will permit the conference report to be agreed to, I am sure that item will remain in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter is not in conference, is it?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but it cannot be acted upon finally until the report is agreed to.

Mr. President, the Senate must consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, and 24.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must advise the Senator that the conference report itself must be agreed to before it will be in order for the Senate to act on the amendments of the House to the particular Senate amendments referred to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought the conference report had been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it has not been agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. In view of the confusion existing in the Senate Chamber, it is no wonder that there can be a mistake about that matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 8567, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
UNITED STATES,
June 26, 1950.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27 to the bill (H. R. 8567) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes, and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SALARIES AND EXPENSES OF DISTRICT ATTORNEYS, ETC.

"For an additional amount for 'Salaries and expenses of district attorneys, etc.,' $270,000, which shall be derived by transfer from the appropriation for 'Salaries and expenses, claims of persons of Japanese ancestry, 1950'."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: Strike out the figure "$440,000" in line 3 of said amendment and insert in lieu thereof "$375,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24 to said bill and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$2,000,000" in line 4 of said amendment insert "$750,000."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, and 24.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I thank the Vice President and the Senate.

Mr. MILLIKIN subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to invite the attention of the distinguished senior Senator from Arizona to the conference report accompanying the bill H. R. 8567. On page 4 I notice the following:

Amendment No. 23 appropriates $2,000,000 for forest pest control instead of $3,620,000 as proposed by the Senate, such amount to be available from May 29, 1950, and all obligations for such purpose incurred after such date to be charged to the appropriation herein provided.

May I ask the distinguished Senator for an explanation of that?

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senate provided in the amendment as follows:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available from and including May 29, 1950, for the purposes of such appropriation. All obligations incurred during the period between May 29, 1950, and the date of enactment of this act in anticipation of such appropriation are hereby ratified and confirmed if in accordance with the terms thereof.

The House conferees contended that that could not be included in the law, because it was an additional appropriation. But my understanding is that the language of this report accomplishes the same purpose as does the language the Senate inserted in the bill.

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is the purpose of the language, is it?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I thank the distinguished Senator.

AMENDMENT OF LAWS RELATING TO UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY AND UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7058, Calendar No. 1861.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7058) to amend laws relating to the United States Military Academy and the United States Naval Academy, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Armed Services with an amendment, on page 3, after line 12, to strike out:

(c) One hundred and eighty cadets from among enlisted members of the Army of the United States and the Air Force of the United States. Each component (Regular and Reserves) of these services may nominate three candidates for each available vacancy from among their enlisted members, who have served in an active duty or active training status in such component not less than 1 year, to compete for admission at the annual competitive entrance examination. Such nominations shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary concerned may prescribe. The vacancies will be filled from among such qualified competitors making the highest proficient averages in the order of merit established at the competitive entrance examination, without regard to the service or component thereof from which the candidates are appointed.

And insert:

(c) One hundred and eighty cadets from among enlisted members of the Army of the United States and the Air Force of the United States as follows:

Ninety from the Regular components (Regular Army and Regular Air Force);

Ninety from the Reserve components (National Guard of the United States, the Air National Guard of the United States, the Organized Reserve Corps, and the Air Force Reserve).

Three candidates may be nominated from each component (Regular and Reserve) of the Army of the United States and the Air Force of the United States for each available vacancy for their respective components from among the enlisted members thereof to compete for admission at the annual competitive entrance examination. Such nominations shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary concerned may prescribe. The vacancies for the Regular and the Reserve components will be filled from among such qualified competitors of the respective components making the highest proficiency averages in the order of merit established at the competitive entrance examination, who have served in an active-duty or active-training status (including training performed by members of the National Guard of the United States and the Air National Guard of the United States under provisions of sections 92, 94, 97, and 99 of the National Defense Act, as amended) in such component not less than 1 year.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that enactment of the bill will place the Naval Academy laws and the Military Academy laws in the same category. The bill eliminates the differences which now exist in that respect.

Three major changes will be made by the enactment of the bill.

The first major change provides that 90 enlisted men of the Regular Army and the Regular Air Force, and 90 enlisted members of the Reserve and National Guard of the Army and Air Force, may be enrolled in the Military Academy at one time.

The second major change would make uniform the minimum and maximum ages for admission to the two Academies, and would permit the normal peacetime maximum age for admission to the Naval Academy to be increased from 21 to 22 years.

The third major change made by the bill would give the Secretary of the Navy the same authority, which the Secretary of the Army now has, to appoint to the Naval Academy individuals to take the place of principals or alternates who fail to be admitted to the Naval Academy.

Those are the three principal changes made by the bill.

There are several minor changes which merely make uniform certain provisions of existing law.

The bill is reported unanimously from the Armed Services Committee, and I hope it will be passed at this time, in order that the changes may go into effect this year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RESOLUTIONS OF VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS, DEPARTMENT OF NEBRASKA

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD the contents of four resolutions which were submitted by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of Nebraska, and I should like to invite the attention of the Senate to one of the four resolutions. It pertains directly to the junior Senator from Wisconsin, and I think it should be very pleasing to him, because the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of Nebraska, are very definitely behind him in his campaign against communism.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator from Nebraska. I also feel deeply grateful to the Veterans of Foreign Wars who adopted the resolution. It gives me added confidence in our veterans' organizations.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution opposing the Hoover Commission plan on veterans' preference

Whereas the Hoover Commission on Government Reorganization recommended that veterans' preference in Government service be sharply curtailed by dividing applicants for employment in four categories and giving veterans preference only within each group; and

Whereas this same plan would sharply curtail veterans' preference on reduction in force by giving a veteran 1 year of credit for each 6 months' military service and thereafter competing for retention on equal basis with nonveterans; and

Whereas the adoption of such a plan would result in the discharge of thousands of veterans and would lessen opportunity in the future for appointment of veterans to Government service; and

Whereas the present principle of veterans' preference has been in existence for over 70 years and not only have veterans benefited from such preference but also the whole concept of public service: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Thirtieth Annual Encampment of the Department of Nebraska, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, held at Grand Island, Nebr., on June 11–13, 1950, That the National Legislative Service be directed to oppose any reorganization plan or any legislation which would result in carrying out any part of the recommendation of the Hoover Commission as set forth above.

Resolution urging Senate approval of VFW pension bill, H. R. 4617

Whereas the House of Representatives on June 1, 1949, passed the VFW pension bill, H. R. 4617, by a vote of 365 for and only 27 against; and

Whereas in substance this bill does little more than write into law the present VA regulations relating to non-service-connected disability pensions; and

Whereas the bill liberalizes existing law by awarding the present $72 pension for veterans aged 65 years by presuming the veteran is permanently and totally disabled and unemployable; and

Whereas the bill, H. R. 4617, has been apparently pigeon-holed in the Senate Finance Committee and unless the bill clears the Senate this session, all of the work of the VFW which brought the measure safely through the House will have come to naught: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by this Thirtieth Annual Encampment of the Department of Nebraska, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, held at Grand Island, Nebr., on June 11–13, 1950, That immediate steps be taken to prevail upon the United States Senate to consider and approve this vital legislation before the adjournment of the Eighty-first Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the Department Adjutant be directed to send, in behalf of the Department Encampment, telegrams to the two United States Senators from Nebraska, urging them to do all within their power to expedite approval of this vital veterans' legislation.

Resolution 17

Whereas the threat of communism to our way of life and to our Government has caused grave concern throughout the Nation; and

Whereas persons who are or were Communists or communistic sympathizers or fellow travelers, and held high positions in our Government, have been revealed as such through their convictions in our courts; and

Whereas it is possible that there yet remain in high positions within our Government, a number of persons who believe in or are sympathetic to communistic policies; and

Whereas the retention of any person in any governmental position who has any connection with, or is friendly to any theory of government tainted in the least with communistic philosophy, is critically dangerous to our theory of government and to our way of life: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this thirtieth annual convention of the Department of Nebraska, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, assembled in Grand Island, Nebr., this 13th day of June 1950, place ourselves on record as being absolutely opposed to any individual in any governmental position, who is in sympathy with Communistic philosophy; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Member of Congress from Nebraska, demanding that they lend their immediate and active support toward an impartial investigation to determine if there are any Communists or fellow travelers employed in governmental positions, and if so, to take steps to insure the immediate firing of any such individual.

Resolution 18

Whereas Senator JOSEPH MCCARTHY, of Wisconsin, has almost single-handed led the attack in the present movement to eliminate Communists and communistic sympathizers from our Federal Government: Therefore be it

Resolved by this thirtieth annual encampment of the Department of Nebraska, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, assembled in Grand Island, Nebr., this 13th day of June 1950, That a vote of gratitude for services rendered be voted Senator MCCARTHY, and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to him, and to each Member of Congress from Nebraska.

COMMUNISTS IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I have before me a letter from Mr. J. A. Kapmarski, who is editor of America's largest Polish daily newspaper. As well as being the largest Polish paper in America, it is also the oldest.

This letter I think should be of considerable interest to the Senate, in that it indicates that the American people are intelligently following the present attempt to clean Communists out of the State Department.

This letter comments upon the State Department's official statement answering a speech which I recently made in Milwaukee, Wis. At this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the body of the RECORD the speech which was made by me at Milwaukee.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Fellow Americans, fellow Republicans, I am sure all of you realize how deeply I appreciate the honor and the privilege of being asked to make the keynote speech at this Republican State convention.

There are a vast number of issues vital to the Republican Party and to the Nation which should be discussed. I shall attempt to give you an over-all picture of what I consider the issue which towers above all others in importance. It is an issue of the American people versus communism. Unless this fight is won by the American people, then the other issues which we today consider important will fade into insignificance. This is a fight, ladies and gentlemen, which over the past years the American people have been losing at an alarming rate. "Why is this so?"

Is it because we are less intelligent than the Communists? Is it because we can't match them in courage? Is it because their devotion to atheism is greater than our devotion to God? Is it because we are less willing to stand up and fight for what we think is right?

The answer to all those questions is "No." Then, what is the answer? Is it in the leadership with which we are now saddled? To that, my answer is "Yes," and I challenge anyone to find another answer.

As you know many times during the past years the administration has been accused of protecting Communists in high places. With very few exceptions, however, the accusers have ended up as political corpses—victims of the all-out campaign of vilification and smear launched by the vast taxpayer-supported press corps of the Government agencies and supported by the left-wing, phoney "liberal" press and radio commentators. The principal purpose of this type of smear is to discourage Senators and Congressmen from risking their political futures attempting to clean Communists out of our Government.

Since we started this current fight against Communists in our Government, the screaming, squealing and whining smear, as you know, is something almost beyond conception.

Today I shall refer to a few photostats and other documents. To save the time of reading them I have prepared about 2,000 complete sets of these documents for you.

At this point, ladies and gentlemen, let me make it clear that when I talk about fighting Communists, I don't mean fighting communism. One of the most harmless and useless but politically popular sports in this Nation for the past number of years has been shadow boxing with communism.

In fact you will find the entire smear brigade of the left-wing press, the fellow travelers and the Communists themselves regularly doing a job of damning communism in general terms.

Alger Hiss, Julian Wadleigh, and all of the top Communists were willing to criticize communism. However, it wasn't communism as a theory in our State Department that sold Poland into Communist slavery, nor Rumania, Bulgaria, Albania, Latvia, Hungary, Lithuania, Estonia and Czechoslovakia. It wasn't communism as a theory that betrayed into slavery 400,000,000 of our Chinese allies. It was particular Communists—men and men with names. They do not bear the symbol of the traitorous act upon their arms. They are not the bearded Hollywood version of a Communist. They are the smooth, slick, artists who do an excellent job of sugar-coating and selling their wares.

Alger Hiss, as you will recall, was labeled as one of the nicest men who had ever worked in the State Department, but those Americans who exposed this particular Communist, Alger Hiss, were smeared, defiled and damned.

It was not communism as a theory which placed the atheistic gangster of the Kremlin astride Europe and Asia. It was not an idea. It was not a book. It was not a manifesto. It was specific Communists—men and women willing to do the bidding of the Kremlin.

You can condemn communism in general terms, in the Acheson manner with a lace handkerchief, a silk glove, and with a Harvard accent, if you please. But you can't fight Communists in that fashion. I know of not one single reason why Communists should be handled with kid gloves. They don't use kid gloves or powder puffs on us. Did the Russians use powder puffs and kid gloves on that dark day when they massmurdered the entire officer corps of the Polish army, which was their ally? It was not power puffs which tore the wounds through which flowed the life blood which drenched the floor of Katyn Forest on that infamous day of treachery. The graves which were uncovered in Katyn Forest showed that not powder puffs, but soft-nosed bullets tore the life out of those unarmed trusting Polish soldiers. Let that be a lesson to those who would make an ally of Communists.

Are the 10,000,000 anti-Communist slave laborers toiling in Siberian salt mines handled with kid gloves and powder puffs? For nearly 20 years we have allowed dilettante diplomats to do the "fighting" for us with kid gloves in perfumed drawing rooms. The time has come to pin-point individually the most dangerous Communists and if lumberjack tactics are the only kind they understand, then we shall use those tactics.

The administration's coddling and protecting of Communists in our Government poses a grave danger in addition to those generally discussed. Now that the complete Communist infiltration of the high levels of our Government is being exposed, the administration feels it must do something to convince the American people that it is against communism. Hence, the sort of thing which we witnessed the other day when the chairman of the whitewash committee, Mr. TYDINGS, who is also chairman of the Armed Services Committee, predicted imminent war with Russia.

I accuse this administration of warmongering abroad while it permits the enemy within our gates to operate with impunity. If we are engaged in a cold war, justifying the expenditure of billions of dollars of your money—your money, ladies and gentlemen, because there is no such thing as Government money—then there is no excuse for the coddling of fellow travelers, the concealment of Communists, the obstruction of justice in the prosecution of traitors.

Why this conspiracy to prevent the exposure of the other Alger Hisses in our Government? Where does the trail of treason lead? Whom does it involve? Why does the high-powered smear-bund go into operation the instant one of those connected with the formulation of policy favorable to communism is actually named?

So far those who object to our methods in this present fight have offered as their only alternative that we go back to the method used for the past 16 years during which the Communists have been permitted to take control of our State Department, infiltrate our Government, and work with the Soviet Union to accomplish the two major Russian aims:

1. To create a Red China; and
2. To create a Red Poland.

These two major Communist aims have been no more secret than were Hitler's aims in Mein Kampf.

First, let's briefly review the background on today's situation. About 4 months ago, during a Lincoln Day speaking tour, I quoted from a copy of a letter from the Secretary of State to Congressman SABATH. The letter is among the documents being furnished you.

This letter reveals the Communists' success in the initial stages of the postwar Communist infiltration of the State Department. This letter shows that the State Department insisted on hiring 205 individuals who had been declared unfit for Government service by the President's own security and loyalty board.

At that time I sent the President a wire asking that he immediately get the names of those 205 individuals and have Acheson explain whether they are still on the payroll and if so, why. After 3½ months, the State Department has finally explained that they still have approximately 50 of those individuals on the payroll, but they have not explained why.

At the time I asked the President to get the names of those 205 individuals, I told him I had the names of 57 individuals whose files would indicate that they were either Communists or loyal to the party.

My continued investigation has increased that list to 81, which cases were given to the Senate. Since then as the result of additional investigation I have given them 25 more names, totaling 106.

In that connection I have here a limited number of photostats showing that the FBI gave the State Department a detailed chart 3 years ago showing that there were a total of 124 Soviet agents, Communists, Communist sympathizers, and suspects in the State Department. Two months later 106 of those individuals who were listed by the FBI as shown in this photostat were still working in the State Department and of course handling secret material.

I pointed out to the Senate 4 days ago that some of those men who the FBI listed as Soviet agents are still working in the State Department shaping our foreign policy at this very moment.

My answer to the State Department's almost daily official statements saying no proof, no proof, no proof—like a broken record—is that in my book when the FBI examines its files and officially labels individuals as Soviet agents, Communists, and sympathizers, that is proof enough to satisfy me even though it won't satisfy the State Department.

The American people call upon the Democratic administration to get rid of that dangerous Communist debris now. They are in complete power. They have all the information necessary to prosecute. If they don't do it now, then just as certain as you sit here this afternoon, the Republicans will after the fall elections.

And ladies and gentlemen, in my book when the Federal Bureau of Investigation says these men are Communist agents, when the FBI sends over a formal report to the State Department saying we have the evidence, that to me is proof despite all the screaming and squealing of those who say "McCarthy, you should not expose those traitors; you are injuring those poor people; you are smearing them; and you are making the Red Dean of Fashion, poor Mr. Acheson, very, very unhappy."

At the time the cases were presented to the Senate, I pointed out to it that the material in the files was developed at a cost of millions of dollars to the taxpayers and by thousands of investigators working over a period of years and that, therefore, the proof in each case had to be gotten from the files as it would be clearly impossible for me in a period of a few months to single-handedly do the job which had taken thousands of men millions of man-hours to do over a period of years. The Senate unanimously agreed with this. Not a voice or a vote was raised against the motion to subpena all of the files and get at the true facts.

After the Senate voted to get the files, the President first said he would make files available only to clear innocent people. He next said he would cooperate in every way to disprove McCarthy's charges. He later stated that no files would be opened and that the black-out which he decreed when Alger Hiss was exposed would continue. Finally, however, a new plan was hit upon. He announced that he would make available not all of the files, but the loose leaf, raped, and denuded State Department files in some of the cases—files, which, according to a House committee report based upon an FBI survey, had been extensively tampered with.

My friends in the State Department tell me there was really a good job of spring house cleaning done on those files. One of the documents I am giving you will show how easily that rifling job could be done.

The administration's highly paid press staff, working with the Tydings Committee, has hit upon a method of operation designed to keep the sordid picture in the State Department from public view.

This is their point-7 plan:

1. Have the President keep under lock and key the proof while feeding out a few raped and denuded files.

2. Have Chairman Tydings and his staff go all-out in an attempt to make it impossible to force proof down the throat of the committee.

3. Keep secret that evidence which will expose Communists and make public that evidence which will serve to whitewash.

4. Turn loose the State Department's entire press corps and the Communists' poison-pen artists to smear and attack witnesses who will expose Communists.

5. Deny me the usual right of a Senator to cross-examine witnesses.

In this connection let me point out that while I was responsible for the creation of the committee, I have no power whatsoever over its actions. The committee is controlled completely by the Democratic majority and every vote obstructing my efforts to forcefeed them with proof has been a 3 to 2 straight party-line vote.

6. Deny the Republican minority the right to subpena witnesses.

7. Have the committee's high-paid whitewash staff interview any witnesses whom I suggest and refuse to call them if their evidence would prove the existence of Communists or dangerous individuals in our State Department.

In this connection I have enclosed in the documents a telegram from the head Security officer of OSS which explains what the committee whitewash stooges do to a witness who is willing to testify under oath about Communists in government.

Strangely, for the first time a committee, which has been assigned the task of exposing Communists has received not one word of criticism from any Communist source. Every other committee of the Congress which has been assigned to a task such as this, and has then set about its job, has been damned from hell to breakfast and the members thereof subjected to the typical all-out Communist smear. This time, however, the mud-slinging brigade has been careful not to let even one little speck mar the senatorial toga of either Tydings or McMahon, who control the committee, or of Lucas, who engineered them into this job.

The administration was successful in stalling the Alger Hiss prosecution for 10 years.

The administration was successful in stalling the Kansas City vote fraud cases until the statute of limitations had run out.

It has been successful in apologizing for the Acheson-Jessup clique and their Communists in the State Department—the men who promoted Stalin's design to wash our shores on one side with a Red Pacific and on the other with a Red Atlantic. It now hopes for equal success in stalling the infamous, traitorous Amerasia spy case—a case which I have named as the key to the Soviet spy network, which extends deep into the State Department.

Ladies and gentlemen, the time has long since passed during which Americans can safely blind their eyes and close their ears to what was the creeping threat of communism, but which now has become a racing doom closing in our shores each day. The time has come for the 152,000,000 American people to notify this administration that they shall not stand idly by while a group of untouchables in the State Department—either through incompetence or traitorous acts, or a combination of both—plan with Moscow the communistic enslavement of the world.

Even in the face of the administration's decision to protect Communists and traitors in government at all costs, cases are being slowly and laboriously proven.

As an example, I would like to give you the complete case proven on Dr. Philip Jessup, the State Department's Ambassador-at-Large.

You will find all the documents and photostats to which I refer with those being furnished you.

This is the man who, under the guidance of Lattimore, is determining to a large extent our far-eastern policy. Only recently he returned from a trip to London with Acheson where they planned world strategy—the Acheson-Lattimore-Jessup strategy of hitting Communists at the front door with a silk handkerchief while they beat the brains out of your friends at the back door.

The documentary evidence shows that Jessup belonged to five organizations which had been officially declared as fronts for and doing the work of the Communist Party. A description of those Communist fronts is among the documents furnished you. I have with me several photostats of the letterheads and programs of each of those Communist fronts which proudly bear his name. Unfortunately, I was not able to have complete sets with the other documents for you. You may look at the copies here on the stand if you care to.

Also, Jessup was in charge of the publication of a Communist front known as the Institute of Pacific Relations. This publication under Jessup spearheaded the Communist Party line and spewed forth the Communist Party line perfumed sewage. The sworn testimony before the committee is that Communist writers were used by this publication extensively. This publication was supported by Communist money. Along with the material being furnished you are photostats of checks totaling $6,000, all signed by the self-proclaimed Communist, Frederick Vanderbilt Field.

It is possible that Ambassador Jessup was so naive or so dumb that he did not know why the Communists were supporting his organization. But you can be dead certain that the Communists knew what their money was buying.

Now, when it was called to Truman's attention that his Ambassador-at-Large was affiliated with Communist-front organizations and had run a publication which was preaching the Communist Party line and employed Communist writers and that it was supported by Communist money, immediate action was taken. And what do you think that action was, ladies and gentlemen? This is all a matter of record. No secret about it. Mr. Jessup was given top-secret clearance to all A- and H-bomb information.

You understand that this information about Ambassador Jessup was not developed by the committee. It was forced down the throat of the committee. It was developed with tremendous difficulty. I am sure you realize how difficult it is to get photostats of checks that are 5 or 6 years old and get them from hostile sources. But still, every day you hear the State Department press corps through press releases and the left-wing press shout McCarthy has furnished no proof.

When I originally charged that Jessup's file showed that he had an affinity for Communist causes and that he was, therefore, unfit to be our Ambassador-at-Large, there was a great hue and cry that Jessup was being smeared, and that this was an irresponsible charge. Even some of my good friends said, "You should not have overstated the case." Ladies and gentlemen, this was a great understatement. Since the proof which I am presenting to you was laboriously dug out, I can add to the original statement that not only does he have a great affinity for Communist causes, but also a great affinity for Communist associates; a great affinity for the Communist Party line; and the Communist-line publication over which he had editorial control, had a great affinity for Communist money.

This brief review of the facts is very necessary because of the type of reporting being done by the largest newspaper in the State—the Milwaukee Journal. I would like to give you one of the many examples of the extent to which this paper deliberately and grossly prostitutes the freedom of the press.

As you will recall, the first witness whom I asked the committee to call was Louis Budenz. Louis Budenz had been one of the top members of the Communist Party. He was editor of the Communist Daily Worker. He sat in on the most secret meetings of the top policy makers of the Communist Party in this country. He finally broke with the party completely and since has been invaluable to the Government in convicting dangerous Communists. For example, he was on the stand 10 days during the trial of the eleven top Communists who were convicted largely on the basis of his evidence. He testified for the United States Government in some 9 other important cases.

When I asked that he be called, I stated that he could testify that Lattimore was a member of the Communist Party. All those interested in the case were watching to see whether he would so testify.

As you will recall, Louis Budenz testified that as editor of the Daily Worker he had to know all the names of the top members of the party and that he was kept officially informed of those topmen whom he was to treat as members of the party.

He testified that Lattimore was known to him as a member of the party.

He testified further that Lattimore was a member of a Red cell in the Institute of Pacific Relations, of which Jessup was also long a member and officer.

He testified that Lattimore was so high up in the party that when there was a change in the Communist Party line in 1943, the orders were transmitted to the American politburo through Owen Lattimore.

Let me read the Journal headline reporting the Budenz testimony. Budenz says Lattimore aids Reds but refuses to call him Communist. The subhead is "No, No," his answer at Senate hearing to flat question about party membership.

This was no honest mistake. They had been watching for this evidence for weeks and hoping that Budenz would fail to confirm MCCARTHY's statement that he would testify that Lattimore was a member of the party. They had available to them all three press services. They had one of their top and very competent reporters in Washington.

Now let me show how deliberately dishonest was this prostitution of the press for their purpose. They took a question which was asked of Louis Budenz in regard to an article which he had written for Colliers magazine. He was asked whether or not in that article he had named Lattimore as a Communist. He said, "No, no, no," and explained that he had not even mentioned Lattimore in the article.

The Journal then headlined to its readers that Budenz refused to name Lattimore as a Communist. This, even though for 2 hours Budenz under oath repeatedly stated that Lattimore was a Communist and went into detail on the proof of Lattimore's membership in the party—not only membership but the fact that he was so important that he was used to transmit a change in the party line to the Communist Party in this country.

Just so you will fully appreciate the comparison between the Journal's distorted reporting and some of the other papers picked at random, let me show you a few of the other papers.

If this were the only time that the news was so badly twisted and distorted, you could write it off as just an unfortunate mistake. However, this type of reporting on the Communist fight is the rule and not the exception of the Milwaukee Journal.

In discussing the Journal there is danger of doing an injustice to the vast number of honest, loyal Americans who work for the paper. I want to make it very clear that I refer only to that clique who control and are responsible for the prostitution of what could be a great midwestern paper. So much for the Journal at this time.

Rather than discuss the proof on some of the other men named, let's discuss the results of their actions—for if the Soviet Government and its Communist legions conquer the world, it will make little difference to us whether those who led us to destruction were Communists or dupes. It will make little difference whether they were Moscow's willing tools or men without faith or integrity or courage.

The big gangster in the Kremlin is after one thing—results. He cares not who does his dirty work. He cares not whether they are sanctimonious or depraved so long as they get him the results he is after.

Now I would like to briefly discuss the most vicious fraud ever perpetrated upon the American people in the history of this Republic.

It is the Lattimore-Acheson plan for the Soviet conquest of the Pacific. Mr. Lattimore master-minded it. He admits it. He not only confesses it but shouts out to the world that this is the child of his brain.

This is what he says in referring to one of our allies when he wants to turn over to Communist slavery:

"The thing to do, therefore, is to let South Korea fall, but not to let it look as though we pushed it."

This, ladies and gentlemen, by the architect of our State Department far-eastern policy.

This is an evil thing to behold. It spells ruin for freemen behind a cloak of fraud that deceives and betrays America. It is the fine art of covering Communist tracks with double dealing. It is the whole scheme of ideological barbarism laid bare.

Ladies and gentlemen, does the impact of Lattimore's master plan for one of our allies—bought, lock, stock, and barrel by Acheson not for Korea but for the entire Pacific—sound like an American talking?

This is what Lattimore means—spend American dollars and American lives to hold South Korea, but just enough to make it look as though we are trying.

This is now the plan for the rest of Asia. We can only judge them on past performances.

Let's look further at the record. At Lattimore saying—and Acheson acting—on the suggestion that the forces of freedom in Asia should be pushed to their doom by the left hand of the State Department while its right hand holds forth token aid—just enough to fool those of us who are paying for it—you and me—enough to fool those who may die for it, if you please.

The Lattimore-Acheson Axis served the purpose of the Kremlin in China—it delivered millions of people into Communist slavery plus vast areas of land.

Let's just take a brief look at some of the evidence which Acheson has produced on Acheson. This is the Acheson who reinstated and put in charge of personnel in the Far East, John Stewart Service, who was arrested by the FBI in connection with the stealing of hundreds of secret State Department documents.

This is the Acheson, who in 1930 before Hiss did all of his damage at Yalta and in all of our postwar planning, said, "Don't investigate Hiss; I will vouch for him," and who kept him in top jobs and finally made him Secretary of the United Nations Convention in San Francisco.

This is the Acheson who sent Hiss to Yalta where Hiss together with Gromyko and a third man drafted the Yalta Agreement. This agreement was described by our Ambassador Arthur Bliss Lane as follows: "As I glanced over the document, I could not believe my eyes. To me, almost every line spoke of a surrender to Stalin."

This is the Acheson who was sponsored by Senator TYDINGS way back in 1933 for Under Secretary of the Treasury, at which time TYDINGS said, "Don't hold it against him because his law firm has represented Communist interests."

This is the Acheson who said, "I will not turn my back on Alger Hiss," after Hiss was convicted by a jury for perjury in connection with the delivery of State Department secrets to a courier for Soviet Russia.

This is the Acheson who said after his clique engineered the Communist victory in China, "A new day has dawned in Asia."

This is the Acheson who last week notified the world that we would not stand in the way of United Nations recognition of Communist China. Incidentally, it is interesting to note that several weeks before he made that statement, Owen Lattimore made a speech in Philadelphia urging the same, identical traitorous sell out.

From October 1945 to March of 1947, Acheson's law firm was retained by the Communist government of Poland to obtain a $90,000,000 loan from the United States. The loan was put through and Acheson's firm received a fee of over $50,000, according to Acheson's sworn testimony.

During this time, Acheson was assistant Secretary of State and had the authority and the responsibility to pass on the loan. He admitted in January 1949 that he was charged with responsibility of making that loan.

Fifty million of the ninety million went to equip and arm the Communist army and the dreaded UB—the Communist secret police just then being set up in Poland.

It was Mr. Acheson who placed the guns, the whips, the blacksnakes, and the clubs in the hands of those Communists. It was Mr. Acheson who furnished them with bullets to keep a Christian population under Soviet discipline. It was Mr. Acheson who helped put uniforms on the masters of prostrate Poland.

He did not do these things blindly. He was fully advised as to what the money would be used for. Listen to the words of our patriotic Ambassador to Poland, Arthur Bliss Lane, who pleaded with Acheson not to make the loan:

"With the greatest earnestness of which I am capable, I beg the Department not to approve the extension of any credits at this time. When the terroristic activities of the security police come to an end, when freedom of the press is restored, and when American citizens are released from Polish prisons—not until then should United States public funds be used to assist the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity."

Lane was on the ground. He knew the facts. He had gone about the country and talked with hundreds of real Polish leaders, who were bitterly opposed to an American loan to the Communist government.

In behalf of Poland and liberty, he begged Acheson not to make a loan to tyranny.

But Acheson coldly turned aside the patriot Lane's warning. Shortly thereafter, Lane resigned to tell his story in his book, under the very significant title, "I Saw Poland Betrayed." Lane went out and Acheson remained. Acheson always remained.

I say to Mr. Acheson: Today, there are many questions that you might answer on your Chautauqua tour in the sale of your foreign policy soothing sirup.

Tell us whether you now know that the man to whom you made that loan, President Beirut, was one of the top members of the Soviet MVD. In your speeches, tell us if you would advise the Polish people to try to retain their Christianity for which they are daily dying. Tell us what you think of the recent appointment of Marshal Rokosovsky, a Soviet war load, as head of the Polish Army and member and master of the Polish Politburo. Your loan, Mr. Acheson, kept him in uniform, too.

Your law firm got a fee for the making of that loan to help set up the police state in Poland. But the real fee was paid in the blood of the Polish Christian martyrs.

This man, Dean G. Acheson, who worked on the team of world strategy to create a Red China and a Red Poland, should be removed from the high command of our foreign policy at once. The people cannot afford to wait until the elections of 1952. As an American—not as just a Democrat—the President has a duty to remove him. Democratic faces cannot be saved if all faces are lost. Even the Democratic Party cannot be saved if America is lost.

We are a patient people. However, I think you will agree that the time has run out for the men who today are covering the tracks of their blunders with plans that will lead us to further disaster.

It does not take a foreign policy expert to watch the corpse of China writhe today under the heel of a Soviet boot. You do not need to go to Harvard to learn which are the policies of incompetent or dishonest men.

Take a look at us today in the eyes of a man or woman from the other side of the sea. Can we command their respect when our Government cringes in the face of communism? Are we earning their confidence when we abandon China by State Department decree? I think not. When any nation dedicated to the principles of liberty falters in the face of adversity, the spirit of the world sags. Without spirit, the world of free men and women will suffer enslavement in this day and age as surely as it has throughout history.

Until this Nation actively realizes this and leads the Nation out of the morass of deceit and fraud under way today, we will continue to suffer one betrayal after another.

We must restore to this Nation the integrity handed it by the founding fathers.

We must renew its glory and honor before the other lands of the world and before God.

The Republican Party has never been found at the half-way mark in the race to win against Communist infiltration in the Nation.

We, as a party, have long been dedicated to combating the forces of this evil growth fastened on the Nation. None can dispute this. However, the party Republicans alone cannot do this job. We invite all true Democrats, all true progressives to join with all loyal Americans in turning out the anti-Americans—the world Socialists, the Communist traitors—and to put honest, intelligent Americans back in control of our Government.

To beat Russia at her own game, we must have men who honestly want to win. We must have men who are not hip deep in their own failures.

Mr. McCARTHY. In my talk at Milwaukee I pointed out that international communism had two major aims as a necessary prelude to taking over the United States and creating world communism. One of those aims concerned the East, the other the West. I pointed out that the major aim of international communism in the West was the creation of a red Poland and in the East the creation of a red China.

It will be noted from the speech which I am inserting in the RECORD that I dealt in some detail with Dean Acheson's efforts in bringing about the accomplishment of those two Communist aims. I pointed out that Acheson's law firm represented the Communist government in Poland and handled its application for a $90,000,000 loan from this country. I pointed out that Donald Hiss—brother of Alger—who was named by Whittaker Chambers in 1939 as a part of a Soviet spy ring in the State Department, personally handled this loan application. I also pointed out one of the other members named in the spy ring, Julian Wadleigh, later turned state's evidence and confessed not only his part in the ring, but also implicated Donald Hiss. Hiss is the man in Acheson's law firm, it will be understood, who personally handled this application for a $90,000,000 loan to the Communist government in Poland. I pointed out that, while Acheson stated he received no part of the cut which his law firm received on the loan, he did admit that his law firm received over $50,000 as a fee. I pointed out at that time that our Ambassador to Poland, Arthur Bliss Lane, begged of Mr. Acheson that the loan be not made. This is one time when Acheson was not acting in the dark, but knew he was performing a tremendous service for communism by approving this loan and that by granting this loan he was immeasurably aiding in the communization of the world.

I may say that in January 1949 Mr. Acheson admitted under oath that he, and he alone, had the final say as to whether this loan should be granted. At that time I quoted Ambassador Lane. I should like now to quote about five lines from what Ambassador Lane stated in one of his memorandums to the State Department at the time Acheson was considering this loan, and I ask Senators to keep in mind that this is a good, loyal democratic Ambassador, as to whom there is no possible or conceivable claim that he could be playing politics. Listen to what this Ambassador says. Here is the man who was on the ground, preparing a memorandum addressed to Acheson. I quote him, as follows:

> With the greatest earnestness of which I am capable, I beg the Department not to approve the extension of any credits at this time. When the terroristic activities of the security policy come to an end, when freedom of the press is restored, and when American citizens are released from Polish prisons—not until then should United States public funds be used to assist the Polish Provisional Government of National Unity.

In other words, the Polish Communist government.

I pointed out that despite the fact that Acheson knew exactly what he was doing, he turned down the advice of our loyal Ambassador to Poland and took the advice of Donald Hiss of his own law firm, who was named as part of a State Department Soviet spy ring.

Shortly thereafter, as Senators will recall, Ambassador Lane resigned and wrote a book, which I recommend to interested Senators for reading. His book is entitled "I Saw Poland Betrayed."

It will be recalled that Donald and Alger Hiss both escaped investigation and were retained in the State Department because of the unqualified backing given them by Acheson at that time. That was in 1939.

Immediately after my speech at Milwaukee the State Department issued the usual screaming and screeching denial in an attempt to continue its deception of the American people.

This letter, which I intend to read into the RECORD, will demonstrate very clearly that the State Department underestimates the intelligence of the American people, who are now saying: "We have had enough 'official lying'; let us start getting the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth from our public servants."

It will be noted that this letter points out that the State Department's answer indicates one of two things, either, First, Gross negligence on the part of whoever made such an idiotic statement, or second, deliberate falsification of fact.

So far as I know, the editor and the publisher of this paper are perhaps the best students of Polish history we can find. Here is what this man, Kapmarski, has to say:

KURYER PUBLISHING CO.,
Milwaukee, Wis., June 19, 1950.

Senator JOE MCCARTHY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: According to the AP, the State Department, answering your charges recently made in Milwaukee, issued a statement including the following point:

"That the Department at that time still had hopes that the Mikolajczyk government, then in power in Poland, might be saved from Russian domination."

This is either indicative of gross ignorance on the part of whoever made such an idiotic statement, or a deliberate falsification of fact.

Anyone acquainted with events in postwar Poland knows that Mikolajczyk was in the Communist-dominated government only briefly and at that he was merely a minor figurehead, and a chair warmer, with absolutely no authority or voice in governmental affairs.

To call that government "the Mikolajczyk government" is utterly fantastic. This offers you a chance to hurl the cited statement back into the teeth of whoever made it, if you have not already done so.

Keep up the good work of hammering away at the Reds. All thinking Americans, particularly those of Polish ancestry, are behind you in this fight.

Sincerely yours,

J. A. KAPMARSKI,
Editor.

Mr. President, I want to compliment the editor of that Polish-language paper for taking the time to give the Senate and the country the benefit of views and facts in answer to the State Department's white papers, with their distortion and twisting of the truth. It is a great relief to find that American citizens are taking the time to study the statements and make it unnecessary for the Senate alone to try to correct everything that is said.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin what is the newspaper, the Daily Kuryer Polski, on the letterhead of which the editor has written the Senator.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is the largest and the oldest Polish-language newspaper in America. It has a circulation in all 48 States, I believe.

Mr. DONNELL. I notice in the World Almanac of 1950 that the Polish population as of 1940 in this country was 993,479, and I ask the Senator whether he knows or has any basis for knowing how widely this publication circulates. In addition to the mere fact that it circulates among the various States, does it go into the home of a great many Polish people?

Mr. McCARTHY. I could not give the circulation, but I know it is listed as the largest, so that the circulation is very great.

Mr. DONNELL. Is the newspaper, in the Senator's opinion, one of excellent standing among the Polish people?

Mr. McCARTHY. Not only that, but I believe the editorial staff of this paper is regarded generally as rather outstanding in its knowledge of the history of Poland and the background of the entire sell-out of Poland.

Mr. DONNELL. Does the Senator know how the editor himself personally stands with respect to reputation for ability and integrity?

Mr. McCARTHY. It is very excellent, and that applies to the publisher, also.

LET US MAKE UP OUR MINDS WHAT IS IMPORTANT TO OUR SAFETY—THE KOREAN SITUATION

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the surprising thing with reference to the attack on South Korea which has been evidenced by many persons is that anyone should be surprised, considering the policies which have been adopted in relation to Asia and the Pacific areas.

Mr. President, we are sending arms to half the world, making no definite policy, not specifying what we shall do in case there is a failure of what is supposed casually to be our foreign policy.

Mr. President, one of the fundamental maxims in the West is that a man does not go for his gun unless he intends to use it. We are going for our gun everywhere. We are furnishing arms and munitions; we are talking tough and are not acting.

It is about time that we made up our minds. It is time the State Department, the President of the United States, and the National Defense Secretary, in fact, the entire executive department, should make up their minds what areas in the world are important to the ultimate safety of this Nation, and then make definite what they intend to do in case pease is violated—as for example, the Monroe Doctrine, effective in the Western Hemisphere for 125 years.

Mr. President, in the humble opinion of the junior Senator from Nevada, we have made every mistake possible, starting with Yalta in 1945, in Asia and in Europe, and if we do not bring on a war it certainly will not be our fault.

STATE DEPARTMENT NEVER CONSULTED MACARTHUR AND BADGER

It is evident and well known that the State Department never seriously discussed the situation in Asia with probably the only two men who best understand Asia, namely, General MacArthur, in Japan, and Admiral Badger who spent considerable time in China and other areas before the evacuation of China.

The National Defense Secretary has just spent some time with General MacArthur, and it is the opinion of the junior Senator from Nevada that he has probably received some very good advice and that within the next 24 or 48 hours he will perhaps have something to say about it.

It is further the opinion of the junior Senator from Nevada that he has received about the same advice as that which was given to the Senator from Nevada in 1948 and which anyone could have secured upon inquiry.

LOSE CHINA AND SUFFER ECONOMICALLY AND PSYCHOLOGICALLY

I have refrained from quoting directly General MacArthur, but it is well known that he thought Japan, Okinawa, the Philippines, and New Guinea could be defended at a greatly increased cost if China were lost, but that economically and psychologically we were comparatively in terrible shape. In other words, Japan profitably and consistently could trade only with China, and if the Communists conquered China, of course, it would have to conform in order to trade.

THE UNITED STATES CANNOT BUY THEIR PRODUCTS

Otherwise, we in the United States of America would have to purchase the materials manufactured by Japan, which we could not consistently do, for the very reason that we already have more of those products for the most part than we need. Therefore we would necessarily be forced to support Japan indefinitely and keep our occupation forces there, or allow her to become Communist in order that she could trade with Communist China.

HISS-LATTIMORE—THE PATTERN OF COMMUNISM

Mr. President, starting at Yalta, with all these famous advisers of the President of the United States present, including Mr. Hiss, and Mr. Lattimore's advice to the State Department, which was made known much later but which fits into the whole pattern, all the advice apparently was along the line of Mr. Lattimore's letter which was later made public, to the effect that we should lose China simply because, as he said in effect:

> The type of policy represented by support of Chiang Kai-shek does more harm than good to the interests of the United States, and no modification of this policy seems promising. Chiang Kai-shek was a unique figure in Asia. He is now fading into a kind of eclipse that is regrettably damaging to the prestige of the United States—

This was made public on April 3, 1950—

> because the United States supported him.

We go further into the advice which was given by Mr. Lattimore to the State Department. In the statement made by him on April 3, he said:

> South Korea is more of a liability than an asset to the interests and policy of the United States. It is doubtful how long the present regime in South Korea can be kept alive, and mere effort to keep it alive is a bad advertisement, which continually draws attention to a band of little-and-inferior-Chiang Kai-sheks who are the scorn of the Communists and have lost the respect of democratic and would-be democratic groups and movements throughout Asia.

THE PATTERN CONTINUES

Without going ahead with that statement, it is fairly clear that what happened in China and what is now happening in Korea were brought about deliberately by the advisers of the President at Yalta and by the advisers of the State Department since then. Only a few days ago, in answer to an inquiry by a newsman, Mr. Acheson was very definite in saying that there was no change in policy in Formosa. A few days later we have the picture of General MacArthur sending military supplies to South Korea.

JUST WHAT IS THIS COLD WAR?

I have before me a newspaper column written by Oland D. Russell, entitled "Germany of the Far East," published today in the Washington Daily News. I wish to quote briefly from the article.

Mr. Russell says:

> As the cold war spotlight focused on Korea today, the question uppermost in the minds of those looking into the background of the crisis was this:
>
> How did it happen in the first place that Korea, a united country, was arbitrarily cut in two along an artificial, unrealistic geographical line and one part turned over to Russia and the other part given to the United States occupation forces?

That is a fair question, Mr. President. Mr. Russell goes on to say:

> Korea as a whole was promised her independence by three Allied powers, the United States, Britain and China, as early as December 1, 1943. Russia had no part in the pledge because Russia was not then at war with Japan. Korea was a vassal state of Japan.
>
> Originally the plan was for occupation of all Korea by American forces after the defeat of Japan. Surrendered Japanese troops were to be repatriated and an interim government set up under United States auspices, looking to eventual self-rule of all Korea by a democratically chosen Korean government.
>
> But something intruded to upset this plan and make Korea the Germany of the Far East.
>
> Who it was that decided, and when, that Russia should be cut in for half of Korea has never been officially stated.

WHO DIVIDED KOREA?

Mr. President, all inquiries made by the junior Senator from Nevada, other Senators, and agencies of the Government have been fruitless. They have not been able to find out who made the suggestion that Korea be divided, with half of it going to Russia, who entered the war with Japan 5 days before the war ended. However, Mr. President, we do know who the adviser was to an ailing President at Yalta. It was Mr. Hiss, as well as his associates. So we can be reasonably sure, or at least I believe it to be reasonably sure, to say from where this advice came.

Further quoting from Mr. Russell's article:

> But like so many other items of the big give-away program in Russia's favor, the decision was in line with the Rooseveltian policy of appeasing Russia at Yalta, and probably was made there. The Yalta conference sat from February 3 to February 11, 1945—long after the Cairo conference of 1943 when Korea was promised self-rule with no strings attached.

MANCHURIA GIVEN TO RUSSIA

Mr. President, along that same line it will be remembered that at the Yalta conference Russia was given Manchuria, not only without the consent of China but without even the knowledge of Chiang Kai-shek and his advisers. The news was broken to Chiang Kai-shek later. Thus China was forced to accept what it could not, of course, prevent.

To continue further with Mr. Russell's article:

But at Yalta President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill secretly began making their offers to Stalin to get Russia to enter the war against Japan.

DIVIDING THE MANUFACTURING AND POWER PLANTS OF SOUTHERN KOREA

Mr. President, remember that Russia came into the war 5 days before the war was over.

And, included in the rewards held out, it was subsequently reported that Stalin was promised the northern part of the country, containing almost all of Korea's manufacturing capacity—

That is important, Mr. President—containing almost all of Korea's manufacturing capacity, most of the coal and iron, railroad rolling stock, rail repair shops and all the important sources of electrical power.

Independence was given to South Korea. Obviously independence in South Korea could not be maintained without continual help from the United States, or some other substantial country, with their productive area gone. Mr. Russell goes on to say:

But all efforts failed, and in 1948 the Russians went so far as to shut off electric power to South Korea. For a time the United States Army used power barges to keep industries going in the south.

Meanwhile the United Nations had made an abortive effort to bring about some order and hold free elections for all Korea in fulfillment of the promise for self-rule and independence. The UN sent a commission but Moscow refused to permit it to enter North Korea.

The United States went ahead with its plan of granting independence to South Korea, and on August 13, 1948, the Republic of Korea was proclaimed.

But now the 2-year-old Republic not only faces a fight for its life, but the peace of the world is threatened by outbreak of a conflict which stems back to the folly of dividing a conquered or liberated country between two victors of diametrically opposed interests.

Mr. President, I want to call particular attention to the fact that Korea was divided in a way which makes it impossible for either half to support itself. These things do not happen accidentally, Mr. President. Germany was divided in exactly the same way, and has never been able to support itself. That is to say, history shows that it has never been able to produce enough food in order to support itself. The people of Germany have always had to industrialize in order to sell their products, so that they could eat. So they were divided in a way to make self-support almost impossible. What kind of a business is that—and who was directing it?

THE COLD WAR—THE IRON CURTAIN

Mr. President, in going on further, we have been conducting what is named by some besides us a "cold war." Then we had the expression "the iron curtain." Trace them back to where they came from. They can be traced to Mr. Churchill, of England.

ENGLAND—OUR ALLY—RECOGNIZED COMMUNIST CHINA

Let us see what we have been doing with the cold war. First, almost immediately, our ally in the cold war recognized Communist China. It is the conviction of the junior Senator from Nevada that at the international conference here in September 1949 between Canada, England, and the United States our Secretary of State committed himself to follow England in the recognition of Communist China. But it required a softening up of the American people in order to do that, and that softening up period did not operate quite as successfully as it looked at the moment it might. It was delayed.

SOFTENING UP THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Recently, our Secretary of State has told a joint meeting of the Congress that the United States has no intention of opposing the United Nations' recognition of Communist China, and seating their delegates in place of the Nationalist delegates, who are now serving. In other words, we would not use our veto against bringing Communist China into the United Nations in place of Nationalist China. Then if the Communists take over South Korea, what will be the attitude of the State Department?

Again, that is water on the wheel of the progress of recognition of Communist China by the United States of America, because once they are recognized by the United Nations—and the votes are there to do the job, with Mr. Lie encouraging it, with all his power—then the propaganda will go out over the United States, from the greatest propaganda machine ever known in any place at any time, namely, our State Department, which will proceed to soften up the people of this country to the point where they will say, "Well, every other nation has recognized Communist China, it is in the United Nations and is a part of the United Nations, and we may as well recognize it."

LIE—COMMUNIST SECRETARY OF UNITED NATIONS

No one, Mr. President, denies that Mr. Lie was recommended by the Russian nation. No one denies that his record reeks of communism.

He recently resented bitterly a question from a newsman as to whether or not he was now or ever had been a Communist.

Mr. President, it is time for a good old-fashioned house cleaning from top to bottom in both the United Nations and the State Department.

THE COMMUNIST PATTERN

Mr. President, this whole plan from the beginning makes a pattern. From the time it was evident that the war would close, from the time of the Yalta conference, the pattern has been distinct. It can be put together. As a matter of fact, it needs no putting together; it falls in order, if we just stop to think about it.

Almost immediately England recognized Communist China. Then she continued her trade with Communist China unabated—as a matter of fact, accelerated it—shipping them everything they needed in Communist China to consolidate their gains, and a large amount of the material the Soviet Government would need for world war III, using the Chinese Communists for troops.

Let us see what further we are doing in the cold war. We tell the American people we will not send materials to Russia. Certainly we will trade with them and send them anything they can use in making war on us and consolidating their gains in eastern Europe and Asia.

NINETY-SIX TRADE TREATIES—16 ECA COUNTRIES WITH RUSSIA AND SATELLITES

I called attention to the facts three times on the Senate floor, beginning in March 1949 and again in January 1950, and again during the debate on the Marshall plan in March of this year on this floor. The junior Senator from Nevada started with a total of 88 trade treaties which the 16 Marshall-plan countries had made up to and including 1947 with Russia and the iron-curtain countries, and ended with, by name, 96 such treaties in good standing, being renewed from time to time with the Marshall-plan countries shipping to Russia and the iron-curtain countries everything they needed to make world war III on the United States and to consolidate their gains in eastern Europe and Communist China. I ask you, Mr. President, what kind of a cold war is that?

THE ECA AND WEST-EAST TRADE

The only difficulty there is about it is that every nation in Europe is fattening itself in trade in the same manner they always do, trading with what the State Department has said are potential enemies. Where are they getting the materials? There is the great Marshall plan and the ECA. It was said on the Senate floor on March 4 and 5, 1948, by the junior Senator from Nevada, that they were making such trade treaties, and I put into the RECORD a trade treaty already made by England with Russia at that moment, including 1,100 locomotives, and went on down through tool steel, electrical equipment, machinery, and other materials.

Someone taking the other side of the debate said: "Of course, no ECA or Marshall-plan director would allow such a thing." The junior Senator from Nevada, comparatively young on the Senate floor, not having the confidence in any ECA or Marshall-plan director some Senators evidently had, doubted that that would be the case. History has shown that they not only allowed it, but encouraged it.

What do we find now? The average of the nations of Europe, outside of Germany and Austria, are 125 to 130 percent recovered, according to the indstrial index of 1937–38. They are way past the point of recovery, so if we are not fighting a cold war, then what are we doing?

MAKERS OF OUR POLICY

Mr. President, I desire to call attention to an editorial in the Saturday Evening Post entitled "United States Policy Makers for the Asia Front Laid a China Egg." I quote briefly from it:

The State Department is headed by Dean Acheson, who as late as June, 1946, advised that economic assistance to China should be carried out "through the medium of a government fully and fairly representative of all important Chinese political elements, including the Chinese Communists.

I recall to the Senate, Mr. President, that the State Department about that time sent a very distinguished gentleman, General Marshall, to represent the State Department in China, and that he did several things there. Among them, he asked Chiang Kai-shek to join hands with the Communist Government. He said they were agrarian Communists. We have heard that before. All they wanted to do was to get a piece of land, he said, that they were our kind of people, that everything would be all right, that they would join hands with Nationalist China.

THE GENERALS MARSHALL—CHAING KAI-SHEK—FU

Mr. Marshall forced Chiang Kai-shek to let the agrarian Communists through the Pass over into Manchuria, where they picked up the arms which the Japanese had left there when they quit Manchuria, after we gave Manchuria to Russia. They went through the Pass and came down on the Chinese Army from the north. Mr. Marshall stopped the ammunition going to General Fu's army and Chiang Kai-shek, for the American guns we had already given China. He did that in 1946.

As early as 1948 the junior Senator from Nevada flew into Peiping. It was said the Communists were 8 or 10 miles out, but General Fu, who was handling the northern army for Chiang Kai-shek at that time, sent a car, without lights, to the airport. We landed without lights. I was able to go to his camp to a midnight conference. Mr. President, I had a high regard for General Fu. He looked capable to me. He said he was really beaten when General Marshall stopped the ammunition going to their guns in 1946, and he said, in November 1948, "Unless I get substantial help in 30 or 60 days—I will be a prisoner of war." And of course history shows he was. He had up to that time been able to keep the railroad open from the harbor up to Peiping.

RAILROAD CLOSED

But it was soon closed because of the great belief of these Korean Communists that everything would be all right; with the Lattimores and the Hisses and the Achesons all proclaiming that nothing definite should be done.

Several times the newspapermen contacted the junior Senator from Nevada while in China and in Japan, and they were very fair. When the junior Senator from Nevada returned to this country and saw their dispatches, they read well. The junior Senator from Nevada has never said that we should go into China with arms and men. What he did say, Mr. President, many times, was that we had better make up our minds as to what was important to the United States of America, and do it very fast; that if the integrity of China was important to our ultimate safety, then we had better get in; that if the integrity of China was not important to our ultimate safety, then we had better get out. Because in my league one cannot be half in and half out of a gang fight. One simply gets hurt thereby. That is what happened. We got hurt. And the end is not yet.

Mr. President, the editorial further says:

An expert whose advice has been formally sought by the State Department and who was considered important enough to be assigned to Chiang Kai-shek as an adviser, is Owen Lattimore. * * * Mr. Lattimore's most recent advice to the State Department amounted to a scramble from virtually every point of vantage in Asia where our presence might cause annoyance to the Russians.

MR. LATTIMORE AND CHINA

In an earlier article he sought to soothe the anxious by declaring that "the Russians have neither the surplus of money, nor the surplus of equipment, nor the surplus of technicians and know-how with which to intervene in Asia as we have intervened." Many sincere people have held these and similar views, and one need not be a Communist to defend them. But, the way things are turning out, they represent a weak reed for the United States policy to lean on.

MR. JESSUP

Still read from the editorial:

Another State Department expert is roving Ambassador Phillip C. Jessup, who is credited with the authorship of the China white paper in which Chiang Kai-shek is blamed for everything that happened, including our own double-crossing of him at Yalta. He is an expert on international law, with an interest in the Far East.

Further along in the editorial it says:

THE PRESIDENT—MR. TRUMAN AND 1952

With President Truman treating this vital matter as if it were a case of covering up for a dumb jobholder in the county courthouse, we agree with Senator TAFT that nothing short of a new administration will bring about this imperatively needed New Deal. But the people at least have a congressional election through which to express themselves. If they don't take advantage of this opportunity, it will not be for want of available information.

A DECLARED WAR

I read from an editorial appearing in the New York Mirror of this morning, June 26, as follows:

We now have a declared war, piddling though it may be, or may not be, involving the United States and American prestige in the Far East.

The North Korean Communist forces which have invaded American-sponsored and UN-approved South Korea obviously could not have moved without Soviet direction and permission.

It is the job of our diplomats to keep us out of war. War begins where diplomacy fails.

Further along in the editorial it says:

MR. DULLES—AND ASIA

Only last week, John Foster Dulles, Republican adviser to Secretary Acheson, was in Korea and assured the southern republic, which this country created and which we recognized January 1, 1949, that the United States does not intend to abandon it to Communist aggression.

That is very good news, Mr. President, coming from a very prominent citizen such as Mr. Dulles. Further reading from the editorial:

What does this mean?

Mr. Dulles is an official representative of the United States Government.

What can his statement mean to all the menaced peoples of Asia who have not already come under Soviet domination?

Mr. Acheson, himself, told Congress, in seeking economic aid for South Korea (though we were completing the abandonment of China at the time), that if Korea were overrun by the Communists * * * "You will get a shiver of fear all through the Philippines, all through southeast Asia, India, and all other parts of the Far East. * * * We are bound to have an accentuation of disintegration."

In parentheses the editorial says:

(That last sentence in Achesonese for "Things will get worse.")

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHEN DIPLOMATS FAIL

We now have a declared war, piddling though it may be, or may not be, involving the United States and American prestige in the Far East.

The North Korean Communist forces which have invaded American-sponsored and UN-approved South Korea obviously could not have moved without Soviet direction and permission.

It is the job of our diplomats to keep us out of war. War begins where diplomacy fails.

Our diplomacy has so miserably failed us in the Far East by its acquiescence to the Communist conquest of China—amounting almost to approval—that it has brought upon our people and the world this crisis.

Will the diplomats want us to go to war now to pay for their mistakes?

We don't think they'll get away with that. The people are well aware of our failures of statesmanship and are not disposed to erase them with American blood.

But we are on the spot, nonetheless.

Only last week, John Foster Dulles, Republican adviser to Secretary Acheson, was in Korea and assured the southern republic, which this country created and which we recognized January 1, 1949, that the United States does not intend to abandon it to Communist aggression.

What does this mean?

Mr. Dulles is an official representative of the United States Government.

What can his statements mean to all the menaced peoples of Asia who have not already come under Soviet domination?

Mr. Acheson, himself, told Congress, in seeking economic aid for South Korea (though we were completing the abandonment of China at the time) that if Korea were overrun by the Communists—

"You will get a shiver of fear all through the Philippines, all through southeast Asia, India and all other parts of the Far East. We are bound to have an accentuation of disintegration."

(That last sentence is Achesonese for "Things will get worse.")

As if to make them worse, Mr. Acheson "scared hell" out of the Governors' Conference last Tuesday in a closed-door discussion of the cold war; then on Thursday, at Harvard, was carefully sanguine on the theme that "war is not inevitable."

At the same time of the latter speech, General Bradley, Chief of Staff, and Defense Secretary Louis Johnson, were just leaving Tokyo for this country after a momentous conference with General MacArthur.

Moscow must have wondered about this Far East meeting of our top defense chiefs, who do not see eye-to-eye with Acheson.

Moscow may have taken Acheson's "war-is-not inevitable" speech as a go-ahead signal to launch, if not a full-scale invasion, at least a test thrust for feeling-out purposes.

Americans, we think, should view this crisis in two ways: (1) Let's make it the occasion to determine whether the United Nations should be junked or changed; (2) let's keep as cool and unhysterical as possible in this hot spell.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent also to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article by John O'Donnell under the heading "Captol Stuff."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAPITOL STUFF

(By John O'Donnell)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 25.—The worst of bad news delights to arrive in this Capital on sunny Sundays. The evil tidings that now come from Korea do not reach the high degree of tragedy attained on that Sunday 8 years and 7 months ago when correspondents eating lunch in the National Press Club leaped from tables in stunned astonishment as radio and news tickers excitedly proclaimed:

"Japs bomb Pearl Harbor. Official. Japs bomb Pearl Harbor."

But this Sunday's news is bad enough. It will do. It's of a piece with the story of Pearl Harbor. Our State Department's intelligence has been just as faulty and incompetent and as thoroughly surprised by the enemy, as Cordell Hull's outfit was back on Sunday, December 7, 1941.

TRUMAN GOT NO WARNING ON RED BLOW

President Truman, having a quiet week end back home in Missouri, had no warning from his advisers that the Commies were about to strike, pour into the United States-backed zone of South Korea—as our experts now say they can—and so put the military striking power of the Reds 100 sea miles and less than 30 minutes in a bombing plane from MacArthur's outposts in Japan. There may be dispute about F. D. R.'s advance knowledge that the Japs were about to attack us, that "they had been maneuvered into firing the first shot," as former Secretary of War Henry Stimson wrote in his diary, but it's certain that Truman had received no warning from his experts.

All of which makes John Foster Dulles, the Republican wing of the Truman bipartisan foreign policy, look downright silly, a tragic comedian and a pathetic clown in the circus ring of international diplomacy.

It was only 6 days ago that this GOP special adviser to Secretary of State Acheson arrived in the now Commie-bombed and machine-gunned Seoul.

What this pseudo-international expert, protégé of New York's Governor Dewey, told the Koreans last Monday in his ridiculous pep talk—"the eyes of the free world are upon you * * * you will set up a peaceful influence which will disintegrate the hold of Soviet communities on your fellow to the north"—makes sour reading at the moment.

"I've been told that the Communists have been spreading silly rumors that Korea might be left alone in its defense of its freedom," Dulles said. "I hope the days I have spent here will be one more evidence of the fact that Korea does not stand alone."

THE BUCK IS PASSED TO UN'S COUNCIL

Now, all this stupidity may well have great value to the United States. The medicine is bitter but beneficent. If further evidence of collapse, incompetence, and (worse still) downright ignorance of the directors of the Truman-Acheson foreign policy were needed, the voting citizens have it.

Now Truman so-called masterminds have passed the buck up to the Security Council of UN. And this, too, is all for the best because a present demonstration of the utter futility of the set-up at Lake Success may hasten the death of that international monstrosity, born under the sinister ministering care of diplomatic obstetrician Alger Hiss at San Francisco 5 years ago. And the end of UN would be one of the best breaks this unlucky Republic has got in many a year.

The bright side of the news from this latest shooting front in the Far East is that now, at long last, the befuddling experts handling the State Department's so-called China policy will find power taken from their feeble and uncertain hands (hands which in too many cases have been described as smeared with red and pinkish guilt) and the final over-all authority, in both military and diplomatic fields, turned over to Gen. Douglas MacArthur, as defender of the United States defense outposts in the Far Pacific.

This decision will be made as soon as Truman, hastily returning from Missouri, sits down with Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson and top man of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Omar Bradley—both of whom are just back from Tokyo with the benefit of MacArthur's advice. The hard-boiled military professionals here in the Capital are agreed that if the Kremlin is really backing up the Red Korea drive with fighting planes and has stiffened the "people's republic" army with veteran Russian officers from World War II, a Red victory is assured.

THE SCRAP CAME FLYING BACK AT YANKS

And with a bitter grimace, they will agree that in this probable event that $10,000,000 worth of military equipment which we've already sent to Korea will fall into commie hands. The boys remember how the scrap iron which F. D. R's diplomats sold to Japan in the months before Pearl Harbor came flying back at our troops as shells and bombs. The boys figure that there is a good chance that history may repeat itself—and that it may teach the American people what happens on a small scale in Korea might happen on a disastrously large scale in western Europe.

And so the developments in Korea now suddenly emerge as a major political issue on the domestic front in the coming battle for control of Congress. Truman and Acheson are expected to be forced into the embarrassing spot of completely reversing themselves with regard to defending Formosa within the next week—on the basis of the recent consultations with MacArthur and the strategic steps necessary to hold the defense line of Japan, Formosa, and the Philippines.

QUIT REACHING FOR OUR GUN—UNLESS WE MEAN TO USE IT

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, it seems to the junior Senator from Nevada that it is time we quit reaching for the gun unless we are going to use it, or else someone is going to get hurt. Let us think it through. Let us get down to first principles. Cn March 4 and 5, 1948, when the Marshall plan first came before this body, the junior Senator from Nevada stood here 3 or 4 hours and tried to think it through, and tried to see where we were going. Certainly he did not have the answers.

SOCIALIST GOVERNMENTS AND $17,000,000,000

But he was convinced no one on this floor had the answers as to how it would benefit our Nation to take $17,000,000,000 and give it to governments outright with no strings, governments who were already showing signs of socialism and worse.

How could we win by giving them the money to remain in power, and to sell to their poor people the materials we furnished when they themselves had the money with which to buy foodstuffs, and when we furnished the governments money with which to build industry, which in the long run was bound to be socialized and would be used against us. It was used against us in two ways, it panned out, just as the junior Senator from Nevada suggested when he read into the RECORD in March 1948, the trade treaty that had then already been made between England and Russia, under which England shipped a wide variety of materials, starting off with 1,100 locomotives, and going into various types of equipment that all nations need to manufacture equipment for war and consolidate gains in strange areas.

First, the money and the material would be used to build up their industries, and the material manufactured there would be shipped to our potential enemies, which has been done through the 96 trade treaties already described. Second, in building these plants they would be building competition for the workingmen and the investors of America through their free-trade set-up, with this Nation—first pointed up by the 1934 Trade Agreements Act.

THE "FREE TRADE" ACT OF 1934

Mr. President, what does the 1934 Trade Agreements Act do? It is simply that the Congress of the United States transferred its constitutional responsibility for the regulation of foreign trade, the regulation of the national economy through the regulation of imports to an executive department that had been trying to secure control of that particular regulation for 100 years. And all prior Congresses had had gumption enough not to give it to them.

THE INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION

Then they suggested the International Trade Organization. All this has been, and is, on the must list of the President. The International Trade Organization is on the President's must list of legislation for this year. The administration is still insisting that we must pass it to make free trade permanent and level the standard of living in this Nation with the nations of the world.

REGULATION OF OUR NATIONAL ECONOMY TO FOREIGN CONTROL

It would take that same authority and transfer it from an industrially inexperienced State Department—to where? To a foreign organization, an international trade organization, made up of 58 or 59 nations, we having but 1 vote out of the whole 58 or 59 nations. What happens? What authority does that organization have? They have the authority to set the tariff and the import fees for their member nations, and they have the authority then to fix quotas, if you please, Mr. President, so if too many shoes are being produced in America, in the opinion of the very smart people that will sit around the table, each one of them representing one of these nations, then that production could be assigned to some other country, to Czechoslovakia behind the iron curtain, or anywhere they wanted to assign it. How does the State Department determine what industries are to survive and which industries are to be sacrificed, involving the jobs and investments of America?

JOBS AND INVESTMENTS

How can those in the State Department do that? They can do it because the Congress has given them authority to lower the tariffs and import fees approximately 75 percent after holding only perfunctory hearings. Inasmuch as those persons in the State Department never have been in business, so far as I have been able to determine, obviously it is a simple matter for them to run all businesses in the United States; indeed, it is all too simple, so far as they are concerned.

NO FOREIGN POLICY

Let me refer now to today's occurrences. They could not have been a surprise, they did not surprise anyone in my State, or on the Senate floor I hope. For the last 6 months we have been discussing the entire setup in Asia and in Europe, which constitute a powder keg arranged by our own representatives, because of our lack of foreign policy.

Mr. President, we have no foreign policy. Our so-called foreign policy is a joke. We have simply tied the regulation of our national economy to our foreign policy, so-called, in an attempt to make one economic world—which is what we are headed toward—in which we will divide our markets with the other countries of the world, with the result that we will lower our standard of living. It is claimed that in that event there will be perpetual peace, that is the objective.

LET US DECIDE WHAT IS IMPORTANT TO THIS NATION

So, Mr. President, as I said in March 1948, and again in March 1949, and again in September 1949, and again in March 1950, let us make up our minds. Let the executive branch of the Government, whose constitutional responsibility it is to fix the foreign policy, make up its mind and decide what areas in Europe and what areas in Asia and what areas in Africa are important to our national safety, so far as their governmental integrity is concerned. Then, instead of sending a few six shooters into Korea in an attempt to beat Russia, if we decide that that area is important to us, let us send there something that will stop the encroachment of one government upon another, not just enough to be of value to the Russians when they capture it.

Mr. President, I return to the fundamental principle—and so far as I know, it has not been changed by anything which has occurred anywhere in the world—that a man who reaches for his gun had better have made up his mind to use it. That is what we must do—less talking and more doing.

However, as matters now stand, the prestige of the United States is practically down to zero, with the result that the feeling is widespread, that other nations, including England, furnish their citizens better protection than we do for our own people.

Let us make up our minds and quit fooling the American people—and the nations of the world.

THE KOREAN WAR SITUATION—SELL-OUT-TO-STALIN STATESMEN

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, the front paging of the present plight of Korea is a grim reminder that the Russian bear is sprawled across the Eurasian continent, biding its time, digesting its prey, and digging itself in for a long and cruel international winter. The Korean debacle also reminds us that the same sell-out-to-Stalin statesmen, who turned Russia loose, are still in the saddle, riding herd on the American people.

These are the men who sold out 100,000,000 people in eastern Europe to Communist slavery. These are the men who, after American troops had captured Berlin, ordered our withdrawal so that Russia could enter as the great conquerer and liberator. These are the men who turned Berlin into a Russian prison which we could neither enter nor leave except by traveling through Russian-occupied territory.

These are the men who sold out China at Yalta; who gave to Russia Outer Mongolia, Manchuria, the northern half of Korea, half of Sakhalin Island, just to the north of Japan, and the Kurile Islands, 1,000 miles southwest of Alaska.

These are the men whom Russia had informed time and again of her determination to turn Manchuria into a Russian base. These are the men who knew that Korean Communists were fighting for Russia in Manchuria, the same Korean Communist troops who today are part of the attack being launched on South Korea.

These are the men who have depended upon confidential reports of Owen Lattimore, John Service, and Phillip Jessup. In addition, our own Secretary of Defense, and our Chief of Staff, and Mr. Dulles, just completed a recent tour of the Far East, a United Nations Commission, with an American representative, has been in Korea for 2 years, and our Central Intelligence Agency, which receives intelligence reports from every branch of the Government, including our Armed Services, has been represented on the spot.

Yet, in spite of the hundreds of millions of dollars we have been spending merely to support these branches of national security, this administration does not even know what is going on. The President, himself, when he was returning to Washington from Kansas City, yesterday, said he was returning because he did not know the facts.

For myself, grave as this Korean situation has become I believe the time has arrived when we can no longer entrust our future to those who have betrayed the past. We need a day of reckoning when we can put all the facts on the table, when we can lay the foundation for what constitutes the minimum requirement for an impregnable national defense and for the defense of the Western Hemisphere, before we can wrest the initiative out of Stalin's hands and take back the moral leadership of the world into our own.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 26, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal God, whose resources of grace are abundantly adequate for all our needs, we pray that Thou wilt evoke within us a new sense of Thy greatness and goodness.

We rejoice that Thou art always seeking to inspire us with lofty aspirations, glorious visions, and mighty hopes. May we have the will and the courage to bring them to fulfillment.

Grant that we may be more eager to identify and unite our desires and purposes with Thy divine will, pledging ourselves to it in loyalty and devotion and making it the constant and controlling thought of our minds.

In Christ's name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, June 22, 1950, was read and approved.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

JUNE 23, 1950.

The Honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Pursuant to authority granted on June 22, 1950, the Clerk received today from the Secretary of the Senate the following message:

That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5868) entitled "An act to authorize the Departments of the Army, Navy, and Air Force to participate in the transfer of certain real property or interests therein, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed Mr. BYRD, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. SALTONSTALL managers on the part of the Senate at said conference.

That the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6826) entitled "An act to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes"; that the Senate insist upon its amendments to said bill and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. BYRD, Mr. CHAPMAN, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. SALTONSTALL managers on the part of the Senate at said conference.

That the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4295) entitled "An act to provide certain benefits for annuitants who retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, prior to April 1, 1948."

That the Senate agree to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1169) entitled "An act for the relief of Mrs. Marion T. Schwartz."

That the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3776) entitled "An act to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended."

That the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 6692) entitled "An act for the relief of Sgt. Blaine W. Hughes."

Very truly yours,

RALPH R. ROBERTS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

SIGNING OF BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to the authority granted him on June 22, 1950, he did on that date sign the following bill and joint resolution:

S. 2335. An act to make certain revisions in titles I and III of the Officer Personnel Act of 1947, as amended; and

S. J. Res. 190. Joint resolution extending the period of effectivness of the Selective Service Act of 1948 for 15 days.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. McDaniel, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2269. An act to provide for the enlistment of aliens in the Regular Army.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT OF 1950

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6000) to extend and improve the Federal old-age and survivors insurance system, to amend the public assistance and child welfare provisions of the Social Security Act, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I find in the bill as passed by the other body a resolution to investigate other methods of pensions, including the pay-as-you-go plan, which is the Townsend plan. That calls only for an investigation by the Senate. May I inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina if he has given any consideration to the idea of making the investigation include both branches?

Mr. DOUGHTON. As far as I know that matter has not been considered by our committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman think it would be advisable to have only a Senate investigation? If there is to be an investigation, I personally believe the House should have some part in it, too. We are all interested in pensions for the aged and the House must retain its leadership.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If there is to be a general investigation, I can see no reason why the House should not take part in it. I like to discuss important matters with my committee before expressing myself definitely.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I appreciate the position of the gentleman, and I am not trying to press him for a premature decision, but I repeat, the House should, in my opinion, participate in the inquiry even if the inquiries should be separate.

Mr. DOUGHTON. As far as I am concerned, I am in accord with what the gentleman says, but I always defer to the members of my committee on important matters.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the Senate has taken out the provision which the House inserted with reference to Puerto Rico. I hope the House will insist on the position of having Puerto Rico included in our social-security system. Not to do so will only mean an intensification of the discrimination that exists against Puerto Rico under the present colonial system.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DOUGHTON, MILLS, CAMP, LYNCH, REED of New York, WOODRUFF, and JENKINS.

INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6073) to amend section 501 (b) (6) of the Internal Revenue Code, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DOUGHTON, MILLS, CAMP, LYNCH, REED of New York, WOODRUFF, and JENKINS.

EXTENDING SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT OF 1949

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6826) to provide for the common defense through the registration and classification of certain male persons, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. VINSON, BROOKS, KILDAY, SHORT, and ARENDS.

COMPOSITION OF THE ARMY AND AIR FORCE

Mr. VINSON submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 1437) to authorize the composition of the Army of the United States and the Air Force of the United States, and for other purposes.

REDUCING EXCISE TAXES

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 666, Rept. No. 2323), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8920) to reduce excise taxes, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 days, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to said bill except amendments offered by the direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means may be offered to any section of the bill at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. COMBS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 hour today, following the legislative program and any other special orders heretofore entered, and to revise and extend his remarks.

TIDELAND DECISION

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to my colleagues I have just reserved a special order, the first in 5½ years that I have been here, because I think I have something to say that will be of interest to the Members.

On June 5 our Supreme Court, by a divided decision, by a minority of only four Judges, decided that the rich oil-bearing tidelands of my State, which have been owned and preserved for our school children since the days of the Republic, no longer belong to us. I am going to discuss, and I think I can with all propriety, the decision of the Court and its far-reaching implications. In my judgment it threatens the fisheries and the rights of every State in the Nation. It is frightening in its implications.

I invite you to be present this afternoon when I speak. The time I have asked for will be much more than I will use, but I did it so that I might have a chance to yield for questions or comments. Meantime I have introduced a bill that would amend the statute to require orders of the Supreme Court, in cases of which it has original jurisdiction, to be decided by not less than five members.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1950

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 8567) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and for other purposes; and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

JUNE 23, 1950.

The honorable the SPEAKER,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a sealed envelope from the President of the United States, addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, said to contain a veto message on H. R. 8422, received in the office of the Clerk on June 23, 1950.

Very truly yours,
RALPH R. ROBERTS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

CARMENCITA VON PLETTENBERG—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 628)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, the enrolled bill (H. R. 8422) for the relief of Carmencita von Plettenberg.

The bill directs the transfer to Countess Carmencita von Plettenberg of 30.77 percent of the property vested by vesting order 10744 as the property of Casa Konke S. A. and La Talleres Tipo-Litograficos Ariston (Imprenta Ariston), business enterprises organized under the laws of Honduras.

It appears that Countess Carmencita von Plettenberg acquired an interest in these Honduran enterprises by inheritance from her father, a German citizen. The remaining interest in the enterprises was held by German citizens resident in Germany. Although Countess von Plettenberg was a German citizen, resident in Germany during the war, she would be eligible under section 32 (a) of the Trading With the Enemy Act for return of any property formerly owned by her if she were shown to be a victim of religious or political persecution. But, while it appears that she was a victim of persecution by the Nazis, the property which she claims was owned by corporations in which she was a minority shareholder. Her minority share of the vested assets of the corporations in question cannot be returned under the law as it now exists because more than 50 percent of the stock was owned by persons who are ineligible under the statute for the return of the vested property.

It is recognized that injustices may result from the statutory prohibition against return of property to persons who, even though they qualify as individuals, are ineligible because their ownership of the vested property was through the medium of a corporation. This provision of law has required the Office of Alien Property to deny the return of property in other cases just as deserving as the one here in question. The special consideration this bill would grant to this particular claimant would be unfair to the other claimants in equally appealing circumstances.

The problem presented by this case and other similar cases should be considered in connection with general legislation amending the Trading With the Enemy Act to permit returns of property to persons who would be eligible claimants if they had owned the property directly rather than through a corporate equity. I hope that the Congress, with the assistance of the Executive agencies concerned, will develop and enact appropriate legislation at an early date.

While the particular facts in this case warrant sympathetic consideration, I am constrained for the foregoing reasons, to withhold my approval from the bill.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 23, 1950.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Without objection the bill and message will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

PROMOTION OF VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II IN THE FIELD SERVICE OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 627)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 87, a bill relating to the promotion of veterans of World War II in the field service of the Post Office Department.

This bill, for purposes of promotion and salary, would grant veterans who first entered the postal field service after the conclusion of their services in the Armed Forces full credit for such military service during the war. Its benefits are limited to those who are in the postal field service on the date of enactment, or who shall enter such service after such date, but prior to July 1, 1950. They would receive pay increases of $100—one pay grade—for each year of military service on a pro rata basis. Under section 2 also, any substitute postal employee who failed of promotion to regular employee because he was in the military or naval forces of the United States during World War II shall, for the purposes of determining his postal salary, be held to have been promoted to such regular position as of the date of a vacancy to which he, as senior substitute, could have been promoted. I do not object to the provisions of section 2.

There are four basic weaknesses in the remaining provisions of this bill.

First, H. R. 87 is based on the bad principle of allowing credit for service in no way related to a civil career. It would thus violate the long-established principle of granting promotions or increases in pay on the basis of satisfactory performance.

There is a big difference between the principle on which this bill is based and the principle, now recognized in law, of granting credit for military service to employees whose civilian careers were interrupted by wartime service in the Armed Forces. There is good basis for presuming that civilian employees who were called into the Armed Forces and who performed creditable service in military jobs would have performed with equal merit if they had stayed on their civilian jobs. The records of their promotions since the war, both in the postal service and in other branches of the civil service, have demonstrated the soundness of the presumption under which they have gained credit.

By the same token there is also a sound basis for the granting of credit for service in the Armed Forces to those who were on registers of eligibles awaiting appointment to the postal service when they were called to duty in the Armed Forces. On the other hand, it cannot reasonably be presumed that the veterans to be benefited by this law intended to enter the postal service. They were not in the postal service before the war; they were not on lists of eligibles for appointment to the postal service; many of them by reason of age, lack of experience, or other work history, could not have obtained any eligibility until after completion of their military service. Therefore, I believe that to extend the benefits proposed in this measure to them would be tantamount to giving what might be called an indirect bonus or adjusted service payment in recognition of military service. This would be a far-reaching step in an undesirable direction.

Second, H. R. 87 is discriminatory and would be detrimental to the efficiency of the postal service and of the Federal civil service at large. It is limited to a small fraction of the veterans in the employ of the Federal Government and to one group of employees in the Post Office Department. If permitted to become law, its consequences could be only discontent and a demand for similar treatment for other branches of the Federal service. This fact becomes even more apparent when it is recognized that it would promote veterans over the heads of nonveterans of equal ability and capacity and that the veteran appointed on June 30, 1950, would obtain its benefits while a veteran appointed a day later would not.

Third, H. R. 87 cannot be defended even as a veterans' benefit bill. It provides a special benefit to a special group of veterans without reference to a real and distinctive need. There is no more effective way of undermining the soundness and integrity of a veteran's status than by the enactment of legislation which does not apply equally to all veterans similarly situated under that law. In the aggregate, fewer than 100,000 of the more than 15,000,000 World War II veterans—of whom about 900,000 are in Government service—would receive pay increases under this bill. Thus, I believe it is apparent that these pay increases cannot logically be related either to the program of the Federal Government for assisting disabled servicemen to overcome service handicaps or to the broader program of facilitating the readjustment of other ex-servicemen to productive civilian life. The benefits of those programs are available to the veterans affected by this measure. It is to be expected that they either have received or will receive such of the benefits as are applicable to their particular cases, including the important element of preference for appointment and retention to positions in the Federal civil service. That "veterans' preference" is important is demonstrated by the fact that veteran eligibles have replaced all but a handful of war service nonveterans appointed to the postal field service between October 23, 1943 (when competitive examinations for the postal field service were suspended) and the end of the war. To grant some of these veterans pay increases solely on the ground of prior military service would certainly be a pyramiding of benefits which I feel cannot be justified.

Fourth, H. R. 87 would require large additional budget expenditures at a time when postal service throughout the Nation is being curtailed in an effort to reduce a postal deficit which currently exceeds half a billion dollars a year. This bill would cost almost $24,000,000 in the fiscal year 1951 and would have a total cost of over $163,000,000. My objection to the bill on this score is based partially upon the absence of any provision for increasing postal revenues to reduce the postal deficit.

Furthermore, I feel that this objection is reinforced by the fact that since 1945, very substantial pay increases have been given the postal employees. The legislation cannot be defended on the grounds that in the absence of a general pay adjustment, a pay increase for one group is warranted. This bill would not help to maintain the integrity of the pay system in the postal field service. It would merely cause dislocations of a kind which are particularly bad, not only because of cost, but more important, because the bill would afford advancements beyond those already earned in a service which has relatively limited promotional opportunities. I believe that the comparatively small number of supervisory positions in the postal service should be reached in the normal manner and not by resort to a costly measure which would distort accepted relationships between work performance and salary.

For the foregoing reasons, I believe that the principal provisions of H. R. 87 are intrinsically without merit. I am, therefore, compelled to return it without my approval.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

BENEFITS FOR ANNUITANTS WHO RETIRED UNDER THE CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT OF MAY 29, 1930, PRIOR TO APRIL 1, 1948

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4295) to provide certain benefits for annuitants who retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, prior to April 1, 1948, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 2304)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4295) to provide certain benefits for annuitants who retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, prior to April 1, 1948, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

TOM MURRAY,
HOMER THORNBERRY,
EDWARD H. REES,
Managers on the Part of the House.

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
J. ALLEN FREAR, Jr.,
WILLIAM LANGER,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4295) to provide certain benefits for annuitants who retired under the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, prior to April 1, 1948, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1: Section 8 (b) (1), added by the House bill to section 8 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, provides that an annuity shall be payable, upon the death of an annuitant who retired before April 1, 1948, and who received the increased annuity provided by such section, to his or her wife or husband to whom the annuitant was married before April 1, 1948. Paragraph (1) applies in the case of any such annuitant who died after April 30, 1948. The Senate amendment makes this paragraph inapplicable in the case of a retired officer or employee whose present annuity exceeds the amount of the annuity to which he wold be entitled if the Civil Service Retirement Act, as now in effect, had been in effect on the date of his retirement, unless such retired officer or employee elects to have his annuity reduced to such amount. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 2: Section 8 (b) (2), added by the House bill to section 8 of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, provides that the annuity of a retired officer or employee who elected a survivor's annuity in accordance with the proviso in such section 8 shall be increased by 25 percent, or $300, whichever is the lesser. The Senate amendment provides that the annuity of a retired officer or employee shall not be increased under paragraph (2) to an amount which will exceed the amount of annuity to which he would be entitled if the Civil Service Retirement Act, as now in effect, had been in effect on the date of his retirement. The Senate recedes.

TOM MURRAY,
HOMER THORNBERRY,
EDWARD H. REES,
Managers on the Part of the House.

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report of the conferees. The bill comes from the conference exactly as it passed the House. The Senate added two amendments to the House bill, and the conferees have receded from the Senate amendments and agreed to the House bill.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to address the House today and on the next three succeeding days for 5 minutes, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

GOVERNMENT COMPETITION WITH PRIVATE BUSINESS

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, on many occasions I have warned that the spending, taxing, free-and-easy money-lending policy of the administration is destroying our system of private competitive enterprise.

I rise at this time to call your attention to what has happened in one of the towns in my district. It is an illustration of what is happening everywhere in the United States.

According to an Associated Press dispatch, the Peoples Bank, of Atlanta, Ill., which has been in existence for 62 years and is in a sound financial condition, is going out of business. In announcing this decision, Circuit Judge Frank S. Bevan, who is president of the bank, said that the directors find it impossible to maintain a sound, going concern because of "excessive taxes, Government restriction, and Government competition." He particularly pointed out the "competition by various Government lending agencies." Rather than wait until the day when the bank would be obliged to close its doors, the board decided to do so now when it was in a position to meet its obligations to its depositors and stockholders and to the community it serves.

As excessive taxes rob our private economic system of the power to produce and expand, the administration proposes to supply the deficiency through Government loans, or loan guaranties, or by entering into business itself. Instead of recommending a more liberal taxing policy, the administration recommends a more liberal Government credit policy. The Federal Government takes from the people money which the people would use on their own terms, and proposes to lend it back to them to use on the Government's terms.

Mr. Speaker, this is the process by which our great private competitive economic system is being destroyed, and in its place a socialistic state is being erected. This is the process by which, slowly but surely, we approach a nationalization of finance, industry, and agriculture.

Atlanta, Ill., is a relatively small community of hard-working, thrifty American people who have the will and the desire to do things for themselves, to grow and to prosper. But the Federal Government will not let them. An important bank in that community is closing its doors because of excessive taxes and destructive Government competition.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. LARCADE asked and was given permission to address the House for 30 minutes today following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

JOINT SENATE AND HOUSE RECORDING FACILITY

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 332) providing for the establishment of a Joint Senate and House Recording Facility, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mrs. NORTON, Mr. STANLEY, and Mr. BISHOP.

WAR IN KOREA

Mr. BATTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BATTLE. Mr. Speaker, the invasion of South Korea endangers the prestige of the United States and the security of the freedom-loving nations of the world. Red-trained, communistic, North Korean troops, have invaded the sovereign nation of South Korea which was established by the United Nations and backed by the United States. The invasion from North Korea is an indirect challenge to America. Because of our faith in democratic principles we assumed some moral obligation at least and invested materially to help this small nation stand as a bulwark against the spread of atheistic communism.

This invasion could mean the end of the United Nations if it does not immediately and successfully take the necessary sanctions to stop this merciless slaughter of innocent, freedom-loving people.

I heartily commend our representatives in the United Nations for the speedy action they have taken in this crisis and urge them to press for sanctions immediately which will be even more effective.

I commend the executive branch of our Government, including the State Department and the Defense Department for the alert response to this horrible state of war which was thrust upon the world so suddenly. I call upon them to advise with Congress in revising our strategy and policy in the Far East.

I will insist that the House Foreign Affairs Committee, of which I am a member, consider a concurrent resolution which I have introduced along with other members of this body calling upon the President of the United States to immediately take the initiative in calling a general conference of the United Nations pursuant to article 109 for the purpose of making the United Nations capable of preventing war.

This bill, which I introduced January 15, 1949, is known as House Concurrent Resolution 15 and states:

Whereas all the world deeply desires durable peace; and

Whereas the United Nations was created as an instrument to preserve the peace of the world; and

Whereas experience increasingly indicates that the United Nations in its present structure is not fully adequate for this task; and

Whereas the United Nations Charter in its article 109 provides a procedure whereby the Charter of the United Nations may be revised and amended: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President of the United States should immediately take the initiative in calling a General Conference of the United Nations pursuant to article 109 for the purpose of making the United Nations capable of enacting, interpreting, and enforcing world law to prevent war.

PRODUCTION OF SYNTHETIC LIQUID FUELS FROM COAL

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced a bill which will provide tax credit incentive for construction by liquid fuel users of plants for production of synthetic liquid fuels from coal. My purpose in introducing this legislation is to encourage the development of the synthetic liquid fuel industry, and to provide facilities for production of synthetic liquid fuel in the event of a national emergency.

I have in mind principally the Nation's railroads. We are well aware of the rapid rate our railroads are switching from coal-burning steam locomotives to Diesel-electric locomotives. The increase has been extremely great since the close of World War II.

We can all recall how inadequate were our meager domestic supplies of oil during World War II. We can also recall the great demands placed on our railroads, which then had an adequate supply of coal, except during one extremely hard winter. What would happen now to our rail-transportation system if we were faced once more with the oil shortage of World War II? It would be competing with the needs of our military services for an extremely limited supply of oil. Most of our railroads would find it impossible to reconvert to steam for their old locomotives have been turned into scrap. Production of new steam locomotives would in turn place too great a burden on the steel industry which today, in time of peace, is operating at full capacity to meet demand.

The time to solve the oil-shortage problem is now, when materials and labor are available to construct plants for conversion of coal into Diesel fuel. The railroads have ready access to coal. There would be no transport problem in connection with the raw materials. While it is true that the processes for converting coal to liquid fuel have not yet proved themselves to be competitive with natural oil, production on a commercial basis would cut pilot-plant costs. Elimination of distribution costs, plus the tax incentive, should enable the railroads, in particular, to utilize synthetic liquid fuels on an economically feasible basis.

Unless steps are taken now, Mr. Speaker, our transport system may break under the burden in case we should have another war when an oil shortage even more critical than that of 1941–45 will occur.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, there would be two important byproducts to such a proposal. Operation of the synthetic plants on the part of the railroads would take up some of the employment slack created by Dieselization of the lines. Another important byproduct is that such a program would restore to coal one of its traditional markets.

I hope the Committee on Ways and Means will give this proposal serious consideration.

KOREA

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, last November, in company with three other Members of the House, it was my privilege to visit Korea. At that time General Roberts, who heads our military mission there, said it was not a question of if the Communists would invade Korea, but when they would invade Korea. The "when" apparently has arrived.

As we look over events of what has happened in Korea, we can only come to one conclusion. It has been the policy of the State Department, through Messrs. Acheson, Hiss, Latimer, Jessup, Service, and others, that has caused the softness toward communism in the Far East. Undoubtedly the same pattern is being recommended for Formosa, southeast Asia, and the Philippines. In my opinion we are in a dangerous situation. If a boatload of refugees coming out of Korea should be overtaken by a Russian submarine and sent to the bottom of the sea, what will happen then? It will take some level, cool heads at this time to find the proper course to follow. The horse is stolen, the barn door has been unlocked. The American people would hardly permit soldiers to be sent off to Korea to fight this oriental war. Had General MacArthur been placed in complete control of all the Far East this undeclared war would never have happened.

RAILWAY SWITCHMEN'S STRIKE AFFECTS GRAIN SITUATION

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, revise and extend my remarks and include several telegrams.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, the switchmen's strike which went into effect yesterday morning on the Rock Island and four other western railroads has brought about a most serious situation with respect to the movement of grain and harvest supplies in the great wheat-growing areas of this country. The Rock Island Railroad which traverses some of the most important wheat-growing areas in this country has been forced to close down just as harvest is getting underway. This means no outlet for millions of bushels of grain already in storage in elevators along the Rock Island and which must be moved out before the new crop can be received, and no possibility for handling the new crop which must in most cases be piled on the ground. It is impossible to estimate the loss of food which may result or the financial losses which may be suffered if this strike continues.

I am in receipt of many, many telegrams from farmers, cooperative organizations, grain dealers, and other businessmen demanding that something be done to relieve this impending disaster and urging that Congress pass legislation which will prohibit strikes in essential industries.

It is unfortunate that the Railway Labor Act, a great constructive piece of labor legislation which in the past has worked well, is breaking down now simply because there are a few labor leaders who are determined that it shall not work. If this constructive legislation breaks down because of a lack of cooperation on the part of those who sponsored it in the first place and who have received great benefits under its provisions, then there is no alternative as I see it except the enactment of legislation which will prohibit strikes in transportation and other vital industries.

Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I include herewith copies of a few of the many telegrams which I have received on this matter.

DODGE CITY, KANS., June 23, 1950.
Hon. CLIFFORD HOPE,
United States House of Representatives:

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 8782) to continue a system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of school-age and under-school-age children in the District of Columbia through June 30, 1951, and ask unanimous consent that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to authorize and direct the Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia to establish and operate in the public schools and other suitable locations a system of nusersies and nursery schools for day care of school-age and under-school-age children, and for other purposes," approved July 16, 1946, as amended, is amended by striking out "until June 30, 1950, and no longer" and inserting in lieu thereof "until June 30, 1951, and no longer."

SEC. 2. Section 3 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. The Board is authorized to make and enforce rules and regulations governing admission to and use and enjoyment of said nurseries and nursery schools, including the fixing of fees to be charged parents for care and maintenance therein of their children; which fees shall, as near as practicable, equal the expenditures of the District of Columbia for personal services, labor, food, and supplies in the operation and maintenance of such nurseries and nursery schools or to enter into contracts with any private or public agency or agencies for such care and maintenance: Provided, That the Board may, in cases where parents are unable to pay for such care waive all or part of such fees. All fees collected under the provisions of this act shall be paid to the Collector of Taxes of the District of Columbia and deposited into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of an account to be known as 'Miscellaneous trust-fund deposits, District of Columbia—Day care nurseries,' said fund to be available, in addition to appropriations made pursuant to section 4 of this act, for expenditure for the purposes of this act: Provided further, That such fund shall be audited and disbursed in the same manner as other trust funds are audited and disbursed by the District of Columbia: And provided further, That any balance remaining in such trust-fund account after June 30, 1951, shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts of the District of Columbia."

SEC. 3. Section 4 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. There is authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia not otherwise appropriated, not exceeding $100,000 to carry out the purposes of this act."

SEC. 4. Section 2 of this act shall take effect upon enactment.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to continue the present system of nurseries and nursery schools for the day care of children in the District of Columbia through June 30, 1951, and authorizes an appropriation of $100,000 to carry out the purposes of this bill.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have voiced no objection to the continuation of these child-care centers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHANGING DESIGNATION OF HEALTH OFFICER AND ASSISTANT HEALTH OFFICER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA TO DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC HEALTH AND ASSISTANT DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC HEALTH

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 8709) to change the designation of Health Officer and Assistant Health Officer of the District of Columbia, respectively, to Director of Public Health and Assistant Director of Public Health, and ask unanimous consent that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state why this is necessary?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. The purpose of this bill is to change the designation of the Health Officer and Assistant Health Officer of the District of Columbia, respectively, to Director of Public Health and Assistant Director of Public Health. This legislation was requested by the Commissioners for the District of Columbia and unanimously approved by the District Committee.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Changing the name of the Health Officer to Director conforms to the standard adopted in the other 48 States. It simply changes the word "officer" to "administrator."

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Is the gentleman from Nebraska in favor of this bill?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I think there is nothing wrong with the bill.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. This does nothing to increase the salaries of the Director or Assistant Director, or the addition of a few more assistants, and so forth?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Not that I know of. They are known as directors of public health and assistant directors of public health in the various 48 States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Health Officer of the District of Columbia shall be known as the Director of Public Health and the Assistant Health Officer of the District of Columbia shall be known as the Assistant Director of Public Health.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect 30 days after its enactment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLLECTION, PAYMENT, AND DISHONOR OF DEMAND ITEMS

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 8055) relating to the collection, payment, and dishonor of demand items, and to the revocation of credit for, and payment of, such items, by banks in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in any case in which a bank in the District of Columbia receives, other than for immediate payment over the counter, a demand item payable by, at, or through such bank and such bank gives credit for such demand item before midnight of the day of receipt of such item, such bank may have until midnight of its next business day after receipt of such item within which to dishonor or refuse payment of such item. Any credit so given, together with all related entries on the books of the the receiving bank, may be revoked by such bank, by returning such item, or if such item is held for protest, or at the time is lost, or is not in the possession of such bank, by giving written notice of dishonor, nonpayment, or revocation. Such credit and related entries shall be revoked by such bank only if such item or such written notice is dispatched in the mails or by other expeditious means not later than midnight of such bank's next business day after the item was received. For the purpose of determining when notice of dishonor must be given or protest must be made under the law relative to negotiable instruments, an item duly presented, credit for which is revoked as authorized by this act, shall be deemed dishonored on the day such item or such written notice is dispatched. A bank, revoking credit pursuant to the authority of this act, is entitled to refund of, or credit for, the amount of such item.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this act—

(1) a demand item received by a bank on a day other than its business day, or received on a business day after its regular business hours, or during afternoon or evening periods when it has reopened or remained open for limited functions, shall be deemed to have been received at the opening of such bank's next business day;

(2) the term "credit" includes payment, remittance, advice of credit, or authorization to charge and, in cases where the item is received for deposit as well as for payment, such term also includes the making of appropriate entries to the receiving bank's general ledger without regard to whether such item is posted to individual customers' ledgers; and

(3) each branch or office of a bank shall be deemed a separate bank;

SEC. 3. The effect of this act may be varied by agreement.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 11, strike out "bank" and the period and insert "bank."

Page 3, line 12, insert:

"(4) the term 'bank' includes any bank or trust company doing business in the District of Columbia."

Page 3, line 14, at the end of the line, insert the word "written."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to authorize any bank in the District of Columbia which gives credit for a check or other demand item on the day of its receipt to revoke such credit and return the item without any payment at any time before midnight of the bank's next following business day. The exception to this would be where an item was received for immediate payment over the counter.

This legislation was introduced at the request of the District of Columbia Bankers Association and has been endorsed by the American Bankers Association and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

All but 6 of the 48 States and the District of Columbia have enacted laws substantially the same as this proposed legislation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CODE OF LAW FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA RELATING TO THE DISPOSAL OF DEAD HUMAN BODIES

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 7881) to amend sections 675 and 676 of the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, regulating the disposal of dead human bodies in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 675 and 676 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. 1296), as amended, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 675. (a) Removal of dead bodies: No dead body of any human being or any part of such body shall, in said District, be removed from place to place, interred, or in any manner disposed of without a permit for such removal, interment, or disposal granted by the Health Officer of said District, or by the proper municipal, county, or State authorities at the place where the death or disinterment occurred, except that permits for the removal of dead bodies from place to place within said District may be issued by any deputy duly appointed as provided in subsection (b) of this section. No such body or any part of such body shall be removed from place to place, interred, or in any manner disposed of otherwise than in accordance with the terms of said permit. Permits issued by the Health Officer or any duly appointed deputy for the removal, interment, or disposal of such body or part thereof shall be issued only upon the presentation of a proper death certificate, signed by a physician registered at the Health Department of said District, who attended the deceased during his last illness, or by the coroner of said District or his deputy, except that whenever any person shall die at home during the hours between dusk and dawn and such person was attended in his last illness by such a physician, a licensed undertaker may, if he shall certify that he is unable to obtain such death certificate signed by such attending physician, apply, on a special removal request form furnished by the Health Officer, for a permit for the removal of the body of such person within said District if such special removal request form includes written confirmation of the death of such person signed by any physician duly licensed to practice in said District, and the Health Officer or any deputy duly appointed for such purposes may thereupon issue a permit for such removal: Provided, That no licensed undertaker shall embalm any such body until the completed death certificate has been secured from the attending physician: And provided further, That every such special removal request form which has been used to obtain such removal permit shall, not later than 5 o'clock postmeridian following the time of death, be filed with the Health Officer. No such body shall be disinterred in said District without a permit granted by the Health Officer. Permits for disinterment (including permission to reinter or transport the body disinterred) shall be issued only upon the written application of the nearest relative or the legal representative of the deceased. No superintendent or other person in charge of any cemetery in said District or other place for the disposal of dead bodies shall assist in or assent to or allow any such interment, disinterment, or disposition to be made in such cemetery or place until permit shall be given as aforesaid. It shall be the duty of the Health Officer to furnish all superintendents or other persons in charge of cemeteries in said District with a currently correct list of all municipal, county, and State officials authorized to issue burial or removal permits in adjoining States. It shall be the duty of every such superintendent or other person who shall receive any such permit aforesaid to endorse thereon the date of the interment, disinterment, or disposal and to sign and forward the same before 6 o'clock postmeridian of the Saturday following the day of burial, disinterment, or disposal to the Health Officer of said District.

"(b) Appointment of deputies to issue removal permits: The Commissioners of said District, upon recommendation of the Health Officer, may appoint a reasonable number of District of Columbia and United States employees as deputies who shall be authorized to issue permits for the removal of dead human bodies or parts thereof from place to place within said District, in accordance with the provisions of section 675 (a) of this code. Such deputies shall be furnished with a currently correct list of names of physicians registered at the Health Department of the District of Columbia to enable them to ascertain the authenticity of death certificates.

"SEC. 676. Conveyance through the District: No dead body of any human being or any part of such body shall be in any manner carried or conveyed from, in, to, or through said District by any person, or by any public or private conveyance, without a permit therefor first granted by the Health Officer of said District, or any duly appointed deputy, or by the proper municipal, county, or State authorities at the place where the death or disinterment occurred: Provided, That an such body or part of such body may be brought into said District, carried through the same in transit upon a permit of the proper authorities, and whenever the remains of any deceased person have been conveyed, transferred, or removed beyond the limits of said District it shall be the duty of the person or agent or officer of the corporation having charge of such conveyance, transfer, or removal to detach, date, sign, and return to the Health Officer the permit authorizing such conveyance, transfer, or removal before 6 o'clock postmeridian of the Saturday following the day of such conveyance, transfer, or removal of said remains."

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCMILLAN of South Carolina:

On page 1, line 9, after the comma insert the word "disinterred."

On page 2, line 1, after the word "interment", insert the word "disinterment."

On page 2, line 15, after the word "his", insert "or her."

On page 2, following line 16, insert "or by the proper municipal, county, or State authorities at the place where the death occurred."

On page 5, line 1, after the word "occurred", strike out the semicolon and insert the following "except such who have died of Asiatic cholera, yellow fever, typhus fever, leprosy, diptheria, the plague, or scarlet fever."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend existing law relating to the issuance of permits for the removal of dead human bodies. Under the proposed amendment it would be possible in these cases where (a) a person dies at his home in the hours between dark and dawn; (b) the person was attended in his last illness by a licensed physician; (c) the undertaker certifies that he is unable to obtain the death certificate from the attending physician, and (d) a licensed physician, other than the attending physician, certifies the fact of death, a permit to remove the dead body may be issued.

The permit to remove would not authorize embalming or burial. The usual burial permit would be required for the latter and the usual certificate of death would be required before issuance of the burial permit.

This legislation was requested by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLLECTION, PAYMENT, AND DISHONOR OF DEMAND ITEMS

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H. R. 8055) relating to certain banking practices in the District of Columbia, for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman.

The SPEAKER. To do that we would have to vacate all the proceedings by which the bill was passed.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Can I do it without that?

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman from California may proceed for a minute and yield to whom he pleases.

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Will the gentleman from South Carolina return to the paragraph of the bill H. R. 8055, section 3, on page 3:

The effect of this act may be varied by written agreement.

This is not clear to me and I raise the question of whether we are passing a law affecting the banking procedures of the District of Columbia and whether that implies that the bill may then be changed by written agreement without further reference to the Congress.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. No; this does not; this bill just makes the laws of the District of Columbia conform to those of 40 other States.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That may be, but will the gentleman explain section 3? What is it that is to be varied by written agreement without rereference to the Congress? It is on page 3, line 14.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. I will ask the author of the bill, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SIMPSON] to explain it.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure that I can explain it. I can only tell you what I think it is.

The purpose of the bill was to authorize any bank in the District of Columbia which gives credit for a check or other demand item on the date of its receipt to revoke such credit and return the item at any time before midnight of the bank's next following business day. The exception to this would be the case in which an item was received for immediate payment over the counter.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. That is in another section. There is no objection to that.

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. If the banks of the District agree in writing with a depositor as to the variance of the time of clearing of checks this would permit such agreement, in my opinion.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, I think there is some doubt about section 3.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I was not on the subcommittee that handled that bill, but it was my understanding that frequently there are written agreements as to the handling of certain kinds of checks. When that is done it gives them the right to proceed with an agreement, a personal agreement between the bank and the individual depositor.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. There certainly is no objection to that, and if that is intended to be an agreement between the bank and the individual depositor, then I withdraw any objection that I might have had to the bill.

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield.

Mr. SIMPSON of Illinois. I will assure the gentleman, having introduced this legislation at the request of the banks of the District of Columbia, that we will find out exactly what is intended to do under it, and make a report to the gentleman, and if a change is necessary, seek to have it made in the other body.

AMENDMENT TO ARCHITECTS' REGISTRATION ACT

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 2887) to amend the Architects' Registration Act for the District of Columbia in order to safeguard life, health, and property, and to promote the public welfare, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 10 of the Architects' Registration Act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. A roster showing the names and places of business and residences of all architects shall be prepared by the secretary of the Board during the month of June of each year; such roster shall be printed out of the funds of the Board as provided in section 11. On or before the 1st day of August each year the Board shall submit to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia a report of its transactions for the preceding fiscal year, together with a complete statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Board, certified by the chairman and the secretary, and a copy of the said roster of architects."

SEC. 2. Section 14 of such act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this act, no person shall practice architecture in the District of Columbia or use the title 'architect' or 'registered architect', or any words, letters, figures, or other device indicating or intending to imply that he or she is an architect, without having qualified as required by this act.

"(b) The practice of architecture within the meaning and intent of this act consists of rendering or offering to render services by consultations, preliminary studies, drawings, specifications, or any other service in connection with the design of any building or addition or structural alteration thereto, whether one or all of these services are performed either in person or as the directing head of an organization.

"(c) An architect within the meaning of this act is an individual technically and legally qualified to practice architecture and who is authorized under this act to practice architecture."

"SEC. 16. No firm, company, partnership, association, corporation or other similar organization shall be registered as an architect. Only individuals shall be registered as architects but a number of architects constituting a firm may use the collective title 'architects' or 'registered architects'.

"SEC. 17. Nothing contained in this act shall prevent the draftsmen, students, clerks of work, superintendents, and other employees of those lawfully practicing as architects under the provisions of this act from acting under the instruction, control, or supervision of their employers, or to prevent the employment of superintendents of the construction, enlargement, or structural alteration of buildings or any appurtenance thereto. Nor shall anything contained in this act be construed to apply to alterations to any building which do not involve changes affecting the structural safety thereof or the public health; nor to prevent the preparation of details and shop drawings by persons, other than architects, for use in connection with the execution of their work; nor to prevent the preparation of drawings or details for fixtures, cabinet work, furniture, or other interior appliances or equipment, or for any work necessary to provide for their installation unless the same involves public health or safety; nor apply to the construction or alteration of a non-fire resistive building which conforms with the District of Columbia Building Code requirements and that does not cover 1,000 square feet of ground area, and does not have a height of over 20 feet to the uppermost ceiling, or two habitable floors above a basement, and does not have a volume of over 20,000 cubic feet.

"SEC. 18. A building, for the purposes of this act, is any structure consisting of foundation, floors, walls, columns, girders, and roof, or a combination of any number of these parts, with or without other parts or appurtenances. All drawings and specifications prepared for such structures, or enlargements or structural alterations to such structures, in accordance with this act, shall be signed by the architect responsible for their production.

"SEC. 19. (a) Nothing in this act shall prevent any person who actually engaged in the practice of architecture under the title of architect prior to December 13, 1924, from continuing the practice of architecture without a certificate of registration if such person has filed with the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects an affidavit establishing to the satisfaction of said Board the fact that he or she was in practice as an architect in the District of Columbia on and prior to December 13, 1924: Provided, That registration shall not be granted under this subsection unless the application therefor is filed with the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects within 1 year after the effective date of this subsection.

"(b) Any properly qualified person may be granted registration without examination who submits evidence that he or she was engaged in the practice of architecture in the District of Columbia for 5 years immediately preceding the effective date of this subsection, and submits evidence of experience in architecture satisfactory to the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects, indicating that he or she is qualified to assume responsible charge of the work involved in the practice of architecture: Provided, That registration shall not be granted under this subsection unless the application therefor is filed with the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects within 1 year after the effective date of this subsection.

"(c) Any properly qualified person who was on active duty in the armed forces of the United States at any time after October 16, 1940, may be granted registration without examination who submits evidence that prior to the effective date of this subsection he or she was for an aggregate period of 5 years engaged in the practice of architecture in the District of Columbia, and submits evidence of experience in architecture satisfactory to the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects, indicating that he or she is qualified to assume responsible charge of the work involved in the practice of architecture: Provided, That registration shall not be granted under this subsection unless the application therefor is filed with the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects within 1 year after the effective date of this subsection.

"SEC. 20. Any citizen of the United States or any person who has declared his (or her) intention of becoming a citizen, being at least 21 years of age, of good moral character, and who has had at least 3 years of practical experience in offices engaged in the practice of architecture as defined by this act, may apply for registration or for such examination as shall be requisite for registration under this act.

"SEC. 21. The applicant shall satisfactorily pass an examination in such technical and professional subjects as shall be prescribed by the said Board. The Board may, in lieu of examination, accept registration or certification as an architect in another State, Territory, or country where the qualifications prescribed at the time of such registration or certification were equal to those prescribed in the District of Columbia at the date of application; and where such State, Territory, or country accepts in like manner the registration of architects of the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 22. An architect who has lawfully practiced architecture for a period of more than 10 years outside of the District of Columbia shall, except as otherwise provided in section 21, be required to take only a practical examination, the nature of which shall be prescribed by the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects.

"SEC. 23. (a) The fees to be paid to the treasurer of the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects shall be fixed by said Board from time to time and shall not exceed in amount the several fees provided for in this section.

"(b) The record shall also contain the name, known place of business and residence, and the date and number of the certificate of registration of every architect entitled to practice his or her profession in the District of Columbia.

"SEC. 25. (a) Every architect registered in the District of Columbia shall annually, during the month of May, renew his certificate of registration and pay the renewal fee required by section 23 of this act. It shall be unlawful for any architect who fails to renew his or her registration to continue the practice of architecture, subject to restoration upon paying the fee therefor prescribed in accordance with section 23 of this act.

"(b) A person who fails to renew his certificate of registration during the month of May in each year may not thereafter renew his certificate except upon payment of the fee required by section 23 of this act for the restoration of an expired certificate of registration.

"(c) Every renewal certificate shall expire on the 30th day of April following the issuance.

"SEC. 26. Exemptions: Nothing in this act shall be construed to affect or prevent the following, provided that no words, letters, figures, or other device shall be used in such manner as to tend to convey the impression that the person rendering such service is an architect duly registered under this act:

"(a) Consultants, officers, and employees of the United States or of the District of Columbia governments while engaged solely in the practice of architecture for said governments.

"(b) Landscape architects, landscape engineers, city and regional planners from the preparation of drawings for, and the supervision of, planting, grading, walks, paving, and such minor structural features as fences, steps, walls, pools, and garden structures, normally included as a part of their work, where such features could not constitute a possible menace to life, health, or public welfare.

"(c) Professional structural engineers, heating engineers, plumbing engineers, air conditioning and ventilation engineers, electrical engineers, elevator engineers and civil engineers from performing architectural services which are purely incidental to their engineering practice.

"SEC. 27. Revocation of certificate: The Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects may revoke any certificate after 30 days' notice with grant of hearings to the holder thereof if proof satisfactory to the Board be presented in the following cases:

"(a) In case it is shown that the certificate was obtained through fraud or misrepresentation.

"(b) In case the holder of the certificate has been found guilty by said Board or by a court of justice of any fraud or deceit in his professional practice or has been convicted of a felony by a court of justice.

"(c) In case the holder of the certificate has been found guilty by said Board of gross incompetency or of recklessness in the planning or construction of buildings."

SEC. 4. Sections 30, 31, and 32 of such act, as amended, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 30. Any person who shall practice or offer to practice architecture or who shall use the title 'architect' or 'registered architect' or any other words, letters, figures, or other device indicating or intending to imply that the person using the same is an architect, without having complied with the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $200, or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, prosecution therefor to be made in the name of the District of Columbia by the corporation counsel.

"SEC. 31. Saving clause: If any section or sections, clause or clauses, of this act, or any regulations promulgated thereunder, be declared unconstitutional or invalid, that shall not invalidate any other sections or clauses of this act, or any other regulations promulgated thereunder.

"SEC. 32. Repeal of conflicting legislation: All laws or parts of laws and regulations promulgated thereunder in conflict with the provisions of this act shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

SEC. 5. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect the force of validity of any act of the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects performed prior to the date of enactment of this act.

SEC. 6. The act of December 13, 1924, as amended by the act of May 29, 1928, and by this act, may be cited as the "Architects' Registration Act."

SEC. 7. The term "effective date of this subsection" as used in section 19 of the Architects' Registration Act shall mean the effective date of this amendatory act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, strike out lines 1 to 7 inclusive and insert the following: "nor apply to the construction or alteration of a building that does not cover over 1,000 square feet of ground area, and does not have a height of over 20 feet to the uppermost ceiling, or two habitable floors above a basement."

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the primary purpose in amending the present act is to provide additional safety for the life, health, and property of the citizens of the District of Columbia as set forth in the proposed amendments.

Under present practice the architects of the District of Columbia are classified as "architects"—those who were practicing architecture prior to December 13, 1924, the date the first act became effective; and "registered architects"—those who have qualified to practice architecture by examination. The proposed amendments eliminate the aforementioned classification, so that all practitioners are hereafter known and described as "architects."

The present Architects' Registration Act contains no definition of either an architect or the practice of architecture. In order to define the practice of architecture, and a person qualified to practice architecture section 14 of the present act is amended by: First, stating, specifically of what the practice of architecture shall consist; and second, who shall be qualified to practice architecture. This amendment also prohibits any individual from practicing architecture in the District of Columbia unless and until he or she shall have qualified as required by the act. This is one of the most important changes proposed because only persons qualified by training and experience will be permitted to design structures in and around which the people are, or could be, constantly subjected to danger of different kinds and types, a menace to their health and bodily safety.

Section 16 provides that, since the practice of architecture is an individual endeavor, the corporate fiction must and should be eliminated and only individuals may be registered, except that the collective title "architects" or "registered architects" may be used by a firm.

Section 17 proposes another important change. By the provisions therein contained no one, other than an architect who qualifies under this act as amended, can practice architecture in the District of Columbia except where the public health or safety is not involved. The provisions, however, permit the removal, relocation, or installation of nonstructural partitions in a building, the rearrangement or installation of store fixtures, interior decorating not involving structural changes, and the construction of small residences and simple structures to be accomplished by an individual other than an architect registered under this act.

Section 18 requires that all drawings and specifications for buildings as defined by the act be signed by the architect responsible for their production.

Section 19—grandfather clause—provides that within 1 year after the effective date of this section those who actually engaged in the practice of achitecture prior to certain dates and certain qualified persons who were in the armed forces of the United States after October 16, 1940, may be granted registration upon the submission of required evidence. Section 20 raises the age limit from 20 years to 21 years and requires that an applicant for examination have at least 3 years' practical experience in offices engaged in the practice of architecture.

Section 21 eliminates the provision granting registration without examination to a person with a diploma of graduation or certificate from an architectural school or college together with 3 years' practical experience in architecture. One year after the passage of H. R. 2887 registration in the District of Columbia will be granted only to those persons who shall satisfactorily pass an examination as prescribed by the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects, except that the Board may accept registration or certification as an architect in another State, Territory, or country.

Section 22 contains a technical change necessitated by the amendments.

Section 23 increases the fee paid by an applicant for registration from $10 to $25.

Sections 24 and 25 contain technical changes necessitated by the amendments.

Section 26 changes exemptions contained in the present act in the following respects:

Consultants, officers, and employees of the United States or the District of Columbia so long as their architectural practice is confined to official work.

Landscape architects, landscape engineers, city and regional planners from the preparation of drawings for, and the supervision of, planting, grading, walks, paving, and such minor structural features as fences, steps, walls, pools, and garden structures, normally included as a part of their work, where such feature could not constitute a possible menace to life. health, or public welfare.

Professional structural engineers, heating engineers, plumbing engineers, air conditioning and ventilation engineers, electrical engineers, elevator engineers, and civil engineers are exempt when performing architectural services incidental to their engineering practice.

Section 27 grants authority to the Board of Examiners and Registrars to revoke certificate in certain cases.

Section 4 amends sections 30, 31, and 32 of the present act.

Section 30 provides that a person found guilty of unauthorized practice or use of title "architect" or "registered architect" shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by a fine of $200 or 1 year imprisonment or both.

Section 31 contains the saving clause.

Section 32 repeals conflicting legislation.

Section 5 protects the validity of any act of the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects performed prior to the enactment of this act.

This legislation was endorsed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia under date of May 10 in a report to the chairman of the House District Committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina: Strike out subsections (b) and (c) of section 19 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) Any properly qualified person may be granted registration without examination who submits an affidavit establishing to the satisfaction of the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architect that he or she was regularly engaged in the practice of architecture in the District of Columbia for 5 years immediately preceding the effective date of this subsection: Provided, That registration shall not be granted under this subsection unless the application therefor is filed with the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects within 1 year after the effective date of this subsection."

"(c) Any properly qualified person who was on active duty in the Armed Forces of the United States at any time after October 16, 1940, may be granted registration without examination who submits an affidavit establishing to the satisfaction of the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects that prior to the effective date of this subsection he or she was for an aggregate period of 5 years regularly engaged in the practice of architecture in the District of Columbia: Provided, That registration shall not be granted under this subsection unless the application therefor is filed with the Board of Examiners and Registrars of Architects within 1 year after the effective date of this subsection."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENDING PROVISIONS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA EMERGENCY RENT ACT

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6669) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue for 30 minutes, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6669, with Mr. YOUNG in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to extend until January 31, 1951, the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Control Act which was originally enacted in the Seventy-seventh Congress and became public law on December 2, 1941. The original act regulated rents in the District of Columbia through December 31, 1945, and has been amended each year since that time.

The House District Committee in considering extension of rent control in the District of Columbia discussed the possibility of extending rent control until January 31, 1951, with an amendment that the Commissioners would have authority after January 31, 1951, to extend rent control for an additional time if they felt such an emergency still existed. In a discussion in a committee meeting on June 15, 1950, the members of the committee agreed that final authority for any continuation of rent control in the District of Columbia should rest in the Congress rather than in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the bill was amended accordingly so that final authority would rest in the Congress and would be acted upon by a joint resolution.

The Rent Administrator for the District of Columbia in a report under date of April 18, 1950, to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia stated that the necessity for rent control in the District of Columbia would exist for at least another year pending unforeseen events, with one exception that furnished nonhousekeeping rooms rented by the month or by the week would be decontrolled as the normal supply and demand were almost in balance. The recommendations of the Administrator were written into the bill and accordingly such furnished nonhousekeeping rooms would be decontrolled with the expiration of the present rent law on June 30, 1950.

This legislation has the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as well as the Rent Administrator for the District of Columbia.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I took a ride into the country which gave me information which I now find very interesting in view of the consideration of this extension of rent control. Anyone on this floor who has gone into the country around the District of Columbia within the past few weeks will realize the complete lack of necessity of any bill of this kind. I have no idea how many thousands of new living units are being built, but it would astonish anyone to ride down the Lee Highway as far as Fairfax, or to ride into the northern sections around the Maryland edge of the District. As you know, Mr. Chairman, and as the Members know, once rent control is imposed upon any nation, it is almost an impossible thing to get rid of. It has been one of the greatest handicaps economically to several nations, including France, and certainly of all places in the United States today where there is a glut approaching in the building of living units, this bill should not be passed by this House.

Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to ask the House to go on record and to ask for a roll call on this bill so that we may know exactly who believes in imposing a rent-control act upon the District of Columbia.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to reply to my distinguished and good friend from California who has just spoken with reference to the problem of rent control within the District of Columbia. It is true, there was evidence submitted before the committee that the building of new units in the District of Columbia, I believe, exceeded that of any other city in the United States. But, as one who has been opposed to rent control nationally, I felt that as long as this Congress had established the policy of continuing rent control, that it was certainly needed in the District of Columbia, and I so voted in reporting the bill out.

Let me say, furthermore, to my good friend from California, that while the record in this city has been excellent in the matter of construction of living quarters and housing units, that as yet the complete problem has not been answered and maybe it never will be completely answered. But I hope my good friend will review his statement and not conclude to put the burden upon us of having a roll call, though I am sure the House will vote a continuation of rent control on a roll call for the District of Columbia.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. As the gentleman knows, I have the highest regard for him and his judgment, but I would like to ask him a couple of questions. Did the members of this committee themselves actually drive out through Fairfax and see the great, almost incredible building that is going on out in that area, 14 miles out of town, great apartment buildings, that you do not often find in the heart of larger cities?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman that I have driven about considerably in the city of Washington and the surrounding country, and while there is a great deal of building going on, many of those apartments will not be ready for occupancy for 6 months to a year.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. It must be understood also that the State of Virginia has rent decontrol, beginning as of July 1, so that might have had something to do with additional apartments in Virginia.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. How about the area in the other direction, over beyond the Maryland line?

My desire to put this House on record is not to embarrass anybody, which I would regret immensely, but to put on record the people who are willing to impose on the United States a system of continued rent control, of which it has never been found possible for a Nation to rid itself, once it was imposed upon it. I think we should know who believes in free government and who does not, and it was for that purpose I was going to ask for a roll call.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I have no objection to a roll call because, since the war was over I have always voted against rent controls. I opposed this bill in committee. But I must say to the gentleman from California that we are adopting rent control for the Nation, and it will expire, I believe, on January 1, 1951. I was hopeful that this bill would conform pretty much with the national law so that it could pass out of the picture then. Certainly we do not want to continue rent control. I have opposed it. But I think it would be wrong at this time to take it off in the District and not take it off in the rest of the Nation. Let us let it all go at the same time. Let the head go with the tail. This is the dying gasp of rent control as far as the District is concerned, and the Nation, I hope.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. What is the connection? What has taking it off in the District got to do with taking it off in the Nation? We should have taken it off in the Nation.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. We should have taken it off Nation-wide.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. What has that got to do with the District?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Rent control is needed in the District perhaps more than in any other large city because of the large number of people living here working in the Government. Rent controls should go all over the country at the same time.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I do not want to belabor this, but if the gentleman will just go up Sixteenth Street or Massachusetts Avenue or Wisconsin Avenue he will see the apartment houses being built in the District. I do not see any connection between whether we have rent control in the District and whether we have it in the United States. They are separate problems. Federal rent control ought to be taken off in both places. Rent control is a local problem.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The last rent-control bill we passed in the District decontrolled new apartments. Two or three amendments are being offered to this bill, and one is to decontrol luxury apartments, I presume those renting for over $80 or $85. There is also an amendment to decontrol hotel apartments.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I call the gentleman's attention to figures that are put out by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. They show that in many of the cities where decontrol has taken place the cost of rental units has gone down. The only units raised in most of those areas are very low-priced houses or apartments where the rent was too low, anyway. Why will not rents go down in the District if you do not have rent control just as readily as they will go up?

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, may I state that rent control in the District of Columbia has been administered with a minimum of complaints. Very few complaints from the residents of the District of Columbia have been registered with the Congress or the House District Committee relative to the manner in which rent control has been administered in the District of Columbia. Mr. Cogswell, the present rent administrator, I think should be complimented. Almost every landlord that has appealed to him for an increase, during the past 5 years, has had his request granted. In fact, it is my opinion that the landlords in the District of Columbia are not suffering in any respect at the present time from the effects of rent control. The Congress enacts laws making it necessary for additional employees to be employed here in the District of Columbia each year, and it is our responsibility to see that these employees are not left entirely in the hands of some ruthless real-estate dealer. I certainly would like to see the Government completely divorce itself from all private enterprise; however, since we have had rent control for a number of years, and also for a number of years we were unable to build additional housing facilities in this country, I am of the opinion that we should keep rent control in the thickly populated centers until sufficient housing is available. I certainly hope that within 1 year rent control can be completely abolished throughout the United States. We certainly have more reason for rent control here in the District of Columbia where hundreds of employees are compelled to live while they work for the Government than any other city in the United States.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if I am correct in my recollection, the general, Nation-wide, if I may call it such, Rent Control Extension Act which this House has already passed provided that unless the appropriate governing body of a State or a municipality shall ask for a continuation of rent control within its borders prior to January 31, 1951, then rent control will cease in that municipality.

If they do ask, then rent control under the general act will continue until June 30, 1951, and then stop. On page 1 of the bill we provide the date of January 31, 1951, instead of June 30, 1951. Up to that point it is in conformity with the general law which we passed, but the proposed amendment further reads: "Unless the Congress shall by joint resolution insert a later date." How much later? My understanding was that the committee wanted this bill to conform to the provisions of the general bill whereby the Congress shall have the right by joint resolution to extend it until June 30, 1951. But this says "to a later date." It may be a year later.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. It was the opinion of the committee that this Congress should not try to bind any subsequent Congress and if they want rent control after January 1, they can so provide.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The same observation would apply to the general bill. We cannot bind the Eighty-second Congress under the general bill any more than we can in this bill. But we attempted to do so in the general bill. Of course, the Eighty-second Congress could amend our general bill when it meets next January.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GWINN].

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Chairman, the whole idea of rent control is so bad and so mistaken on the facts that I would like the RECORD to show columns and columns of advertisements of two- three-, and one-room apartments unfurnished for rent, as well as furnished apartments and columns of little places for sale. Whereas less than a third of the space is taken by advertisements of apartments wanted. So there is, in fact, in the city of Washington and the surrounding territory a surplus of apartments as there is in the rest of the country, and a surplus of places for sale.

The whole rent-control idea ought to be abolished in one spot. Let us experiment at least in the District of Columbia and give the people a chance to build new houses for rent to take the place of those less desirable.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWINN. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Three weeks ago the Sunday papers carried 2,351 advertisements of rooms, apartments, and houses for sale of people wanting to rent their house or sell their house or rent their apartments, and only 341 seeking such accommodations.

So I agree with what the gentleman is saying. However, if we are going along with rent control throughout the Nation, we should have a terminal time for the end of rent control in the District.

Mr. GWINN. But if we are wrong for the Nation, we ought not to pass the wrong onto the District of Columbia, which is so abused anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 (b) of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended (D. C. Code, 1940 edition, sec. 45–1601 (b)), is hereby amended by striking out "June 30, 1950" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1951."

SEC. 2. Section 8 of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended (D. C. Code, 1940 edition, sec. 45–1608), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Where a landlord petitioning for an adjustment under section 4 must prove the existence or nonexistence of any fact in the period from January 1, 1941, to July 1, 1945, he shall not be required to produce the evidence deemed by the Administrator to be the most reliable for such proof, if he shows to the satisfaction of the Administrator that such evidence cannot practicably be produced; in lieu thereof, he may produce such other evidence as the Administrator deems probative."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "June 30, 1951", and insert in lieu thereof "January 31, 1951, unless the Congress shall by joint resolution insert a later date."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike all of section 2, and insert:

"SEC. 2. Section 2 of such act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(5) After June 30, 1950, the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceilings or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for any furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations which are rented as rooms without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms nor rooms in hotels used for occupancy by persons other than transients, that is as living quarters for residents on a permanent basis), and when and for such period as all of the housing accommodations in any building consists of rooms rented as furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms) the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceilings or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for, any such building.'"

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ABERNETHY to the committee amendment: Page 2, strike out all of section 2 of the committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(5) (a) After June 30, 1950, the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceiling or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for any furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations which are rented as rooms without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms), and when and for such period as all of the housing accommodations in any building consists of rooms rented as furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms) the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceilings or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for, any such building.

"(b) After June 30, 1950, self-contained family units (as defined by regulations issued by the Administrator) located in hotels shall continue to be housing accommodations subject to maximum rent ceilings and minimum service standards unless the Administrator issues an order decontrolling them, or any of them, which he shall issue if he finds that such hotel is primarily engaged in furnishing accommodations for transients."

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is a modification of section 2 of the committee amendment. It provides that luxury apartments in transient hotels shall be decontrolled. It brings forward into the bill all of section 5, except the words beginning on line 19 "nor rooms in hotels used for occupancy by persons other than transients."

Mr. Chairman, this amendment will bring the bill into conformity with the Senate bill.

Incidentally, with regard to the luxury apartments, I have conferred with Mr. Cogswell, Administrator for Rent Control in the District, and I hold in my hand a letter from him to the effect that he has no objection to the inclusion of the above amendment in the bill.

I would like also to state that I have contacted 20 of the 25 members of the District of Columbia Committee, all of whom have approved the amendment. There are five members of the committee whom I have not seen, four of whom I know to be out of town, and the other I have been unable to locate.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I think perhaps the RECORD should show what in the opinion of the gentleman from Mississippi and the opinion of the committee is a luxury apartment.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I have referred to luxury apartments in transient hotels, which as I understand includes all apartments in transient hotels.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. It seems to me that is a tacit admission that we do not need rent control in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ABERNETHY. The gentleman may be correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. On the question of luxury apartments we are elected and come down here to serve our districts. I live in the Hotel Washington. Would that be considered as a luxury apartment?

Mr. ABERNETHY. If the gentleman occupies more than one room, it is so regarded, as I understand.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course I do. The gentleman does not suppose I would bring Mrs. McCormack down here to a one-room apartment, does he?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I do not intend to argue with the gentleman. I yielded to him for the purpose of answering his question and explaining what was regarded as a luxury apartment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is that what a luxury apartment is?

Mr. ABERNETHY. That is what the Administrator calls it, as I understand.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is a rather strange idea, to my mind.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Well, it may be.

Mr. McCORMACK. The committee amendment would take care of that, would it? I am not speaking so much for myself as I am for others, but does the committee amendment decontrol apartments in a hotel?

Mr. ABERNETHY. The committee amendment does not.

Mr. McCORMACK. But your amendment will?

Mr. ABERNETHY. My amendment to the amendment will.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment, offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, there were—ayes 31, noes 19.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agree to.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota: On page 3, after line 7, insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. 3. (c) Where rooms or accommodations are decontrolled in the foregoing section the building in which said rooms or accommodations are located shall also be decontrolled."

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, late on Friday afternoon last my attention was called to the fact that in the present bill as reported by the District Committee, rooming houses were decontrolled, the rooms themselves were decontrolled, but the building was left sitting there subject to the control of the Rent Control Administrator. It appealed to me as being a completely illogical situation, that if we decontrolled the rooms in these rooming houses which permits the operator of the rooming house to increase the rent or the cost of the accommodations furnished, we still leave the landlord sitting there with his hands completely tied under the Rent Control Act. The only Member with whom I have had an opportunity to discuss this, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY], who was the acting chairman of the committee, agrees with me thoroughly that under the bill without amendment it is completely illogical and inconsistent.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. ABERNETHY. This presents a rather peculiar and unusual situation. The bill provides that lodging houses—on recommendation, incidentally, of the Rent Administrator—shall be decontrolled. If you should happen to own a lodging house in the District of Columbia and have it rented to a primary tenant, the primary tenant would be in the happy situation, as the bill now reads, of having the premises decontrolled, but the rent that he would pay you as owner of the house would not be decontrolled. In other words, the rooms would be decontrolled, but you would be left in the ridiculous situation of protecting the primary tenant, as his landlord.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. And it also places us in the position where either the rooms should be decontrolled and the buildings in which they are located decontrolled, or neither of them should be decontrolled.

Mr. ABERNETHY. That is true.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I have therefore offered this amendment, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of correcting what seems to be a completely illogical situation.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. KLEIN. Does the gentleman's amendment decontrol the rooms or does it decontrol the entire rooming house?

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. It merely provides that where the rooms have been decontrolled the building itself should also be decontrolled.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ABERNETHY: Add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 5 (b) (2) of Public Law 45, Eighty-first Congress, first session, is hereby amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 5 (b) (2). The landlord seeks in good faith to recover possession of property for his immediate and personal use and occupancy as a dwelling: Provided, That in the case of housing accommodations for which the rent does not exceed $85 per month in a structure or premises owned or leased by a cooperative corporation or association, no such action or proceeding under this paragraph or (3) of this section shall be maintained unless stock or membership in the cooperative corporation or association has been acquired by persons who are or were tenants in occupancy of at least 65 percent of the dwelling units in the structure or premises at the time said cooperative corporation or association either (1) acquired or leased said structure or premises, or (2) entered into a contract or option to acquire or lease said structure or premises, whichever date is earliest, and who as such stockholders or members are entitled to possession of their respective dwelling units in the structure or premises by virtue of proprietary leases or otherwise; and this provision shall apply where such corporation or association acquired or leased such structure or premises or entered into a contract or option to do so prior to or after the effective date of this amendatory act or unless as holder of stock or membership acquired in the cooperative corporation or association prior to March 1, 1949, a stockholder or member was entitled to possession of a dwelling unit in the structure or premises by virtue of a proprietary lease or otherwise, or * * *."

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, in the first session of this Congress the Rent Control Act of the District of Columbia provided that an apartment could not go cooperative unless 65 percent of the tenants of the apartment purchased stock in the association.

The amendment I have offered continues that situation with the one limitation that it shall not apply to apartments which rent for more than $85 a month. It continues the provision that the apartment cannot go cooperative unless 65 percent of the tenants who pay $85 and less a month rent agree and take that much stock. In other words, the tenant who pays no more than $85 per month is not affected. His unit continues under rent control and cannot be affected by the apartment going cooperative.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. YOUNG, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6669) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. KILBURN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Obviously, a quorum is not present.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 185]

Anderson, Calif.	Furcolo	McConnell
Auchincloss	Gamble	McGrath

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 261 Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PHILLIPS of California) there were—ayes 103, noes 72.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifteen Members are present with the exception of the present occupant of the chair, which makes 216, a quorum.

So the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 (b) of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended (D. C. Code, 1940 ed., sec. 45–1601 (b)), is hereby amended (a) by striking out "June 30, 1950" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1950, unless the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, prior to December 31, 1950, shall declare by resolution that a shortage continues in one or more classes of housing accommodations which requires the continuance of the provisions of this act wtih respect to such class or classes of housing accommodations, in which event the provisions of this act and all regulations, orders, and requirements thereunder shall continue in force and effect with respect to such class or classes of housing accommodations until June 30, 1951", and (b) by adding at the end thereof, the following sentence: "The term 'classes of housing accommodations' as used in this section shall be deemed to be without limitation and may include categories of housing accommodations by location or geographical area, by monetary rental, or by types."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of such act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs and subsections:

"(5) (a) After June 30, 1950, the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum rent ceiling or minimum service standards shall be prescribed for any furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations which are rented as rooms without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms), and when and for such period as all of the housing accommodations in any building consists of rooms rented as furnished nonhousekeeping housing accommodations without kitchen privileges or facilities for cooking (but not in a suite of two or more rooms) the provisions of this act shall not apply to, and no maximum-rent ceilings or minimum-service standards shall be prescribed for, any such building.

"(b) After June 30, 1950, self-contained family units (as defined by regulations issued by the Administrator) located in hotels shall continue to be housing accommodations subject to maximum-rent ceiling and minimum-service standards unless the Administrator issues an order decontrolling them, or any of them, which he shall issue if he finds that such hotel is primarily engaged in furnishing accommodations for transients."

SEC. 3. Subsection (b) of section 4 of such act is hereby amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Administrator may by order adjust the maximum-rent ceiling or minimum-service standard hereunder although the landlord fails to produce evidence of facts occurring in the period from January 1, 1941, to December 31, 1945, if the landlord proves circumstances which in the opinion of the Administrator excuse the failure to produce evidence of such facts."

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina: Strike out all after the enacting clause of S. 3776 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That section 1 (b) of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended (D. C. Code, 1940 edition, sec. 45–1601 (b)), is hereby amended by striking out 'June 30, 1950' and inserting in lieu thereof 'January 31, 1951, unless the Congress shall by joint resolution insert a later date.'

"SEC. 2. "(b) After June 30, 1950, self-contained family units (as defined by regulations issued by the Administrator) located in hotels shall continue to be housing accommodations subject to maximum rent ceiling and minimum service standards unless the Administrator issues an order decontrolling them, or any of them, which he shall issue if he finds that such hotel is primarily engaged in furnishing accommodations for transients.

"SEC. 3. Subsection (b) of section 4 of such act is hereby amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That the Administrator may by order adjust the maximum rent ceiling or minimum service standard hereunder although the landlord fails to produce evidence of facts occurring in the period from January 1, 1941, to December 31, 1945, if the landlord proves circumstances which, in the opinion of the Administrator excuse the failure to produce evidence of such facts.'

"SEC. 3. (a) Where rooms or accommodations are decontrolled in the foregoing section, the building in which said rooms or accommodations are located shall also be decontrolled.

"SEC. 4. Section 5 (b) (2) of Public Law 45, Eighty-first Congress, first session, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'Section 5. (b) (2) The landlord seeks in good faith to recover possession of the property for his immediate and personal use and occupancy as a dwelling: Provided, That in the case of housing accommodations for which the rent does not exceed $85 per month, in a structure or premises owned or leased by a cooperative corporation or association no such action or proceeding under this paragraph or paragraph (3) of this section shall be maintained unless stock or membership in the cooperative corporation or association has been acquired by persons who are or were tenants in occupancy of at least 95 per centum of the dwelling units in the structure or premises at the time said cooperative corporation or association either (1) acquired or leased said structure or premises, or (2) entered into a contract or option to acquire or lease said structure or premises, whichever date is earliest, and who as such stockholders or members are entitled to possession of their respective dwelling units in the structure or premises by virtue of proprietary leases or otherwise, and this provision shall apply whether such corporation or association acquired or leased such structure or premises or entered into a contract or option to do so prior to or after the effective date of this amendatory Act or unless as the holder of stock or membership acquired in the cooperative corporation or association prior to March 1, 1949, a stockholder or member was entitled to possession of a dwelling unit in the structure or premises by virtue of a proprietary lease or otherwise, or * * *'."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent the proceedings whereby the bill H. R. 6669 was passed were vacated, and that bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. McMILLAN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3776) to amend and extend the provisions of the District of Columbia Emergency Rent Act, as amended, and ask for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. McMILLAN of South Carolina, ABERNETHY, and O'HARA of Illinois.

INCREASE IN SALARY OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 8 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced a bill which will probably be my last in Congress. This bill is to increase the compensation of Members of Congress from $12,500 to $20,000 per annum, and to call attention to the fact that, although Congress has increased the salaries of the President, Vice President, Speaker of the House, Cabinet members, Judges of the Supreme Court and Federal courts, our own congressional staffs, committee clerks, and I think practically every Federal employee of the Congress, we have neglected to advance our own salaries. I have served 26 years in the House and during that time, although the cost of living has advanced more than 50 percent, it is a fact that our salaries have practically remained static. Since I came to Congress in 192[illegible], my salary has been increased $2,500, while the cost of living during that period has more than doubled. As I have said, Members have voted increases to nearly everyone in the employ of the Federal Government and for some strange reason have overlooked themselves, probably because the matter has never been presented as it should be.

I do not believe that the American people would approve of their 531 Members of Congress, whom they have elected to represent them, being underpaid for services rendered. A Member must maintain a home in Washington where rents and food command the highest prices. He must also maintain a home in his congressional district and at the same time bear the expense of a campaign every 2 years with all the incidentals attached to a campaign—much traveling from Washington to the district—and it was only a few years ago that an expense account of $2,500 was allowed for this item.

I have been informed that comparatively few Members of Congress have other sources of income. Many who came here left temporarily good law practices, expecting to continue their professions, but have found it impossible to do so because of the long sessions we have had since 1933. Others have found it necessary to discontinue various kinds of businesses because of the pressure in Washington. A great many young men with families have told me that meeting their obligations has been a constant source of worry and I contend that when one is worried, it is impossible to do the kind of work we should do here in Congress.

I am proud to say that during my long service I have found very few Members who were not conscientious in the discharge of their duties and obligations. Many work long hours in committee day after day where most of the work is done. We represent a cross section of the greatest country in the world and are responsible for appropriating billions of dollars of tax money and conducting the largest corporation in the world—Government—yet if we compare our salaries with those of any large corporation, it should give us much food for thought.

I have before me a list of salaries of top executives which I shall place in the RECORD for the information of the Members. The list is based on records of the Securities and Exchange Commission and also reports from copies of Business Week:

B. E. Hutchinson, vice president	225,700

I have been giving the subject of increased compensation for Members of Congress much thought and I know how difficult it is for any Member to introduce a bill to raise his or her own salary without being misunderstood. Since this will be my last year of service and I will not profit by the increase, I decided to offer this bill for your consideration. I know what it has cost me to live here very modestly and without a family to support. I realize how difficult it is for a young man who would like a career in Congress, and I think we can say with pride that so many of our young men are doing a great job for their congressional districts and for their country. You will note in my bill that I have provided extra compensation for the majority and minority floor leaders. I think that this should be done because the majority and minority leaders both have great responsibility in directing legislation and must be on the floor or available during the entire time that Congress is in session. They are entitled to extra compensation.

I have loved my service in the House and shall always cherish the friendships I have enjoyed with the fine men and women who have helped me over many a rough spot. I shall be very happy if when leaving you this, my last bill, becomes law, for no person realizes more than I do how necessary it is to encourage the right kind of people to serve in Government. I believe that in the years ahead many more men and women would be encouraged to serve in Congress if they could be assured that their service would not entail financial worry.

If my bill is approved by Congress, I feel confident that the President will sign it. He has said repeatedly that he favors adequate compensation for those who are engaged in Government business.

The United States Government is the greatest corporation in the world. The Congress is its Board of Directors. It should have the best brains to conduct its business. We cannot secure such people unless they receive proper compensation or, we elect men and women with other sources of income.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I want to congratulate the gentlewoman from New Jersey for introducing her bill and for making the remarks she has. I thoroughly subscribe to the bill that the gentlewoman has introduced and I want the RECORD and the world to know that I am in favor of it. On a number of occasions in the past I have stated on the floor of the House that I favor a salary of $25,000 a year for Members of Congress, but, naturally, I recognize that could not be accomplished. I will support an increase in salary to $20,000 a year.

I think we underestimate the common sense of the people of our districts. The people of our districts want us to live under proper conditions. Of course, you cannot expect to obtain as large compensation in public life as you do in private life, but our people expect and they want us to be paid an adequate salary. I sometimes think we underestimate the average person who, when given the facts, appreciates and understands and supports a proposition. I have yet to vote against a salary increase in any legislative body I have been in, because I felt they were all justified, both in this body and in the Massachusetts Legislature, and I would vote for this one. I have my doubts, but I hope we will approach it with confidence and courage and do it this year, because you will have to do it this year in order to have the increase go into effect next year.

Again, I congratulate the gentlewoman from New Jersey in introducing the bill and making the remark she has in support of it.

Mrs. NORTON. I thank the gentleman.

I commend my bill to you, ladies and gentlemen of the House, and I sincerely hope that it will become law before I say adieu.

THE 1950 TAX-JUGGLING BILL

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, the 1950 tax bill, H. R. 8920, is not a tax-reduction bill at all. It is a tax-juggling bill. The bill proposes to shift an obvious tax burden—excise taxes—from some of the consumers of the Nation to a concealed tax burden placed upon all the consumers—corporation taxes. In this respect the bill is a phony tax-reduction bill.

The tax burden today upon the average American family amounts to $1,600 per year, $32 per week for the 50 working weeks in the year, and 80 cents per hour for the average family breadwinner, based upon a 40-hour workweek. The only way to reduce this excessively heavy tax load is to drastically curtail Government expenditures. There is no other way.

Mr. Speaker, the shifting or juggling of the tax load that is proposed in H. R. 8920 is so well discussed in the following editorial entitled "Who Pays Corporation Taxes?" carried in the June 20, 1950, issue of the Streator Daily Times-Press, Streator, Ill., that I include it as a part of my remarks:

WHO PAYS CORPORATION TAXES?

There should be no jubilation over prospects of securing reductions in excise taxes at the expense of adding some 3 percent to the present heavy corporation tax. Corporations which have been paying 38 percent of their profits into Federal coffers have been bearing a heavy percentage of Federal expenditures and to add an additional burden on these business enterprises is to weaken the whole structure of private enterprise.

Every corporation dollar that is paid the Government in the form of income tax is a dollar which the corporation cannot use to expand production, that cannot be used to develop new products, and cannot be used to pay salaries.

When it is not possible to develop new products and not possible to expand production of present products, it means only that new jobs cannot be created, and that is serious, for our entire economy is based upon more and more jobs to provide employment for the hordes of young men and women who each year are entering occupations for the first time.

By all means, wartime emergency excise taxes which have been unfairly distributed and retained long after hostilities have ended should be eliminated at the earliest possible moment. It could be accomplished by reducing Government expenditures, as shown by Senator BYRD, of Virginia, and without forcing additional taxes to make up for the shortage from excise levies. But the administration has insisted that the President would veto any such tax bill that did not carry additional taxes from some source, and apparently the easiest spot to drop additional burdens is upon the corporation. Everybody seems to think the corporation operates in some magic manner without limit of its resources.

The corporation, however, thinks of taxes in terms of expense, and additional taxes will mean additional prices which the consumer must pay, for that is the only way the funds are forthcoming. The whole economy will suffer by overtaxing corporations, but corporations as such do not vote.

After all, if the voters do not see through the fallacy of burdening business too heavily, Congress will lay it on heavily. Off will come the levies on baby talcum and cosmetics and up will go the corporation tax. That's the simple and unthinking way to produce more income.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks in the Appendix and include certain correspondence and tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

[Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

THE TIDELANDS DECISION OF THE SUPREME COURT IN THE TEXAS CASE

Mr. COMBS. Mr. Speaker, I have sought this special order to discuss what I think is a serious question presented by the decision of our Supreme Court in the Tidelands cases involving California, Louisiana, and Texas. As I view those decisions, the principles upon which the Court based its judgment, taking from those States the lands that lie under the waters adjacent to their shores, and which prior decisions in an unbroken line for a hundred years preceding have confirmed to the States beyond question, are a new thing in the law. As I shall point out, the doctrine of the paramount right of the Federal Government to take for national use all which it needs without paying for it, and that is what it amounts to in the final analysis, presents a grave question.

Mr. Speaker, on June 5, 1950, the United States Supreme Court by a 4 to 3 decision, two Justices not participating, handed down a decision and judgment, the effect of which is to take from the people of Texas the offshore submerged lands which have been within the boundaries of Texas and have belonged to Texas since the days of the Republic.

The Republic of Texas fixed her boundaries by act of the Texas Congress on December 19, 1836, and in doing so fixed her seaward boundary at three leagues or 10½ miles from shore, beginning at the mouth of the Sabine River on the east and extending to the mouth of the Rio Grande. Subsequently, she was recognized as an independent nation by several foreign countries including the United States. By the terms of the agreement between the Republic of Texas and the United States by which Texas joined the Union, Texas retained all "vacant and unappropriated lands lying within its limits." The history of the negotiations, including letters exchanged between J. A. Donaldson, the United States Commissioner, and President Polk show that the "limits" referred to were those set forth in the act of 1836 and that President Polk wrote while the negotiations were in progress "Of course, I would maintain the Texan title to the extent which she claims it to be." In view of these facts, Texans have felt ever since the Federal Government began asserting title, or "paramount rights" in the underwater coastal lands that regardless of what might be the outcome as to the claim asserted against other States, surely there could be no question as to Texas ownership of the seaward 10½-mile strip within her limits. Consequently the people of Texas have been profoundly shocked by the action of the Supreme Court. The valuable, oil-bearing coastal lands involved belong to our permanent school fund which our State has built up and zealously guarded from the days of the Republic as a priceless heritage of our children. The prospect of these lands being taken from them by Court judgment is of itself shocking enough. But there are circumstances and implications attending the action that are even more disturbing. These circumstances and implications, which I shall now refer to, profoundly affect every State, and in a sense every person in this Union.

In the first place, the decision was rendered by a minority of four members of a nine-member Court. This came about by reason of the fact two justices, Mr. Justice Jackson and Mr. Justice Clark were disqualified, and as a consequence four justices constituted a majority of the seven remaining justices. Three justices dissented, Mr. Justice Reed, Mr. Justice Minton and Mr. Justice Frankfurter, on the ground that Texas owns the tidelands involved to the 10½-miles seaward limit and the oil and minerals beneath them. Are these valuable lands to be taken from our people by a Court judgment pronounced by a minority? Shall a controlling precedent of Court opinion that will profoundly affect every State in the Union be thus established?

Another disturbing fact is the refusal of the Court to grant Texas' request for permission to submit evidence. In the past the Supreme Court has many times received evidence in State boundary disputes and claims between the Federal Government and a State, in which not only the historic background and other facts were inquired into but also the opinions of leading authorities on the subject involved were heard. Had the request been granted, Attorney General Daniels of Texas was prepared to establish the facts above stated and a lot more; he would have submitted the testimony of a number of outstanding authorties on international law, all to the effect that Texas owns the lands and minerals involved. This was refused and the case adjudged merely on the pleadings without hearing any facts.

Finally, and this is profoundly disturbing, in deciding the case, the court opinion laid down a doctrine, or principle of precedent law, which farther extends that strange new doctrine of paramount right of the Federal Government first pronounced in the majority opinion in the California case. I have done some research and I have carefully studied and analyzed the opinion in the Texas case. I have no doubt that the principle there stated, carried to its logical conclusion, will profoundly affect the relationship heretofore existing between the Federal Government and the States. The first and most obvious effect will be for the Federal Government to move in and take over the fisheries and other activities of the coastal States from Maine to Washington and points between clear up to low-water mark. I understand that certain agencies of the Government are even now planning to seek legislation and appropriations to do just that. But the opinion goes much farther. The principle announced of the paramount right of the Federal Government to take without compensation whatever minerals or other substances it needs for the national defense can be applied to the lands and minerals of every State. Now, I want to discuss that question, and in doing so will discuss the court opinion.

Since it is necessary that I discuss the opinion of the court, and I feel that it is necessary, I want to offer a few general observations. I have been a practicing lawyer for more than 30 years and about 17 years of that was served at different periods on the trial and appellate benches of my State. I have always observed with meticulous care the ethics of my profession. Also, I have been both on the giving and on the receiving end of court criticism. There is a good deal of confusion in people's thinking concerning the propriety and right to criticize the opinion and decisions of a court. It is perfectly proper to criticize court opinions and decisions if it is done in the proper way and in the proper spirit. This is a democracy. Judges and courts are entitled to great respect because of the function the court performs in our system of government. But judges are not infallible. They are human and are subject to the rule that we are all subject to, that it is but human to err. Also, it is through the right of the lawyer and others to criticize that important questions for decision of the courts are given complete rather than one-sided consideration.

I have formulated a simple rule to guide me in my criticism of courts and court judgments in the years gone by. I didn't read it in a book, but it has served my purpose very well. In substance it is this. It is never proper for one to impugn the motives of or to ridicule or speak contemptuously of any court or any judge or justice of it or to bring in question the integrity and honesty of a court or its judges. To do so would be an attack upon the court as an institution. It would tend to breed suspicion and contempt of the judicial institution and to undermine the faith and confidence of our people in the courts. And it is essential, in a republic especially, that the citizen shall have complete confidence in the judicial institution and live in the knowledge that he can resort to the courts of his country as to the horns of the altar to adjudge and secure for him the rights to his property, his life, and his liberty. But while it is not proper to improperly criticize a court, it is perfectly proper and on occasion a duty to question the soundness of a court's decision, to criticize the logic of the opinion, and to argue that it is not in keeping with past precedents, that it is not sound in principle, or that the doctrine announced will be injurious to the public.

Now, to understand the full meaning and effect of the decisions of our Supreme Court in the California, Louisiana, and Texas cases, it is necessary that we first understand what is involved. What is the tidelands issue? How did it originate?

I will trace very briefly the history of the tidelands questions. It has been the practice of nations and States for centuries in establishing their boundaries on a seacoast that the boundary be not fixed at the water's edge but is established some distance out seaward. Along most every seacoast there is a strip of land referred to as the continental shelf extending outward in some places many miles before the open sea is reached. This submerged land is considered by most authorities on international law to be but an extension of the land mass to which it is attached. The Colonies, long before the formation of the Union, established their seaward boundaries 3 miles from shore as was common at that period. The 3 miles was supposed to be the distance that a cannon shot could be fired in those days. The 3 miles of water-covered land was as much within the boundaries of the State as was the land above water. And all through the years and up to this time the States have exercised police powers, regulated fisheries and took shell, kelp, and other substances from these waters within their limits, subject only to the right of the Federal Government to control navigation and conduct the national defense, and so forth. All through the years controversies have now and then arisen between the Federal Government and a State concerning the use of such waters and more than 200 decisions of the courts, both Federal and State, extending back for 100 years or more, have held that the States owned the tidelands within their boundaries. I will read brief excerpts from three decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States to illustrate the uniform holding.

In one early case, Mumford v. Wardwell (6 Wall. 423, 436), handed down in 1867, it was held:

> The settled rule of law in this court is, that the shores of navigable waters and the soils under the same in the original States were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the several States, and that the new States since admitted have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction in that behalf as the original States possess within their respective borders. When the Revolution took place, the people of each State became themselves sovereign, and in that character hold the absolute right to all their navigable waters and the soils under them.

Mr. Chief Justice Waite in 1876 said:

> Each State owns the beds of all tidewaters within its jurisdiction.

Mr. Chief Justice Hughes said in 1935:

> The soils under tidewaters within the original States were reserved to them respectively, and the States since admitted to the Union have the same sovereignty and jurisdiction in relation to such lands within their borders as the original States possessed.

As early as around 1920 the State of California leased her tidelands for oil production and wells have been drilled and oil produced from her tidelands ever since. No question was raised as to her right to do so, nor as to the right of any State to lease the tidelands within the limits for oil production until about 1937 when Mr. Ickes, then Secretary of the Interior, decided to assert a claim to the offshore oil on behalf of the United States. But before that, in 1933, Mr. Ickes himself wrote a letter to an applicant for an oil lease on the California tidelands in which he said:

> Title to the oil within the 3 miles limit is in the State of California and land may not be appropriated except by the authority of the State.

Consequently, not only California but the States of Texas and Louisiana leased the tidelands within their boundaries for the production of oil and gas. Oil companies and wildcatters invested millions in the purchase of leases and the States themselves have through the years derived large revenue from the oil.

But the claim asserted by Mr. Ickes in 1937 gathered support from some officials of the National Government and as a result suit was filed by the Attorney General against California and later against Louisiana and Texas. Such is the history of the controversy.

In deciding the California case, the Supreme Court, by a divided court incidentally, held that California did not own the submerged lands within its limits because the transfer from Mexico was to the United States. And so, said the Court, the marginal sea area was not acquired by California. It did not hold that the Federal Government owns the land or the oil in the submerged lands within the boundaries of California. What it did hold was that the Federal Government has a paramount right to take the oil regardless of the bare title of the land. Thus a strange new doctrine was announced—the right of the Federal Government to take, without compensation, oil needed for national use, at least under the facts it found to exist in the California case. But in the Texas case the Court does not question the fact that the Texas Republic owned the land in the marginal sea to its 10½-mile boundary. Still it applies the paramount-right doctrine to Texas, and, as a result, destroys an existing ownership of the State. And, of course, this would also destroy the title of any person holding under prior conveyance from Texas.

Thus, we are now confronted with a solemn and challenging fact. By decision of only four members, a mere minority of the full membership of the Supreme Court, a judgment has been entered striking down the Texas title. In doing this the Court greatly extended the doctrine of the California case. It has announced principles which threaten the rights of every State in the Union. For if the Court by judicial decree can take the tidelands and the oil beneath them from Texas, Louisiana, and California without compensation she can likewise take title to any mineral or substances anywhere. If anyone doubts this he need only read the opinion of Mr. Justice Douglas who wrote the Court opinion. He spelled out clearly the implications of the holding when he said:

> Today the controversy is over oil, tomorrow it may be over some other substance or mineral, or perhaps the bed of the ocean itself.

Thus the fisheries of Washington and Oregon, of Maine and Massachusetts, the sponge fisheries of Florida are to be taken over. The sea waters along the coast line are to pass under the control of the Federal Government up to the low-water mark. Even now certain agencies of the Government are preparing to ask for legislation and appropriations to take control from the States in the seaward area within the boundaries of the littoral States. And if the Government can seize these rights from the States by judicial decree she can likewise take the coal from West Virginia, the phosphates of Tennessee, or the copper of Montana if needed for a national use, regardless of who owns the base title.

The fundamental doctrine of the Court decision in the Texas case is astounding and most dangerous indeed. I said at the outset that the Texas decision goes far beyond the doctrine announced in the California case. Justice Reed filed a dissenting opinion in which he was joined by Justice Minton. In that dissent Justice Reed stated:

> I think the resolution of annexation left the marginal sea area in Texas. The resolution expressly concedes all "vacant and unappropriated lands lying within its limits." An agreement of this kind is in accord with the holding of this Court that ordinary lands may be the subject of a compact between a

State and a Nation, Sterns v. Minnesota (179 U. S. 223). The Court, however, does not decide whether or not the vacant, unappropriated lands lying within its limits at the time of annexation includes the land under the marginal sea. I think it does include those lands. At least we should permit evidence of its meaning.

Instead of deciding this question of cession, the Court relies upon need for the United States to control the area seaward of low-water mark because of its national responsibility. It reasons that full dominion over the resources forces this paramount responsibility, and refers to the California discussion of the point. But the argument based on international responsibility prevailed in the California case because the marginal sea area was staked out by the United States. The argument cannot reasonably be extended to Texas without a holding that Texas ceded that area to the United States.

Necessity for the United States to defend the land and to handle international affairs is not enough to transfer property rights in the marginal sea from Texas to the United States—the needs of defense and sovereign affairs alone cannot transfer ownership of an ocean bed from a State to the Federal Government any more than they could transfer iron ore from under uplands of a State to Federal ownership. National responsibility is no greater in respect to the marginal sea than it is to every other parcel of American territory. In my view Texas owns the marginal area by virtue of its original proprietorship. It has not been shown to my satisfaction that it lost it by the terms of the resolution of annexation.

Mr. Justice Frankfurter, in a separate, short dissent had this to say:

I must leave those who deem the reasoning of that decision—

The California case—

the right to define its scope and apply it, particularly to the historically very different situation of Texas. As is made clear in the opinion of Mr. Justice Reed, the submerged lands now in controversy were part of the domain of Texas when she was on her own. The Court now decides that when Texas entered the Union she lost what she had and the United States acquired it. How that shift came to pass remains for me a puzzle.

I think what the dissenting Justices had in mind is that the Court opinion does not show any legal transfer of title from Texas to the United States. Under the American system of law relating to real estate, as is true in all English-speaking countries, the ownership of land is absolute and carries with it the right to the air above and to all substances on or beneath it. Also the title must be transferred in some lawful fashion, such as by deed, grant, or inheritance. And, of course, there was no such transfer by Texas to the United States. And the Court decision naturally did not show any such transfer. The Court decision did work a transfer by extending the doctrine of paramount right.

Mr. Justice Reed points out that the court's decision does not show any legal transfer of title from Texas, which all admit, on the tidelands and Justice Frankfurter states that how the shift came about "remains for me a puzzle." But I think Mr. Justice Douglas, in writing the Court's opinion, in one single paragraph, shows exactly how the majority worked that shift of title. He states:

It is said there is no necessity for it—

That is for the Federal Government to own the sea bottom and the oil—

that the sovereignty of the sea can be complete and unimpaired no matter if Texas owns the oil underlying it. Yet, as pointed out in United States v. California, since low-water mark is passed the international domain is national. Property rights must then be so subordinated to political rights as in substance to coalesce and unite in the national sovereignty.

Let us examine this language critically. Citing the California case, it says that "once low-water mark is passed the international domain is reached." This means that the submerged lands from there out to the State line is being dealt with at that point, that is the low-water mark, "Property rights" must then be "subordinated to political rights." First, take note that this concedes the property rights or ownership of the State or its grantees in those offshore lands, but that property rights or ownerships must be subordinated. But not only that it must "be so subordinated to political rights"—that is the necessity of the National Government—"as in substance to coalesce and unite in the national sovereign." There is where the transfer takes place. It "coalesces." In other words I own an oil lease from the State in tidelands. The Government wants to take my oil without paying me for it. So it subordinates my right and ownership to such an extent that my right "in substance" passes to the sovereign. And how does it pass? By title conveyance or by condemnation and payment as provided in the Constitution? Oh no, it just "coalesces." And as it coalesces it just naturally "unites in the national sovereign." In other words, the Government, because it needs the oil, just takes it away from me without paying for it.

In some countries they call this expropriation. That principle is unknown to the law of any English-speaking country. In the tidelands cases, it is applied as against the States—also—and thus the power of the Federal Government over the States would be greatly increased. We have no such word as expropriation in our English and American system of justice. But we do have an expressive word that describes the process perfectly. The word is confiscation, and the term is an unpleasant one. But the effect is just the same whether you call the process confiscation or coalesce. In either case the citizen is deprived of his property without due process of law. And the property of the citizen is taken without compensation.

It is noteworthy that in support of that strange doctrine the only authority cited is the decision in the California case by the same court. It is no wonder no other authority was cited because there is none in the whole history of American and English jurisprudence. The principle announced is contrary to the law of real property ownership as it has existed from Coke, Blackstone, and Kent until now. There is not a decision of the high courts of this or any other English-speaking country to support such a doctrine, nor is there an expression from any legal scholar, past or present, in such countries to support it.

I say these things with regret. But as I view it the implications of what the Court has done are too far reaching, too fraught with serious consequences to our country for them to be ignored. It is my thought that some one in the Congress must challenge the holding.

One thing we can do is to bring forth the tidelands relinquishment bill promptly, consider it, and enact it into law. We passed such a bill in the House last Congress with only 29 dissenting votes. Let us pass it again and put at rest the encroachment of Federal authority upon the rights and ownerships of our States in their marginal lands.

As a Texan I want to see the heritage of the school children of Texas, the oil-rich tidelands which their forebears bought for them at San Jacinto, made safe and secure. And may we hope that our Supreme Court will see fit to erase from the books its strange new doctrine of the paramount right of the Federal Government to take the property of the States and their citizens without compensation.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKETT. The gentleman is making a very clear, concise, analytical and sound speech. It should be heard, read, and studied by every Member of the House. If it is considered with understanding, legislation on the tidelands subject which is expected to be considered on the floor at an early date will pass by a tremendously large majority—so large that it will serve notice of the futility of a veto such as took place on a previous bill. It will be a guaranty against any attempted seizure in the future.

Mr. COMBS. I thank the gentleman very much for his comments. A rule was granted today, as you know, on this tidelands bill, and I am hopeful that in putting this argument in the RECORD, at least it will help to counter some of the arguments that may be made that Congress, in passing the tidelands bill, will be giving something away. The United States has nothing to give away in those tidelands. We do need to clear up the uncertainty created by the claim of the Federal Government. It is injuring the States, and the matter should be put at rest by conferring the title of the States to their tidelands.

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMPS. I yield.

Mr. DOYLE. I want to compliment our colleague, a distinguished lawyer, on his very fine presentation. As the House knows, in the Seventy-ninth Congress I filed a tidelands bill for the State of California and again in this session of the Congress I did the same thing.

As we come to debate this issue in the next few days, I hope we bear in mind that even though the Supreme Court has enunciated a new theory of law with which I disagree, as well as the gentleman now in the well of the House addressing us, nevertheless the House of Representatives reserves unto itself the determination of policy, and I firmly believe the policy of the Congress should be that these rights in controversy should remain in the ownership, possession, and control of the States.

Mr. COMBS. I thank the gentleman for his helpful comments. He is certainly right.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I desire first to commend the gentleman from Texas on his excellent statement and to assure him I am in accord with what he is saying. Under the decision of the courts, what will happen to the area outside of the 3-mile zone extending to the 3 league, or 10½-mile line? Does the opinion of the Court assert that the Federal Government will own out to the 10½-mile line which Texas owns, or does the opinion state that the paramount right will extend to the 3-mile line only?

Mr. COMBS. The Court has refused to claim a thing for the United States Government, even within the 3-mile limit and up to the shore, to say nothing of beyond the 3-mile limit. In other places the farthest the United States has claimed is 3 miles out, and if they were to stand by that, then they would abandon everything beyond the 3 miles, which is land that Texas has had sovereignty over since 1836. I suppose in this atomic age the Government will let the fishermen of all nations come to within at least the 3-mile limit and perhaps even to the low-water mark.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I cannot help but remark what a great deal of work the gentleman must have put in on this problem to prepare such a wonderful answer to the decisions of the Court. In the case of Massachusetts, you will find that King James gave us a charter which extended to the 3-mile limit, which was the international law at that time.

That was included in the State of Massachusetts. I assume, although I do not know, that every State on the seacoast, with the exception of Florida will probably have the same kind of charter. If we take these decisions of the Supreme Court to be the law of the land, permitting the government to step in, then all the seashore property in the city of Boston, which is built over tidewater land and on filled-in land and so forth, could be taken away from us without due process which could not be done if they looked up the charters.

Mr. COMBS. The gentleman is correct. Every regulatory craft of the fishing industry, such as in the State of Maine and other States, will probably be put off the high seas and taken over by Uncle Sam by a Washington agency here.

Mr. BECKWORTH. I want to compliment my colleague on the excellent presentation he has given to the House, and to call to the attention of the House the fact that there is no person in this country more qualified to give a fair and concise statement than the gentleman who has spoken, for through the years he has been one of the high judges of the State of Texas, and has studied every problem that has come before him, in the most diligent manner possible. I think we all recognize the unassailable argument he has made. It is my hope that those who have not been privileged to hear him this afternoon will at least take the time to read that which he has said, for I cannot help but believe if that is done we shall win the fight which we know is right, to wit, the retention of the tidelands for our State.

Mr. COMBS. I thank my colleague.

I want the Members to know that I have spoken under great restraint, and I hope with due respect to our highest Court.

Mr. GUILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield to my colleague from Texas.

Mr. GUILL. I would like to commend the gentleman on his fine statement and I would like to read a few words by Dr. J. A. Hill:

HILL-TOP VIEWS

(By Dr. J. A. Hill)

CANYON.—One of the worst aspects of American life today is the progressive disintegration of governmental integrity. This is not the baseless assertion of a wailing pessimist, but is one of those public tragedies that almost might be classified as self-evident.

The Supreme Court decision in the tidelands matter looks to this column like a case in point. Two independent republics voluntarily entered into a treaty—a solemn, regularly constituted agreement by which the younger and smaller republic surrendered its independence to the older and larger one.

Among the provisions of that treaty was the stipulation that Texas should retain and be responsible for her own national debt. In turn, she was to keep her public lands, which at that time, seemed almost worthless. Had either party to the treaty known the ultimate value of these lands the outcome of the negotiations doubtless would have been quite different.

In the absence of knowledge of the value of the property involved they signed the treaty with mutual feelings of satisfaction. Each was unquestionably well satisfied with the deal. And no question of ownership of public lands or title to same was raised for more than a century.

As long as the tidelands were just so much water-covered terrain the United States had no more thought of the Texas boundary line than she did of Rhode Island's. But once it became rich with oil Texas' title to this tideland was invalid. In the opinion of a majority of the Court, when Texas became a State in the Union all conditions of admission became null and void. Texas was just another State, like Kentucky or Kansas.

It is said that billions of dollars are involved in this decision, and that Texas schools and other public State agencies will suffer irreparable loss. This means a heavier burden on the taxpayers of Texas and one that neither equity nor national honesty would seem to justify.

However, bad as these losses are, they are not the worst features of this recent Court decision. If our National Government will not keep its solemn contracts with one of its own member States and will deliberately filch the property of such States, how can any foreign power have any faith in our international agreements?

We are right now having difficulty making people of the world believe in our national sincerity and dependability. Moreover, our administration in Washington is constantly lashing the Russian Government for its insincerity in all of its relations with the west saying that we cannot treat with that country because no faith can be put in her agreements.

Personally, I think that our diagnosis of Russian diplomacy is 100 percent correct, but when we turn right around and abrogate a solemn treaty between ourselves and the State of Texas, though the terms of that treaty have never before been questioned in its 100-year history, we impeach our own integrity and stand out before the world as a champion of the doctrine that might makes right.

As the world's chief exponent of free government, which is based upon high moral values, and as the world's most responsible leader the United States of America cannot afford to abrogate a solemn compact between herself and any other political unit, domestic or foreign, anywhere on earth. The integrity of this country is far more important these days than all the billions of wealth or even of the rights of all of Texas school children, great as these are.

Already the respect of her own citizens for their government is in a state of unstable equilibrium. This is itself a dangerous situation and our Government should be leaning backward to prove its fidelity to its obligations. As this column sees it the Court decision is a national calamity. If Congress has any power over the situation it should act promptly and decisively in defense of our national honor.

Mr. COMBS. I thank my colleague for that comment.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I want to commend the gentleman on the very clear and interesting statement, particularly his emphasis on the fact that while the decision itself is serious, the implications are much more serious than the question of States' rights. In the original discussion of this act it was clearly to be seen that this would throw a cloud on the title to a great deal of land adjoining the original areas of the edges of the ocean and the edges of streams. Has that been cleared up by this decision?

Mr. COMBS. No. It has not been cleared up, and the shipyards in the lower part of my district at Beaumont, Orange, and Port Arthur, Tex., are piled up with idle barges and ships that have been hauled in from the sea because they had to quit drilling out there on the Texas leases because of this decision of the Court, until they are cleared up. There are thousands of men out of work and the State is sustaining a great loss of revenue by reason of this cloud on the title to the off-shore land.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I take much pride, as a fellow Texan, in the statement which my colleague has made. It is a frightening situation, as the gentleman has said. I think if this information is given to all Members of Congress, we will have no difficulty in passing a bill protecting the rights of the people. Surely the people of the Nation wish the rights of the tidelands to be in those in whom they have rested for over a century. Nothing has so inflamed the people of the State of Texas as has this decision. I do not know whether I commend the gentleman or not for his restraint, because I myself have called this decision a theft.

Mr. COMBS. I thank my colleague for his comment.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I want to commend the gentleman on the learned statement he has made, and to ask the gentleman this question: Does the effect of this decision go far enough to bar Texas from asserting the right which it has to that part of the tidelands beyond the 3-mile limit, and within the 10½-mile limit? Is the decision broad enough to exclude you from that?

Mr. COMBS. I would say that the implications, if not the direct decision, would be to stop Texas, and every other State, at the low-water mark. I do not think it could possibly have any other effect.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield.

Mr. McSWEENEY. If the ruling does not go into effect will there not be an effort on the part of other States to have their boundaries extended in like manner?

Mr. COMBS. There may be, and they should do it. The right of sovereignty ought to be extended seaward from our shores by the Federal Government and the States should assert their property rights. I think the right of sovereignty ought to be extended to the continental shelf. By the States to their chosen boundaries and by the Federal Government from there on.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Is it not a fact that following the battle of Jutland, Norway said that she would consider it an unfriendly act for a foreign vessel of war to approach within 11 miles of her coast?

Mr. COMBS. She did.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Will there not be more acts by other nations extending their sovereignty?

Mr. COMBS. There probably will be. Oil is not the only thing involved. At the present time California has a coal mine which extends 4 miles under the Pacific. That is affected by this decision.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield.

Mr. POAGE. As I understand it, when a contract is broken by one of the parties, through failure of consideration or otherwise, the other party is relieved of his obligations. Is that right?

Mr. COMBS. That is a principle of contract between persons; yes.

Mr. POAGE. I believe the gentleman told us that the Republic of Texas contracted with the United States for the admission of the Republic into the Union.

Mr. COMBS. That is what we did.

Mr. POAGE. And that the United States Senate rejected originally a treaty which provided that the United States should own all of the public lands of the Republic and that the United States would pay the public debt. The United States Senate did reject that kind of treaty, did it not?

Mr. COMBS. It did reject it, but later an agreement was worked out.

Mr. POAGE. That is right; a joint resolution of the two Houses.

Mr. COMBS. That is right.

Mr. POAGE. And the joint resolution provided, if I recall, and I believe the gentleman so advised the House, provided in express terms that the United States would not pay the debt of the Republic of Texas, that the United States would not take the lands of the Republic but that the State of Texas should reserve those lands and that the Republic should use the lands to pay the debt, and when the debt was paid the State should have the land free and clear of encumbrance. That was the substance of the agreement.

Mr. COMBS. That is right.

Mr. POAGE. In 1950 the State of Texas sold a substantial amount of public lands, about two-thirds. The State of New Mexico, I may say to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. MILES], was a part of the State of Texas in 1850. A portion of the State of Oklahoma, a portion of the State of Kansas, a large part of the State of Colorado, and a portion of the State of Wyoming were at that time parts of the State of Texas. We sold that land in order to pay that debt, did we not?

Mr. COMBS. That is correct.

Mr. POAGE. We paid that debt; we applied the proceeds of the sale of that land to that debt and understood that by applying that money to that debt we received clear and complete title to the remaining public land which the gentleman has so clearly shown include the tidelands.

Mr. COMBS. The gentleman is absolutely correct. Let me point out there the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1848 and turn to the page where Senator Thomas J. Rush of Texas rose in the Senate and read the boundaries of Texas including three leagues out from shore into the RECORD. Later the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, set forth the boundaries calling for the seaward boundary to be 3 miles off-shore at the mouth of the Rio Grande, as in the act of 1836.

Mr. POAGE. The situation would be that the State of Texas was entitled to a free, clear, unencumbered title to those boundaries that had been described just 2 years before.

Mr. COMBS. That is right.

Mr. POAGE. Since the United States has not carried out its part of the consideration, or at least since it has repudiated its part of the contract, what about the ownership of that large portion of New Mexico, of central Colorado, and of western Kansas and Oklahoma, and a portion of southern Wyoming? Who do you reckon owns that area now?

Mr. COMBS. Let us not raise that question with them; we love those folks over there.

Mr. POAGE. We would like to have them back home.

Mr. COMBS. I know, but the children marry off, you know.

Mr. POAGE. We did not send them there because we did not love them; we would like to have them with us. But now with the United States repudiating its part of the contract, how about getting our property back?

Mr. COMBS. Our children married and went up there, established themselves in the State of New Mexico and other places, and they are doing a pretty good job of housekeeping. We are proud of our children.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield.

Mr. LYLE. I very much appreciate the statement the gentleman has made. I have no doubt but what our great State could win the fight using the weapons the gentleman himself uses, right, justice, integrity of contract, but the weapons they are using are political weapons, not the ones that are spoken of in the contract. Here is one thing the gentleman would like to emphasize I am sure and that is we are not concerned with the oil. If our Government needs that oil we will give it to them. We have given them our lives; we have offered our lives. We are concerned with the integrity of contracts; we are concerned with the integrity of property rights; we are concerned with those things that are precious to us. That is the right to know that we own that which is ours and that our Federal Government respects the agreements it makes with us. We have got to know that to be strong as a whole. It is impossible to strengthen the Nation when you tear down individual parts of it.

We are not interested in that which is under the water. Yes, it belongs to us. We are interested in the principle of the thing. If they need that oil the gentleman will give it to them. I would give it to them; the rest of the people of Texas and America would give it to the Nation. We will give them everything to preserve it. But it is a matter of principle, right, and justice, and I hope the gentleman can get them to fight with the same cornstalks he is using.

Mr. COMBS. It is true that we must preserve our agreements. Also we must preserve the continuity of the law as expressed in sound legal precedents if we are to have stable institutions and a strong society. Property rights and human rights are the same thing—one cannot long exist without the other.

Mr. THORNBERRY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THORNBERRY. I want to express to my colleague from Texas my appreciation for this very valuable discourse.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. The gentleman has made a very wonderful speech and I am with him 100 percent. The gentleman knows, as do all of us, that a Socialist government cannot be completed perfectly without the sanction and the support of the highest court of the land. Unless we fight this thing, then, certainly, we have no reason to fight other socialistic moves in America. I am going to fight right with the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COMBS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman from Texas that he has made a wonderful statement. This is not only a question of oil; it involves the boundary of every State that touches the Gulf, the Great Lakes, the ocean, or any navigable stream and covers not only oil rights, but fishing rights, navigation rights and all the other rights that go with the States that border on a body of water.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LARCADE] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE CALIFORNIA OIL CASE

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, Louisiana is the third largest oil-producing State in the Union, and my district is one of the largest oil-producing sections in the State. My district extends and borders on the Gulf of Mexico on the south, therefore, my district is intensely interested in the tidelands question.

It is a well known fact that there has been more development off the shores of Louisiana than in either California or Texas, and as a result the action of the minority of the Supreme Court of the United States since the decision in the California case, leasing, exploration and further development of our valuable tidelands has been interrupted. I have been very active in working to prevent the Government from appropriating and depriving the rightful owners of these valuable offshore lands which we maintain, notwithstanding the decision of the United States Supreme Court, to be the property of Louisiana, as well as the property of all States where these lands touch their borders. As an evidence as to the interest of my State in these tidelands, I wish to read from an article how much Louisiana has lost since the decision in the California case:

SAY LOSS DUE TO TIDELANDS CASE—ESTIMATES STATE LOST $20,000,000 IN BONUSES

SHREVEPORT, LA., June 17.—The State of Louisiana has lost an estimated $20,000,000 in bonus money for offshore lands since the tidelands decision in 1948, according to O. G. Collins, chairman of the State mineral board, Shreveport.

Collins said the board has not leased any tidelands since the controversial California decision in October 1948.

Under the latest decisions handed down by the United States Supreme Court, the State stands to lose $4,000,000 yearly in rentals alone if the United States should proceed to take over the lands in question. This figure is based on a report of the State mineral board to the Governor and legislature with rentals of $15,533,732.72 on offshore lands from 1946–49.

Bonuses received for 1945–49 amounted to $26,022,812.59 for 2,542,696.11 acres in 757 leases. This adds to a total of $41,556.506.31.

That's over $10,000,000 a year alone to the State. Loss of this income would deal the Louisiana taxpayer, already overburdened, possibly an even greater blow.

The report shows 79 producing wells on producing acreage of 172,951 acres, indicating that only a start has been made toward the development of the tidelands.

Despite the fact no offshore lands have been leased since October 1948, total returns from this source have been almost $6,000,000 more than from inland acreage. Total returns from inland were $35,855,148.55 as compared to the tideland figure of $41,-556,506.31.

Mr. Speaker, it is our belief that the Supreme Court has erred in their decision in the California case, and our attorney generals and others from all of the States involved have submitted irrefutable evidence and argument to prove this contention. Notwithstanding, when Louisiana and Texas had litigation filed by the Government making the same claim for our tidelands, the best legal authority in the United States attacked the claims of the Government, and likewise presented answer orally, by brief and by argument to establish beyond any question of a doubt, that the Government had no claim or right of ownership of our tidelands; however, the Supreme Court, without, in my opinion, properly taking into consideration the law, facts, evidence, previous decisions over a period of over 125 years, and precedent and other considerations, handed down a decision, based entirely and relying completely upon the previous decision in the California case, did and does aver that the tidelands belong to the Government, and not to Louisiana and Texas, and which decision we maintain is in error, incorrect, unjust, without authority in law, precedent, fact, and evidence submitted to the contrary.

Mr. Speaker, in this connection, I wish to read into the RECORD an editorial from the Plaquemine's Gazette, of Point a la Hache, La., of date April 1, 1950:

STATE'S TITLE URGED IN ARGUMENTS

The motion for judgment filed on behalf of the United States against the State of Louisiana was argued in the Supreme Court in Washington Monday.

Representing the State of Louisiana in Court were Attorney General Bolivar E. Kemp, Jr., Assistant Attorney General John Madden, and Special Counsel L. H. Perez, Cullen R. Liskow, of Lake Charles, Stamps Farrar, of New Orleans, and Bailey Walsh and Trowbridge vom Baur, of Washington.

The United States was represented by Solicitor General Perlman, who made only a brief argument claiming that the Louisiana case was controlled entirely by the decision rendered by the Supreme Court in 1947 against California.

He claimed that the decision rendered in 1836 by the United States Supreme Court in favor of Louisiana's title to public property in the same category as the rivers, seas and shores, and public places, did not apply in this case.

Cullen Liskow, of Lake Charles, argued the first defense for Louisiana and showed that the Supreme Court has consistently held even in the California case, and in a later South Carolina case that, where Congress had not asserted any authority or governmental power in conflict with that exercised by the State, the Court could not render judgment creating any such authority or power for the United States.

Mr. Liskow urged the Court, therefore, that the Government's petition claiming Louisiana's tidelands and the right to produce oil and to control the taking of all other resources had no standing in Court in the absence of an act of Congress asserting authority and power to produce oil and to take the other resources from the Gulf bodies or waters.

JUDGE PEREZ ARGUED

Judge Perez argued that Louisiana's title was based not only on the equal-footing rule by which it was admitted as a State into the Union by an act of Congress in 1812, and therefore had all of the same sovereignty and property right to the tidelands that the Original Thirteen States bordering on the sea had at the time of the Declaration of Independence in 1776 and the Treaty of Peace with the British Crown in 1783.

He pointed out that the British Crown entered into a treaty, with the United States naming the Thirteen Original States each by name, and dealt with them as independent, sovereign States and gave up to them, the Original States, all right of government, proprietorship or title and territorial jurisdiction previously held by the British Crown.

The United States Supreme Court held in 1842 that when the people of the State of New Jersey, along with the people of each of the other Thirteen Original States, declared their independence and succeeded in their revolution, they, the people of each State, succeeded to the sovereignty of the British Crown and to all right of government and the property which the British Crown formerly held.

The Court also held that under the old common law of England the British Crown owned such public property as the submerged lands and waters of the seas subject to the common use of the people, and that the right of the submerged lands and waters and resources in them passed from the British Crown to the people of the several Thirteen Original States.

That decision has been upheld by the Supreme Court in at least 100 cases since 1842 until the time of the decision in the California case in 1947 by the New Deal Court.

Judge Perez pointed out that in the case of Louisiana, particularly under the French Treaty or Cession in 1803 of the Louisiana Territory to the United States, that it was agreed that the inhabitants of the Louisiana Territory should be admitted as a State under the principles in the Federal Constitution and that the people were to be protected in their liberty, property, and religion which they professed.

He pointed out that in the decision of the United States Supreme Court in 1836, the Court held that the people of Louisiana owned the rivers, the seas, and the shores, and all public places within the boundary of the State, as fixed by the act of Congress extending three leagues from the coast out into the Gulf, and that the United States had never acquired title to such property, but only held it in trust for the inhabitants of Louisiana until the State was created by act of Congress and at that time the State of Louisiana became sovereign, the same as the Original Thirteen States, and then held such public property, including the rivers, seas, and the shores and all public places within the State's boundary for the benefit and common use of the people of the State of Louisiana.

He pointed out that if the legal representatives of the United States could now prevail upon the Supreme Court to render a decree confiscating the property of the people of the State of Louisiana in their united sovereignty, then the United States Government might as well have the Supreme Court render decrees depriving the people of the State of their liberty and of their religion as well as their lives, because the United States was no more entitled to confiscate the property of the people of the State which they held in their united sovereignty under the Constitution than to do any other such unlawful acts, and, if they succeeded in this, they might as well tear up the United States Constitution.

Furthermore, Judge Perez pointed out that the proceeding before the Court was in favor of the United States to confiscate Louisiana's public property without any trial on the merits or the hearing of any evidence, when, as a matter of fact, the Constitution guaranteed a right of trial by jury in all such cases of property title and possession involving $20 or more, while this case involved not only the invaluable sovereignty rights of the people, but admittedly was worth many millions of dollars.

Judge Perez urged the Court to dismiss the motion of the United States for judgment on the pleadings and to grant a right of trial by jury and to fix the case on the merits.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to present an editorial from the Times-Picayune, of New Orleans, La., published after the Supreme Court handed down its decision in the Tidelands case recently, as follows:

TIDELANDS DECISION

The Federal Supreme Court's decision Monday for Federal control of the Louisiana and Texas tidelands does not come as a surprise. When the high court in the California case reversed rulings and upset precedents that prevailed for more than a century and a quarter, many may have hoped, but few believed, that it would limit that sweeping extension of Federal powers to the single State, even though some Government apologists then suggested that California's situation was unlike that of other coastal States and the extension of the grab to the others might never be sought.

Most thoughtful observers recognized the administration maneuver for what it turned out to be: A planned and deliberate drive to expand the Federal powers by contracting and nullifying the powers and rights vested in the several States.

Once the Court of last resort as reorganized under the late President Roosevelt adopted as its own the administration policy enunciated by the Federal suit for California's oil-bearing tidelands, there was small hope that this revolutionary decree would be reversed or substantially modified in later decisions by the same jurists who rendered it. Louisiana and Texas were next attacked, their selection obviously being promoted by the oil riches, actual and potential, of their submerged tidelands. The California decision now is cited by its makers to support the decisions against the two Southern States.

The fight does not end, however, with these decisions. Congress never has authorized the grab. The administration cannot exploit its judicial triumph, as we understand it, save by authorizing enactment by Congress. That will not be secured from the present Congress which, like its predecessor, shows no disposition to sanction this Federal encroachment. To cash in on their current legalistic grab of the tidelands, the "big Government" champions in the Federal bureaus, therefore, will have to await the election of a Congress whose majority favors nullification of State powers and rights and open concentration of all governmental power in the Government at Washington. The election of such a Congress is possible as all things—including the upset of State rights enjoyed since the Nation's beginning—but we canont bring ourselves to believe that such a national calamity is possible in the near future, if ever.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to submit for the RECORD excerpts from an editorial from the Plaquemines Gazette, published on December 31, 1949, as follows:

Excerpts from an editorial was published in Oil newsmagazine. The same issue of the magazine carried the complete statement filed by Judge Perez with the United States Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, on October 5, 1949, on the States' right and title to their tidelands and submerged lands and resources:

"The statement of Leander H. Perez, submitted to the United States Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs,, with respect to the proposed legislation dealing with the tidelands, is a notable exposition of States' rights under the United States Constitution.

"In this issue we publish in full the statement of Leander H. Perez, district attorney of Plaquemines Parish, La., and special counsel of the State of Louisiana in the tidelands case, submitted to the United States Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs with respect to proposed legislation dealing with the tidelands.

"We believe it is the most thorough and comprehensive discussion of this important issue that has been published to date and Mr. Perez is entitled to the thanks of the oil fraternity and the public at large, for his painstaking research and industry which have developed so many significant historical phases of the subject.

"As a matter of fact this document may have a greater influence on the future of our Nation, and the freedom of our people, than may be apparent from a casual or superficial reading. Like some small stone cast in the water, its effect may extend to the farthermost shore, for it is undoubtedly true that the tidelands case may well prove to be the crucial test in the alinement of those who have the courage of their conviction and are willing to take their stand across the march of socialism, statism, and regimentation.

"The battle forces are already engaged—it is not merely a question of States' rights and legal title to the tidelands. It is a question of the survival of our democratic form of government, our American way of life and our free institutions.

"It was gratifying to note at the recent annual meeting of the Interstate Oil Compact Commission, comprised of the governors and representatitves of all oil-producing States of the Union, that the vast preponderance of sentiment favored the rights of the individual States in their fight against the proposed tidelands grab by the Federal Government. In fact, the Commission adopted a strong resolution urging Congress to speedily settle the tidelands issue and confirm the States' rights to the submerged areas.

"It was also significant that Governor Carlson, of Kansas, who was chairman of the Commission, said, notwithstanding the fact that his own State of Kansas has no tidelands, having the interest of his country at heart, has been convinced that the principles involved in this great issue extend beyond the boundaries of the tidelands States and engulf all other States; that a united stand of all freedom-loving people is imperative if the insidious and vitalizing forces of evil are to be halted.

"Said Governor Carlson:

" 'If the several States, the counties, the cities, the towns, and the villages subordinate their constitutional rights to a central power in Washington, we will lose our right to freedom and autonomy at the level of local government. Should we do so, we should thereby abolish the purpose and intention of our Constitution, the last hope of freedom on this earth.

" 'The issues have never been clearer than they are today. * * * Each and every one of us is challenged to fight and protect our Republic at all costs. You, as individuals, must rely on Congress to use its constitutional powers to check the executive branch in its program to subdue the States and nationalize our industries and professions.

" 'In the 14 years that the Interstate Oil Compact Commission has been in existence the individual States have regulated the production of oil and gas under sound conservative principles. There is no need for Washington to enter our field of regulations.'

"Governor Carlson reviewed the progress of the production of oil and gas in America under our competitive system and State conservation laws."

Mr. Speaker, along the same lines, I would include also an editorial from the New Orleans Times-Picayune, respecting the tideland decision, as follows:

LONG FIGHT AHEAD

Following the Federal Supreme Court's newest decision against a century-old and long-unchallenged right of the coastal States, we may expect another drive for a "compromise" settlement. The "big-Government" clique tried the compromise racket last year and failed. Presumably they will use the new decision as a club in an attempt to force formal surrender that might bar later restoration of rights judicially nullified at the moment, but restorable by Congress.

It will be recalled that Congress enacted such a restorative law in 1946, but President Truman vetoed it. Its reenactment now is entirely practicable, as we understand it, with substantial majorities available in both Houses. That action in our judgment should be taken now as a protest by the legislative branch of our Government against the nullification of rights and powers reserved to the several States and their transfer to Washington. Mr. Truman would use his veto power against it, of course—but he could not minimize nor break the force of such a pronouncement by the United States Congress. Unless the power-centralization movement is driven to the point of complete submission by the American people, and total deprivation of the State's constitutional powers, Mr. Truman's successor in the White House, either in 1953 or 1958, in all probability will interpose no veto on a restorative bill passed by Congress and backed beyond question by the American majority.

The struggle thus may be long-drawn, but it is one that needs to be made. Seizure of the tidelands is only a beginning, of course. The precedent thus created could and would be used sooner or later against inland States with equally seizable resources tempting the power-hungry bureaucrats in Washington. That is so well understood that both the conference of State governors and the Nation-wide organization of State attorneys general have declared repeatedly and almost unanimously against the tidelands grab. So long as Congress refuses to sanction it, the Federal grabsters cannot cash in on it. Another desperate effort to coax or frighten the States into surrender by compromise can be and must be turned back if this Republic is to be saved from the totalitarian yoke toward which the "big-Government" crowd is heading.

Mr. Speaker, it is my fervent hope that the Supreme Court may grant the appeal of the States of Louisiana, and Texas; however, if the Supreme Court does not do so, I am certain that if the legislation to settle this question is presented to the Congress that the Congress will vote overwhelmingly not to deprive California, Louisiana, Texas, or any other States of their rightful title and ownership of their tideland.

(Mr. LARCADE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include various statements, newspaper editorials, and other material.)

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

(Mr. PATMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include statements and excerpts, especially testimony before the Committee on Small Business this morning.)

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION INVESTIGATION BY SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege, this morning, as chairman of the Select Committee on Small Business, to open our hearings on the Federal Trade Commission. These hearings are taking place after extensive preliminary investigation. The purpose is to ascertain whether or not the Commission is performing its function of preserving small business and curbing monopoly as effectively as possible.

The hearings and investigation have come about as the result of recommendations made by members of the Small Business - Antimonopoly Conference called together by me last year and which has been meeting in Washington since that time. The Select Committee on Small Business has been pleased to adopt the recommendations.

STATEMENTS OF FIRST WITNESSES

Commissioner John Carson, who was designated by the Commission as liaison officer with the committee in this investigation, was invited to deliver a preliminary statement following my opening statement. With the permission of the Members of the House I am including the full text of his statement, as well as my own, as part of my extended remarks. You will note that Commissioner Carson pledges the 100 percent cooperation of the Commission in our investigation, and I know he means what he says. Moreover, he serves notice that no witness who has, or may have, a case before the Commission need fear any recrimination by reason of testifying.

Our first witness was Mr. A. J. Hayes, international president of the International Association of Machinists. I am including the full text of his statement in my extended remarks. Mr. Hayes was the member of the Small Business-Antimonopoly Conference who first proposed the Federal Trade Commission investigation. A copy of his original proposal also appears in my extended remarks.

You will note that Mr. Hayes makes quite a point, in his statement, as to the interest of his union in small business:

At present—

He states—

the International Association of Machinists has some 12,000 separate contracts with employers, the bulk of which are with small firms.

He goes on to say:

It is simply foolish to charge that labor is slugging the free-enterprise system to death in America.

Our second witness was Mr. Watson Rogers, president of the National Food Brokers Association, and also a member of the Small Business Antimonopoly Conference. He called for stricter enforcement by the Federal Trade Commission of its cease-and-desist orders, with an increase in its compliance staff, if necessary. He also urged that the Commission recommend more cases to the Department of Justice for criminal prosecution, including Robinson-Patman Act price-discrimination cases. He asked for stricter enforcement of the brokerage provisions in the law. With the leave of the Members of the House, I am also including the full text of his statement in my extended remarks.

STATEMENT OF WRIGHT PATMAN, MEMBER OF CONGRESS, CHAIRMAN, SELECT COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS—FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION HEARINGS, JUNE 26, 1950

Last year, I invited the representatives of a group of Nation-wide organizations to a conference on an "affirmative aid to small business" program. These representatives, whose names and organizations will appear in this RECORD, formed a loosely knit organization adopting the name Small Business-Antimonopoly Conference. These organizations represent a cross section of fine Americans who are interested in the preservation of a free, competitive market place in which the consumer dollar may be expended to the best advantage.

Members of this group, I believe, during the course of their testimony in these hearings, will indicate they are strong friends of small business and are thoroughly conversant with the necessity of combating the forces of monopoly in order to preserve and strengthen a healthy American economy. These organizations include bona fide small-business organizations—farm organizations, labor organizations, and consumer organizations. The conference group has expressed the view that strengthening of the agencies entrusted with the enforcement of our antitrust laws would be one of the most effective aids to small business and would be invaluable to consumers. With this thought in mind, Mr. A. J. Hayes, international president of the International Association of Machinists, who will be our first witness, proposed an investigation of the Federal Trade Commission. This suggestion was amended to include the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice. The Small Business Committee has sponsored these proposals as set forth in the progress report, first session, a unanimous committee report, and the hearings on which we are about to embark today are the beginning of a record which we hope will be in the public interest as well as beneficial to the Commission and those with whom the Commission deals. The investigation of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice is presently under way.

At this point, I desire to refer to the wholehearted cooperation which the Commission has given the committee and particularly to refer to the splendid cooperation of Commissioner Carson, who was officially designated by the Commission to confer with the committee on all matters pertaining to the investigation. Commissioner Carson's help has been invaluable and constructive, and he and other members of the Commission I know will welcome the opportunity later in these hearings to present their viewpoint. We expect to invite and to hear all of the Commissioners at an appropriate time during the course of the hearings.

It is the committee's expectation and desire that, as a result of this investigation and these hearings, the Federal Trade Commission will be strengthened and will become a more effective agency in the enforcement and administration of our antitrust laws.

Mr. Hayes, in his original proposal, propounded six questions to be asked the Federal Trade Commission. The answers were made public at the time they were received. These answers have been widely distributed, and much study and consideration has been given to them. This will be brought out during the hearings.

The scope of this investigation can be measured by the scope of the acts administered by the Commission. A mere mention of them is revealing. They include the following:

1. Federal Trade Commission Act and the Wheeler-Lea Act amendment.
2. The Clayton Act and the Robinson-Patman Act amendment.
3. Wool Products Labeling Act.
4. Webb-Pomerene Export Act.

To administer these laws and administrative procedures, there are the various bureaus and divisions of the Commission, all of which will be carefully examined in this investigation.

Apart from this, there will be our special inquiry into the relations between the Commission and the Department of Justice. We shall also make inquiry as to the extent to which the Commission requests Justice to bring authorized injunction and mandamus proceedings, as well as criminal proceedings, including those authorized under section 3 of the Robinson-Patman Act.

The great importance of small business in the American economy lies in the fact that it is to small business that the Nation must look to maintain competition. Large business units, representing a merger of formerly competing plants, have restricted competition; and it is primarily through the efforts of the remaining independents that competition is, and must be, maintained.

Since it is to small business, in the main, that we must look for maintaining competition, we must give careful consideration to measures which will permit independents to survive on the basis of their productive efficiency. The Federal Trade Commission, Clayton, and Robinson-Patman Acts were all designed for this purpose. How effective have they been? What suggestions do you representatives have for strengthening them?

Since our policy of maintaining competition rests largely on the shoulders of small business, we should also like to learn about the current business practices which injure, restrict, and hamper small business. We should like to learn, in particular, about the extent to which small business suffers (1) from the refusal of large producers controlling major sources of supply to sell freely to dealers and fabricators who offer cash payment, (2) from the exercise of geographic and quantity price discriminations by large, monopolistic enterprises, and (3) from the policy of large concerns in buying up small and medium-sized competitors who seek to get established by being competitive on price and quality.

This is a friendly investigation, a constructive investigation, an objective investigation, and it is wholly designed to build up the Commission. This thought also underlies our investigation of the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice.

Gentleman, we welcome you, the representatives of small business, as well as their friends—the farm, labor, and consumer groups—and the Federal Trade Commission to these hearings as main pillars for maintaining our national policy of competition.

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN CARSON, COMMISSIONER, FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, JUNE 26, 1950

My name is John Carson. I am a member of the Federal Trade Commission. When this committee decided to investigate the Commission, I was named by the Commission to act as a liaison for the Commission and to make certain that the Commission would give to the utmost in its cooperation with the committee.

I understand that I was invited this morning for the purpose of establishing in the record the desire of the Commission and our determination to cooperate with the committee. I understand that a member of the Commission, and perhaps each member will be called later to testify, and I assure you that the Commission will be grateful for that opportunity.

Representatives of your committee have been working in the Commission's building. I have talked with them, whenever they desired to talk with me. I am sure they will
